The obnoxious one states his views on pugilism

By RUSS WHINNEM
Collegian Staff

Late last week Howard Cosell, the man we love to hate, announced that he was withdrawing from the boxing world because he had become enraged at, in his eyes, the farce the sport had become.

Immediately after making his decision, big H called the Collegian, (collect), and requested that he be allowed to tell his story in his own words. A meeting was arranged and here are the contents of that very special interview.

Collegian: First off, Howard, is it official? Are you through with professional boxing?

Cosell: Absolutely Russ. The professional boxing game, in its present state, has become ludicrous potpourri of mismatches and travesties. Ray "BOOM BOOM" Mancini-Duk Kee Kim. TRAGEDY! Larry Holmes-Tex Cobb. Ridiculous!

And realizing that the networks, of which ABC is unscrupulously a part, continue to promote and broadcast these buffoons for the simple reason of drawing in the cash benefits, made me reevaluate why this reporter was still a part of such a business. Furthermore —

Collegian: Uh Howard, that's fine. Let me ask you this. In denouncing professional boxing you have also taken a shot at your own network, ABC. Don't you feel that you might be putting the rest of your career in hot water by doing so?

Cosell: Preposterous! I have only removed myself from an ugly situation. I still have Monday Night Football and baseball, not to mention my own show, Sports Beat. ABC can't pressure me. What would Dandy Don and the Giffer do without my uncontested knowledge of the players, on and off the battle fields? The same goes for Keith Jackson and Ueker. They'd be lost without me. Guys like Reggie and George aren't going to talk to those lightweights.

Collegian: Howard, comments have flown that your candor on boxing was uncalled for because it was the sport which made you what you are. How do you respond to this?

Cosell: Unbelievable! That's what I say to such unsurly charges. The ever consuming fact of the situation is that I made boxing!

Where would the Ali-Frazier legend be if not for my infallible commentary?" "The Thrilla in Manilla!" "The Brawl in Montreal!" I made these fights and therefore propelled the accompanying athletes to their otherwise inconceivable stardom.

Collegian: Uh Howard, isn't that a bit overdoing it?

Cosell: Let me say this, Russ. Without me, those demi-gods of our sports heritage would be nothing more than sleazy, low paid club fighters!

At that moment a surprise guest stormed into the room. The intruder was none other than the legend of boxing himself, Muhammad Ali. Ali, looking a little plump, immediately interrupted.

Ali: Hey fool. What do you think your doing runnin' off at the mouth like that. Hugh, chump? What are you saying that you made me? I let you interview me, didn't I? Without me, you're just another loudmouth! I was, and still am, the Greatest. Ain't nobody I can't whip, and that includes your butt Cosell! Now remember this.

Float like a butterfly, Sting like a bee
You keep talkin' like that You'll get a beatin' from me!

Cosell: Now just wait a minute, Muhammad. An immoral malevolent like yourself has no cause to —

Just then, the interview abruptly ended when Ali, apparently taking offense to Cosell's last comment, stomped on Howard's tongue. Cosell remained on the floor being attended to while Ali left the sports desk chanting softly, "I want you Larry Holmes. I want you....."

The Class of 1979; here they are in 1983

By GREG WELLS
Collegian Correspondent

They came from places like Harrisonburg, VA., Lebanon, PA., and St. Louis, MO. They came to dominate college basketball. They were the class of 1979. Never has such a collection of talented centers came into college simultaneously.

If Ralph Simpson isn't a household word by now he will be by the end of the year. At 7'4", Sampson has dominated the college game for three years. Comparisons to Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and Wilt Chamberlin, enter the mind just watching Sampson during warmups.

Each year Sampson's game has improved, yet the critics still claim he can't win the big one. When Terry Holland recruited Sampson for Virginia he seemed assured of at least one NCAA championship. The closest the Cavaliers have come is a semi-final loss to North Carolina in 1981. Last year, without point guard Othell Wilson, Virginia lost to Alabama Birmingham in Birmingham. Sampson, now a senior, has passed up several million NBA dollars to once again pursue the elusive title.

It was going to be a perfect battle of the titons. Sampson and Virginia against the Kentucky Wildcats and superstar Sam Bowie. Not since Marvin Webster and Robert Parrish entered college have two such talented seven footers come into college at the same time. Speculation was that they'd meet in the final four once or twice. It was a safe assumption, but for Sam Bowie it was not to be. If his freshman and sophmore years were any indication, then Bowie had the ability to be every bit as good as Sampson.

At 7'1" Bowie has the quickness to play power forward. Or at least he used to. Just before the start of last season Bowie developed a stress fracture on his left shin. Although it's no larger than a thumb nail, it was enough to bench the superstar for the season, and maybe for his career.

After several months, the shin was thought to be healed and Bowie was allowed to return to action. Although he appeared to be his same old self the swelling never went away. Finally, surgery was performed to try and correct what nature couldn't. Bowie's leg remains in a cast and if he plays at all this year it won't be before February. He's become philosophical about the layoff, recognizing that there is life without basketball and is pursuing a career in communications. Without Bowie, Kentucky figures to be an also ran, with him they could win a championship.

The third superstar in the class of '79 is the pride of St. Louis, Steve Stipanovich. Hailed as the savior of Missouri basketball, Tiger fans figured their team would dominate the Big Eight, which is about on par with dominating the Atlantic Ten. The problem was that Stipanovich wasn't ready to dominate anyone.

He got the points his first year, but was dominated on the boards and had real problems on defense. Stipo's sophmore season was marked by turmoil and trouble. After a gun shot accident in which he shot himself, and then made a story of a masked man breaking in and shooting him, Stipanovich wasn't the same player. Opposing fans taunted him and he had obvious concentration problems. Last year, however, Stipo rebounded to put together a decent season averaging 11.6 points and 8.0 rebounds. One major difference between Sampson and Stipanovich is that while Sampson has had quite a bit of personal success Stipanovich has had more team success. Missouri was 27-4 last year and spent some time at number one, an unusual place for a Big Eight team. This year, however, conference player of the year Ricky Frazier is gone and there will be more pressure on Stipo, this time he should be ready.

Although these three are clearly at the head of the class of '79, there are quite a few big men right behind. Minnesota's Randy Braer is the top center in the Big Ten. Kansas City's Lasalle Thompson was the leading rebounder in the country last year, before going hardship.

It's one of the rarest commodities of all, the talented big man. The class of '79 will long be remembered for it's unprecedented production.

Indians scalp winning team in winter meetings

By SCOTT HOOD
Collegian Staff

Fifty years from now history books will tell the tale of the miraculous rise of the Indians in the Winter of 1982, when after countless years of losing teams, miniscule fan support, and mismanagement, the men from Cleveland went on the warpath, declaring battle on the American league.

The books shall say that the uprising began in Honolulu, Hawaii at the baseball winter meetings, when the Indians ambushed the camp of the Philadelphia Phillies and gathered in the two best prospects in the Phillie farm system, plus the starting second baseman and starting rightfielder for the Phillies. The Indians suffered the loss of one man, and he was playing out ol position while a member of the Tribe.

OK folks, for all of you who cracked your share of Cleveland jokes and made fun of the fact that the Cleveland Indians averaged 10,000 fans in a 80,000 seat stadium, well, now is the time to say you're sorry, because in one bold stroke the Indians traded their way to respectability in the American League East. In the blockbuster trade of the winter meetings, (Sorry Red Sox and A's) Cleveland sent Von Hayes, a fine young outfielder, to the Phillies in return for five players.

Those traded to Cleveland include Manny Trillo, a slick fielding second baseman, rightfielder George Vukovich, catcher Jerry Willard, and two outstanding prospects, pitcher Jay Baller and shortstop Julio France.

Trillo broke the record for most consecutive errorless games by a second baseman this past season, France was considered the best prospect in the American Association (.315, 21 HRs, 33 stolen bases), and Baller was considered the best pitching prospect in Double-A (9-8, 2.68 ERA, 155 strikeouts in 151 innings). Reports from Venezuela have him blowing the league apart with his 95 m.p.h. fastball and one Houston scout called him the best young pitcher he's seen in three years.

With Franco and Trillo to go along with Toby Harrah and Andre Thorton, the Indians are solid in the infield. Throw in Miguel Dilone, Rick Manning, and Vukovich to roam the outfield, and Chris Bando at catcher and you have the recipe for a very interesting team, not to mention a winning one. It certainly looks like the long-suffering fans in Cleveland will finally have something to cheer about.

Of course, the Indian-Phillie deal was not the only activity of the meetings. All informed baseball fans know of the Carney Lansford- Tony Armas trade between the Red Sox and A's by now.

With Armas in the fold, the Bosox now possess the best outfield in baseball in Jim Rice, Dwight Evans, and Mr. Armas, who certainly has the potential to hit 40 or more home runs in 1983. Lansford will help solidify a shaky Oakland infield and provide the weakest hitting team in the American League last season with an offensive boost.

The Yankees, of course, were not bystanders to all the action. George Steinbrenner signed free agents Don Baylor and Steve Kemp to multi-million dollar contracts and traded Dave Collins, a huge disappointment in 1982, to the Toronto Blue Jays. Baylor will take over at either first base or designated hitter.

Cleveland's Von Hayes will bring his bat and glove to the Phillies training camp next year.

Hoopsters hope to sacrifice Bentley

Twas three days before finals and all through the Cage
The fans were all humming about the fade of the Rage
The team was much better or so they'd been told the acclamations were high and the predictions were bold
But, the start had been shaky with zero wins and loses four True, the games had been fun but the fans wanted more
They had expected a gold and come up with a tin twas a time for a change
twas a time for a win
And who better than Bentley to feel the wrath of UMass chock up a win, thrill the fans
just plain kick Bentley's ass
Then the coach and his troops can ride into the night
Yelling, "We've finally won one
Now we'll be alright!"

"U-Mass" boom boom "U-Mass" boom boom, the rhythmic chant will most probably start in the vicinity of the 40-Minute Gang somewhere just after 7:20 p.m. At 7:22 p.m. (on the nose, of course) the University of Massachusetts Minuteman basketball team will take the floor and the sound by then should be deafening.

The Minutemen have gotten off to an 0-4 start, a start that many people felt would be 3-1 or even 4-0. But, head coach Tom McLaughlin hasn't given up on his young troops, and he's banking on the fact that UMass basketball fans will be just as supportive tonight against 5-2 Bentley College as they were when Harvard slipped by the Minutemen in the UMass home opener.

"If we were 0-4 and I didn't think we could get any better I'd be ready to shoot myself," said McLaughlin following yesterday's practice, "and I'm not ready to shoot myself."

McLaughlin is at a must produce point now. the Minutemen have played progressively better as the young season has worn on. Against the University of Connecticut, the team cut substantially into a 23-point deficit before eventually succumbing to the Huskies.

Last Saturday, against Davidson College in Davidson, North Carolina, the Minutemen played "their best game of the year," according to McLaughlin.

"We totally outplayed them. We totally outshot them," said McLaughlin. "But, the officials were just not gonna let us beat Davidson."

With UMass putting together three solid periods of basketball in a row, the time is ripe for Bentley, a Division III school, to be a sacrificial lamb for both the hungry Minutemen and their even hungrier fans.

Realistically, if the home team is able to put everything together on the court, UMass should be able to put an easy end to what now amounts to a legitimate losing streak. (It's spelled L-O-S-I-N-G but it's not easy to say.)

To put everything together would require a couple of things, not the least of which is maintaining intensity for the full duration (40 minutes just like the Gang) of the contest.

Donald Russell has returned to the form that made him an All-Rookie team selection last year. He has been the best free throw shooter on the team and has improved his scoring average greatly since the outset of the season.

Other keys to a Bentley victory should be the re-emergence of Horace Neysmith as a dominant board pounder (Person who gets rebounds as listed in the unabridged basketball dictionary.) and the steady play of the rejuvinated Edwin Green, this year's best surprise. (Look for at least two Green dunks tonight.)

Still, the most important aspect of tonight's game may be the pre-game chant from the fans as the team readies itself to take the Cage floor. They know that the fans were let down by the Harvard game and now must pensively wait to see whether everyone has quit on them or not.

"I think we let the student body down in the Harvard game," said McLaughlin. "But, I also think that for a young team, it's crucial that the student body believes in them."

And belief in the team can be expressed in one simple word that you hear all over campus day in and day out, only this time around it should be a little louder than usual.

"U-Mass" boom boom "U-Mass" boom boom. All we need now is someone with a drum for the boom boom part.

Game time is at 7:30 p.m.

Women swimmers sink Clark; still unbeaten

By BOB BROCK
Collegian Staff

WORCESTER — The University of Massachusetts Women's Swim team churned out another victory Saturday as they trounced Clark University, 83-52. With the win, the UMass swimmers remained undefeated at 5-0.

Despite the somewhat easy 31-point margin of victory, the UM swimmers did have problems going into the meet. Most notably, injury problems.

"We did have some injuries, so we were not at full strength, but fortunately we did get some good swims out of people," admitted coach Valerie Turtle.

Some of these swimmers were sophomore Nancy Connolly, who won the 100 butterfly in 1:07.85, and Anne Whitlock who took the 100 individual medley in 1:07.60. Co-captain Caroline Freitas also grabbed a first place as she won the 200 individual medley in her season's best time, 2:24.58.

Three UMass swimmers were double winners against Clark. Jenn Nicolai won the 500 freestyle in 5:37.38 and the 50 butterfly in 28.49. Both times qualified her for the New England championships, to be held after the dual meet season. Connie Anderson took both the 100 and 200 yd. freestyles, touching the pad in 57.13 and 2:09.43, respectively.

Senior diver Gina Perrone took both the 1 meter and 3 meter diving events, as she racked up 202.40 points on the low board and 194.35 points on the high board. Also, for the first time during a meet, Perrone performed a forward two and a half somersault, a dive she had been working on for quite some time during practice. She may not use it regularly during meets.

Besides getting the victory and remaining undefeated, Coach Turtle had other reasons to be happy. UMass swimmers qualified in nine more events for the post-season championships and many swimmers registered their best times of the season. In some cases, like Anne Boess and Lori McCloskey they registered the best times of their careers. Boess swam a 2:32.06 in the 200 IM and McCloskey turned in a 26.74 in the 50 freestyle.

The Minutewomen are now idle until they host Amherst College on January 19, but they will still be kept busy over the intersession. Starting on January 3rd they will be training in double sessions for the course of the break. In addition to the Amherst meet, the UMass swimmers will be facing Southern Conn. on the 22nd, Boston College at home on the 25th, and then will travel to Boston to take on Northeastern on Saturday, January 29.

Fall intramural season concludes this week

By TONY BETROS
Collegian Staff

As the fall semester comes to an abrupt end, the intramural sports are all rounding out their seasons. Fall intramural sports include volleyball, ice hockey, raquetball, and men's basketball.

Volleyball finals were last Thursday, and the results are surprising. Last year's men's champions, the Patriotas, were ousted in the semi-finals. Nylon 4-2, undefeated in the regular season, captured the volleyball championship, defeating Captain Crunch, 15-10, 15-3.

The favored Patriotas also lost in co-rec play, this time in the quarterfinals. The Achians overcame a disastrous first game and came back to defeat the EMG's, 2-15, 15-5, 15-6. The Patriotas did not come away empty-handed, as they did emerge victorious in the women's category, defeating the Beepers 15-3, 15-6.

Raquetball will be concluded on Wednesday, with the men's and women's each sporting an undefeated player. The men's is Andrew Giamino and the women's is Ruth Berggren. Both are waiting for the losers bracket to conclude so they can play for the championship.

Ice hockey finals were played last Sunday, and What the Puck finished off their undefeated season with an 8-4 victory over the Nads. The 14-0 champs, led by manager John Fernberg, finished off a superb season with goalie Les Helman leading the way. The Nads finished off the season at 9-3.

In other intramural notes: a reminder that the men's one on one basketball championship will be held tonight at halftime at the UMass-Bentley game. Sean McGee and Al Powell are the contestants.

Also, intramural volleyball forfeit fees are in and can be picked up in the office by Wednesday. Officials are needed desperately! They will be paid ($3.40 per hour — better than the DC). Hockey teams are still being taken for next semester.

That's about it from the intramural sports at UMass. So, until next semester — Merry Christmas and Happy New Year (I got to start practicing for next semester — How was your holiday? Did you have a good intersession? Didja get a good cum?).

A place to learn through the arts

By PAM MADNICK
Collegian Staff

The Hampden Student Center, located in the Southwest Resdential Area, is the largest residentially based college arts center in the country featuring a theatre, craft shop and art gallery.

The center's concept was originally conceived by Dr. Fredrick Tillis, former Provost of UMass' Performing Arts Division, William Field, Dean of Students, John Hunt, Master Director, Robert Antil, the Southwest Assembly, and the UMass Art Department.

Southwest without an activities center? "It was a design defect we were looking to cover. We were fortunately allowed use of the Hampden area," said Bob Antil, Director of the Hampden Student Center.

"Southwest needed a cultural/activities/arts center that was them, for their identity," William Field, Dean of Students explained.

In the late Seventies, UMass Food Services decided they only needed two dining commons in Southwest, not three. At that time, the Master Director, John Hunt, made arrangements with Food Services to use portions of the third, smaller dining common, Hampden, as a student center. It would eventually house a craft shop, gallery and theatre.

As soon as the funding was appropriated, Bob Antil was hired as director of the center and was charged with the responsibility of building "a high-energy operation" with work-study students doing most of the footwork.

"Students in the staff were interested in taking the initiative to build an arts program. They wanted to do it. It wasn't imposed on them," Field said.

The Hampden Student Center has two basic components: the educational component and the production component.

The educational component uses the New School approach. By making use of working professionals in the community, students are taught things that they cannot usually find in their academic departments. Some of the courses offered through the Southwest Residential College are: Music in African Life, Live Arts, Introduction to Third World Theatre: History and Production, and Video Communications, as well as a number of dance courses.

"Knowing the Five College Area is rich in resources, we're able to tap from that," Antil said.

The second and equally important component is production, where students get "hands-on" experience in a number of diverse fields. Approximately 40 work-study undergraduates and several graduates on assistantships are employed. Hiring students allows Hampden flexibility, while keeping operating costs down. Through the production component, a number of students and professional programs have been produced in the theatre and gallery spaces.

Roberta Uno-Thelwell, founder of the Third World Theatre Series, said, "We started out Third World Theatre Series there in 1979 because it was the one free-zone, liberated territory on campus, where students could put their ideas to work without being under the auspices of the Theatre Department or any other department, for that matter. We found the Hampden program was able to do pieces on Third Wrold people. More than that, they were really supportive, technically and morally."

Olivia Ilano, who performed with her dance ensemble in Hampden in late October, said, "The space is small enough so you can have an audience that you can make a connection with. It accomodates theatre, dance, workshops, anything."

Robert Walker, a junior theatre major, said, "Hampden is an excellent opportunity for any student interested in the theatre. It's an excellent experience because you get to learn how to use everything to its fullest extent."

The mystery of Middletown

PBS's controversial episode screened at Hampshire

By ANDREW GORDON

The Public Broadcasting System's recent Middletown series stirred and aroused more emotions than anyone could ever have expected. The idea was to capture typical American life through six major divisions — family, religion, politics, employment, marriage and education — in the typical town of Muncie, Indiana. Six groups of filmmakers were chosen and after almost a year and a half of intensive filming and editing, six segments were complete. But only five segments were broadcast. What happened to the last episode created a controversy which has shown no sign of dying down.

It started several years ago when Dwight Hoover, a professor at Ball State University in Muncie, conceived the idea of a film series centering around different aspects of life in the town; an update of the famous 1929 book, Middletown: A Study in American Culture by Robert and Helen Lynd. Filmmaker Peter Davis picked up on the idea and became executive producer when PBS agreed to provide funds for the project. Although Davis directed such acclaimed documentaries as The Selling of the Pentagon and Hearts and Minds, he decided this time to relinquish directorial chores. The crews chosen were varied. Among others, Richard Leacock was signed to direct an episode.

One crew did not seem to belong with the other larger, better-known crews. That was the team of Joel Demott (a woman) and Jeff Kreines. The two moved into the town early in 1980 and began production at Southside High School. While other directors, working simultaneously on their own respective films, had full film and sound crews, Demott and Kreines shot and edited their film alone.

Lynn Massie, Seventeen's main character

But their resulting film, titled Seventeen, was not what anyone had anticipated. Not PBS. Not Davis. Not the town. And not the corporations who were helping to fund the project (most notably Xerox, who kicked in $600,000 of the project's 2.8 million dollar budget). Changes were requested; then demanded.

But Demott and Kreines refused.

At Hampshire College several weeks ago, the two filmmakers spoke to a crowd of about 300 and screened a print of the film. It wasn't hard to see what caused the furor. While everyone had expected to see the traditional images of high school — proms, basketball games, graduation — Seventeen depicts high school's other realities: pot smoking, drinking, cursing and sexual activity. This is a reality of high school which many would like not to see. It is, to an extent, a challenge to the "ideal" of American life. A view the moralistic mentality refuse to believe exists.

The film begins in a cooking class. Several students wisecrack and curse at a teacher behind her back. It is in this class that we meet Lynn Massie, a high school junior. "We filmed in the cooking class for several weeks before we even decided on Lynn. But she intrigued us," Kreines said. Funny, spunky and independent, Lynn becomes the focus of the film. We follow her in school-life, homelife and social life. Dates with her boyfriend John, a tall, black basketball player, was another aspect of the film which unsettled people (a long kissing scene was one of the demanded cuts).

In an informal question period following the screening, Demott and Kreines candidly denounced the actions of everyone in general and PBS in particular. "They have a new president (Larry Grossman) who's a real twit," Demott said. "They showed the film to Xerox. . . that's illegal, you're not allowed to pre-screen a public show for a corporate sponsor." Many things were done that were unethical, if not illegal, and Peter Davis let them happen. Demott painted an unflattering picture of Davis and became visibly emotional as she recalled his actions. "He had virtually nothing to do with any of the films, and he's trying to get all the credit. . . He goes on television and David Letterman will ask him how he got all that great footage and he'll answer "It took a lot of hard work and long hours, and a lot of trust" — you think he's talking about himself, but he's not. He didn't get that footage, we did."

Originally, PBS asked for only one cut, a four and a half minute vignette in which a boy recalls his sexual exploits. Davis agreed to the cut. "He had no authority to do that," Kreines added.

Why were Demott and Kreines chosen for the project in the first place? "We were cheap," she said, "and they liked our earlier work." The pair did all their filming with portable 16mm cameras and ultra-miniaturized Nagra sound recorders. "They were invented by the C.I.A.," she laughed.

Each of them acts as a separate unit. One will film a classroom while the other will be off shooting, say, the principal. Their method of filmmaking is to get into the action; to get close when the instinct is to keep a distance. "Most documentary filmmakers become non-participant spectators and are treated as such. We are active participants."

This is where I begin to have problems, however. The purpose of documentary is, of course, to capture something as it really exists in the world. But how can you actually record daily life on film? The very presence of crew and camera is in fact an alteration of what is trying to be captured. Active or not, I don't believe a camera can honestly record the everyday life of a teenager; and an active camera less so. Documentary must be viewed as entertainment, not truth.

While I have a tremendous amount of respect for the filmmakers and sympathize with the frustrations of their hapless hard work, viewing the movie as I would any other, I see problems with it. More than anything else, a film must have interesting and likeable characters to identify with. The characters in Seventeen are mildly interesting, but I certainly didn't like them. This is, of course, a completely subjective assessment; response to the film was overwhelmingly positive and several women I spoke with said they loved and identified with Lynn, but I found myself laughing at the characters, which I don't think was ever the intention of Demott and Kreines.

Other characters surface: Lynn's strong-willed mother Sherrie, her beer-bellied father, her lanky, bragging brother Buck and her friends and friends of her boyfriend. With the exception of this last group, no one seems to have a clue; their priorities seem to be in all the wrong places. The black characters in the film seem to understand this. Something in their eyes lets you know they're aware that Lynn is a kook. Interestingly, the white characters are drawn to the camera, they perform for it, while the black characters visibly avoid it.

Despite it's flaws, the film does have some beautiful and touching scenes — Buck crying over a friend's death, a schoolmate beaming over his newborn child — as well as some genuinely funny sequences — Lynn's father on a drunken fishing trip, the "offensive" sex talk. For any of it's ills, the film has a right to be shown. And PBS had a responsibility to show it. Maybe Seventeen will get a second chance.

Since Hampden Theatre is managed and taken care of by students, dance and theatre companies can come in an do low-budget shows which students can attend at a very reasonable cost. Many are even free.

The Hampden Craft Shop is the second largest craft shop on campus, second only to the Student Union Craft Shop. In the past, the Craft Shop has held major fairs in the spring and many exhibitions of student work.

"The Craft Shop is an outlet for creative needs and construction that can only be met in a fixed facility," said Robert Antil.

Antil remarked that student workers are willing to teach other students about a particular craft's history, where it originated, and what its role is in the arts community today. Among the crafts offered at the shop are ceramics, silkscreen, silver jewelry, leather, stained glass, and Egyptian paste.

Craft shop co-ordinator Linda Chaney is a graduate student studying painting. She said she hoped to add copper enameling, gold jewelry and "lost-wax" casting in silver in the near future.

"I make changes according to what I feel the students want in here. I do surveys to see what students want."

We like to consider it serves a center for the avant-garde," said Antil. Not only does the gallery support fixed pieces, but "participatory art" which gives the artist a chance to show or [illegible]

Graduate student Steve Oakley oversees the Hampden Gallery. He works along with a staff of three undergraduate "gallery sitters" in installing, maintaining and monitoring exhibits.

The gallery offers reknowned artists a place to show their work in exchange for a small honorarium to cover travel expenses, promotion and an opening reception.

Because a sacrifice is involved on the artist's part, Oakley said, "they have to want to do it."

The benefits for the artist and community are tremendous. The artist is able to show his work in a non-pressured setting, where he does not have to worry about selling his work. For students, the gallery is a place to go and see some of the country's top avant-garde art.

On expanding the residential arts program, Dr. Tillis, now director of the Fine Arts Center, said, "Each area has a residential arts program, it just happens that in Southwest the performing space improved and the gallery is more carved out."

"It's a natural thing to have on a university campus. My hope is to develop fixed facilities in all the areas. It would involve capital expediture to erect something," said Tillis.

Hampden Student Center provides students with an educational, entertaining environment which might someday be expanded to the other four residential areas.

Busboys challenge pop market

By DAVID CHEVAN

One nice thing about this area is that several local clubs, aware of the available college crowds, take occasional risks and book up-and-coming national acts. This semester, L.A.'s Busboys graced the valley with a high energy show that left the crowd begging for more. One thing is clear, for a band which initially appeared upon the scene as a gimmick, this group is to be taken seriously.

The Busboys first appeared upon the scene a couple of years ago with their debut album, Minimum Wage Rock and Roll. Although it received some airplay, the album never took off and that was the last I expected to hear of the band. Their disappearance was a disappointment, for they appeared to be a high class novelty act with a very clever gimmick. . . the Busboys play white-format music, but are black. This semester's performance revealed that they have not abandoned the gimmick, but have instead expanded their material beyond a black vs. white vision to include economic theory (the welfare state) and also several numbers with heavy political overtones.

"When you travel across the country in a little bus, it's great to hear people clapping for you. . ."

This is not to say the band isn't fun, because they had the predominantly white crowd dancing and moving through every song of the night. "When you travel across the country in a little bus, its great to hear people clapping for you like this," and that's exactly how singer/keyboard player Brian O'Neal thanked the audience

The Busboys are Brian O'Neal, piano; michael Jones, synthesizer; Victor Johnson, guitar; Kevin O'Neal, bass; Steve Felix, drums; and Gus Loundermon, who "sings and dances around." Other than Steve Felix, all the Busboys share in the singing duties, creating some very pretty five-part harmonies. Before and after the show I spoke with Kevin and Brian O'Neal, they gave me a small picture of the band, its direction and goals. One thing I was quickly impressed with was the clarity and intelligence behind each idea put forth by the band.

After a short discussion during which Brian lambasted the Nail's sound system and sound crew, we got down to the real meat of the interview. Brian and Kevin are both extremely aware of their position as black musicians in a predominately white market. The band satirizes the stereotyped white image of black musicians without completely insulting the audience. "We're not just poking fun at whites for the stereotype, but also blacks for the need to face up to humorous realities." Brian felt the image of the band is one that will instill in its audience a sense of pride and appreciation for the black contribution to American music. Kevin noted that this appreciation amongst blacks is starting to increase. When the band first became the Busboys, the audiences were almost completely white. But lately the racial mix is increasing.

The Busboys are touring to promote their new album, American Workers, and will soon be joining Linda Ronstadt during her upcoming North American tour. Other upcoming projects for the band include a recently released Budweiser commercial, an appearance on Saturday Night Live sometime in December and a spot in the new movie starring Nick Nolte and Eddie Murphy, 48 Hours. Brian also gave a Collegian exclusive; in coordination with the movie 48 Hours, Arista plans to release a dance LP which will have "American Workers and a new song, "Don't You Know," on it. All this adds up to a great deal of self-promotion by the band. "We do get some support from Arista, but we're currently operating at a loss," laughed Brian, "but you know the whole American thing is how you operate at a loss and do it with sytle." It seemed a bit obvious to me that Arista was giving the band little support at all, but Kevin was quick to defend the company. "Arista is in a funny position; they're working with a totally new product for which there currently exists no developed market. Radio stations are unsure how to place us into their format, so we will have to hammer a place for us in the market on our own."

It looks as though the Busboys do have a challenge ahead of them. For all the talk of interacial harmony in the recording industry, racism still crops up now and again. As a black band playing white music, the Busboys may help to redefine how we categorize the sounds we listen to. Meanwhile, the group faces a huge color obstacle, their music is as good as any other on the market today, and anyone who saw the show Saturday night will agree that they put on a real high class performance. The band agrees that developing their market will take time, but they plan to keep pushing. As Brian put it, "It may not happen with our current album, but maybe by our third or fourth LP I'll be able to sit back for a minute and finally say, I have made it."

Copeland's modern blues revival

By PHILLIP PLANTE
CHARLIE SENNOTT and BEN TERRALL

In his own original way Johnny Copeland is fast becoming one of today's major contemporary bluesmen. Though left behind in the blues revival of the sixties, Copeland is emerging as a representative of a newer breed of bluesmen.

Born in Homer, Louisiana, Copeland's family later moved to Houston, Texas, where he fell under the influence of T-Bone Walker, one of the greatest Texas Bluesmen and one of the first to use electric guitar. In Houston, Copeland earned rent as a prize-fighter while playing the bar circuit in his spare time.

In recent times Copeland has become a major Texas bluesman winning the John C. Handy blues musician award and cutting two well-received albums, Copeland Special, (featuring Arthur Blythe on alto sax) and Home is Where I put my Hat. Copeland has also recently returned from a 10 nation tour of Africa.

Johnny Copeland: "When you're happy doing something and you're doing a good job and you're happy doing it, you're just going to keep coming at 'm till they do accept it. There's been a change of attitude, and the music has gone through changes. One time people like this, and then they like that, but essentially the music never changes, just what they call it. The roots of it have always been the blues.

Other Voice: "What specifically would you attribute the blues' most recent popularity to? Today it seems in this area at least, that more and more people are going to blues concerts, and I would assume buying blues records also. Have you noticed this and if you have, what do you think is causing it?

J.C.: "Right now there's no fad that the people can turn to, so they have to go back to the roots. It ain't hip to be disco anymore so there's nothing really to grab, so people go back to the roots of the music, blues and jazz. That's all I think happened."

O.V.: "We feel sometimes that we've almost come to the music backwards. We've grown up listening to the Rolling Stones and Eric Clapton. As it happened, it seems that somebody just happened to have a Lightenin' Hopkins album or something like that which found it's way to our record collections and now we're finding that a good percentage of the albums we're buying are blues albums. What do you think of this?"

J.C.: "What happened is that one time this country hadn't changed to the point where people were listening to a lot of blues and black music in general. Through the presence of Elvis Presley and that group of people they began to move the music over to the white audience. Then the whites started listening to the music, but they still didn't get to the blues 'till Jimmy Reed came along. About this time the kids started researching the blues and then they started coming up with all the other blues singers that had been doing the blues but nobody had ever really heard of them, though they've been recording for years and years. It's only because your fathers and grandfathers didn't pay the music as much attention at the time it was coming through. It was always there and it had it's little audience but not a big one."

O.V.: "How did your African audiences receive your music?"

J.C.: "We've been very well received in all the African countries we've played in. Some of the reports have come back in and I've read enough of them to know that we've been successful. As far as audiences go, we saw a lot of young people at our shows and a lot of dignitaries and musicians came to see us."

O.V.: "Did you play with African musicians?"

J.C.: Oh yeah, we had a few jam sessions. We all had a good time playing together but nobody knew what to call it. It was a lot of fun."

O.V.: "Though blues, for whatever reason, was ignored for a long time, it seems to have a kind of survivability and universal popularity whether it's in the suburbs of America or in Africa. Do you think the blues is universal in this way or is it a uniquely afro-american experience?"

J.C.: "The blues is a universal feeling for the simple reason that any time you got to deal with another person in trying to get yourselves to match up to the same thing. . . it could be with your woman. . . your blues might come another way but you got the blues. You know whenever you see someone with a suitcase he's got to carry around all day long and every morning he's walking up into his office, he might have the blues 'cause his role at home might be something like, 'Yes dear, yes dear' (hearty laughter). The conditions don't necessarily have to be bad. The blues can go either way."

Backstage with the king of blues

By CHARLIE SENNOTT
BEN TERRALL and PHILLIP PLANTE

John Lee Hooker is one of the few remaining bluesmen from the immensely powerful and influential musical tradition of the Mississippi Delta. Born in Clarksdale Mississippi in 1917, Hooker became part of the northern migration of thousands of black people away from the racial and economic oppression of the South. The Delta tradition is the major basis for contemporary blues, and therefore has influenced almost all popular American music, from the power and integrity of Jimi Hendrix and Jeff Beck to the languid whining of Billy Joel and John Denver.

On October 16 we had the honor to speak with John Lee Hooker. In the interview, Mr. Hooker talks about his life as a blues musician in the 1980's, his influences growing up in the Delta, and his problems with the recording industry.

Other Voice: I'd like to ask you about some influences you had when you were growing up, about meeting Charlie Patton and. . .

John Lee Hooker: I didn't meet Charlie Patton.

O.V.: Were they around then?

J.L.H.: They were around but I didn't see'm. I got my stuff from my stepfather when I was eleven or twelve years old. I knew about all these people you're talking about, Charlie Patton and Blind Lemon Jefferson.

O.V.: Were they influencing you?

J.L.H.: I heard their music. My influence comes from my stepfather William Moore. I heard Charlie Patton's music on records but I never was able to meet him.

O.V.: Did you go to Dettoit after Mississippi?

J.L.H.: Went to Cincinatti, lived there about three years.

O.V.: Who were you playing with when you were in Cincinatti and Detroit?

J.L.H: Cincinatti, wasn't playing anywhere. Just workin' in jobs. Messin' round with the guitar whenever I could. Then I went to Detroit when I was about eighteen, nineteen and I was playin' around at different little places. . . in duos, combos. . . I was playin' in bars, small combos. . . workin' in factories. . . wherever I could get work. Work was real plentiful then — during the war (WWII) jobs weren't a problem to get. Then I met Elmer Barber. He had a little label called Sensation records and I started recording w'him. I had this big hit called Boogie Chillun — a big hit. His label (Sensation Records) was so small he couldn't handle it. So then he transferred me over to Modern, that's a big label.

O.V.: When did you start playing for Chess?

J.L.H.: Hold on, I'm, tryin' to tell you, Modern, they had nationwide distribution. I stayed with him for a long long time. I never did sign with Chess, never will sign with that label. But I did some stuff with them on the side. I never was an exclusive with that label. . . I was a hot blues singer. A lot of labels asked me to do things and I haven't got the offers we've really wanted so. . . we're just playin' the winning game.

O.V.: Have you thought about doing anything with Aligator Records of Blues organizations such as Blues Heaven?

J.L.H.: They're small labels. They don't got the distribution. They get a lot of people started out.

O.V.: What do you have to say about you're audiences comparing your audiences now to the way they were in Detroit?

J.L.H.: The audiences are really good. They're better than they were in past years. There weren't many people into the blues in years gone by, now everybody's into'm; young, old, everybody.

Drinks are being poured. We are back stage with members of John Lee Hooker's back up band, The Coast to Coast Blues Band: Deacon Jones, organist; Steve Ehrman, bass player; and Mike Osborne, guitarist.

Deacon: The band that drinks together stays together.

O.V.: What other musicians have you guys played with?

Mike: I've played with Robben Ford.

Steve: I used to play with Charlie Musselwhite's band. We cut an album which is on Cherry Red Label, I believe. Yeah, playing with Charlie was a real good experience. I also played with Lightning Hopkins, Albert Collins and Big Walter Horton. It's been so long I forget, I played with a lot of folks though.

O.V.: What was Lightning like?

Steve: He was absolutely the meanest old man I ever met. He had the worst disposition of anybody I ever saw in my whole life. One time we were playing and he had a thing about flash cameras, you know. He thought anybody who took his picture or got his autograph was immediately going to sell it, and make money off him. One time he stopped in the middle of a show and said, "I love ya, but I don't like your face." He made the guy give up his camera, and he did that on a number of occasions. That stemmed from his past when he was getting burned by recording companies. They would cut a number, say they weren't gonna use it, and then years later it would show up on a bootleg. Lightning, like John, got burned a lot. He was real mistrustful but not without reason.

(Other Voice photos by Drew Ogier)

O.V.: Are people still getting burned by record companies?

Steve: Oh yeah, it's still going on. The whole record business is an inside joke among musicians. It is completely seperate from the music. There is music, and there is the music business, and often the two don't have anything to do with each other. (pause. . .)

O.V.: Deacon, you used to play with Freddie King, right?

Deacon: Yeah. He died in 1974. Three days before Christmas. He died of a blood clot. He used to drink a lot of gin.

Steve: Exactly what you're drinkin' now ain't it, Deacon?

O.V.: All right, we traced some of your backgrounds, let's talk about John Lee Hooker.

Steve: What can you say about the man? Like Deacon said, he's a legend. I hope I can do half of what he's doing at that age.

Deacon: The man has got incredible energy. I mean, most people his age can't do anything. He's 65. . .

Steve: That's medicaid age.

Deacon: With the Hook it ain't the age, it's the stage.

Steve: Amen.

Deacon: He runs around like a 45 year old.

Steve: Often like a 25 year old. (laughter). You know the thing that amazes me the most about the Hook and his music is that it cuts through any age classification. You can't pidgeon-hole him. There were young people out there tonight that couldn't have been more than 18 and they were digging it just as much as the people who were 50 or 60 years old where we ayed last night. It (blues) goes right to the heart of the matter. I guess it must just strike a nerve that never dies.

Mike: The audience seemed awful young to me tonight.

Deacon: The hip thing about tonight is that it only cost $3.

Steve: Yeah, the prices some places charge cuts a lot of our audience. I mean, some places are charging 6, 8, even 12 dollars a pop. That's a lot of dough.

Deacon: Blues people ain't got that kind of money.'

Steve: Those kinds of prices will give people the blues.

Deacon: This was one of the hippest concerts we've played in a long time. By charging $3 you were able to fill the hall and people had room to dance. This way people beat Reagonomics and they still have some money left to get a buzz before the show.

Record industry plays it safe

Independent companies forced to take up slack

By PHILLIP PLANTE

A revolution of economics and attitudes is slowly changing the music industry.

Since the first signs of decay in the industry have appeared, subtle currents of change have begun to surface. With the proliferation of shlocky, uninspired mass-market music promoted by overgrown record companies, new music has had to find alternative ways of getting to the public.

Next to air traffic controllers, Dennis Centofranchi may have one of the most difficult jobs going these days. As a buyer for Record Town, a local record store chain, Centofranchi must determine what the record buying public is thinking. "A week is a long time in this business. A week could make the difference in making or breaking a record," he said. Though Centofranchi consults daily radio play, an itemized computer list of the entire Record Town inventory, as well as the pop charts in Billboard magazine, he finds himself relying increasingly on his own judgement.

Kenny Reid of Main Street Records in Northampton.

"A college degree would be of no use to anyone doing my job," he said. "We have to know how to take chances sometimes. Take Quarter-Flash for instance. We sat around and listened to it and going by our own judgement we thought it had potential. We ordered it and it sold."

Centofranchi, like other record store owners and recording executives, is learning how the exposing of new bands can earn money. "There's a lot of money to be made out there," he says. "Sometimes a little risk and my own judgement can make some money. Record companies are always trying to sign a big artist at a big expense. For what it costs to produce and promote one highly paid, well-known artist, five previously unknown bands could be produced at a profit."

There was a time when the captains of the record industry were riding high. An affluent music-hungry public bought records almost as soon as they hit the shelves. When a new Beatles album came out everybody bought it. Rolling Stones, the Beatles, the Who, the BeeGees, and the Kinks made up the mainstay of record company profits. After two decades of spiraling growth, sales of records began to fall in 1979. This year, industry profits are expected to drop by as much as 25 percent, causing panic among the major labels. "They don't know what's going on," says Wiley Smith, proprietor of For the Record, in downtown Amherst. "There have been massive firings," he says. "The big record comapnies are spoiled by multi-platinum records and have gotten used to throwing a lot of money around. I can remember when our store was invited to a few large company promotional parties; It's amazing the way money was thrown around like that. It had nothing to do with music."

"For what it costs to produce and promote one highly paid, well-known artist, five previously unknown bands could be produced at a profit."

Though large labels like Atlantic, Elektra, Asylum (all subsidaries of Warner Communications), Sire, and Columbia can blame the recession, video games, and home-taping for some of their woes, bad deals and bad planning have hurt too. Still intoxicated by their former successes and dreaming of glory days past, record company executives have swung wildy, hoping for a quick fix to boost sagging record sales. Pop-country star Kenny Rogers was recently signed to a major label for 5 million dollars in exchange for the rights to his next five albums. This means Rogers will have to go platinum (a million copies sold) on his next three albums for the company to at least break even financially. Kenny's latest, as might be expected from today's inconsistent, money-tight record public, is not selling very well.

Caution with consumers has also led to caution among record executives. Oftentimes an accountant's judgement is preferred over any subjective judgement or personal taste. The "science" of marketing is the source of many decisions made in todays recording industry. According to an article in the April 10 issue of Newsweek, Geffen Records recently produced a new Sammy Hagar single by testing different album cuts with a "focus group" and then releasing the statistical favorite.

"The major labels are never going to recover to what they used to be," says Al Trettier, best known by the records he sells in front of the Post Office in downtown Amherst. "The record companies are hurting for high volume records and that market may never be what it was." Trettier, who also owns a partnership in the Dynamite Record Store in Northampton, has begun to take advantage of the home-taping of records. "We rent records for two dollars for forty-eight hours. If someone borrows a record and wants to keep it after hearing it, the rental price is subtracted from the original price." Trettier asserts that record rentals (contrary to industry claims) benefit and encourage new music. "It's good because more people are exposed to more music," he says. "People will tape what they won't buy."

In an attempt to minimize losses from record sales, the major corporations which control most major record companies have begun to diversify. Record companies and record store chains have become "entertainment corporations", offering records, video disks and cassettes as well as television video game products. The Warner Corporation (which owns Warner Records) has purchased the Atari video game corporation and is involved with other corporate diversification programs which hurt the music industry.

Al Trettier of Dyn-O-Mite Records in Northampton.

Leon C. Harstone, chief executive officer of the Integrity Entertainment Corporation, which controls the second largest record chain in the country said in the November '81 edition of Business Week, "We have to put our personnel and floor space to better use than records, which is a fairly old industry."

"Small labels simply do not have the ability to reach the same number of people. . ."

What the large record companies, with all their corporate baggage, have failed to provide to the public, small labels have tried to pick up. "When you run a company that big you have to insulate yourself," says Duncan Brown, a manager of Rounder Records, a distributor of small labels. "Independent labels have become more viable as the large lables go "MOR" (middle of the road). Besides adding to the diversity of music in the marketplace, small labels actively support classic music forms with limited mass-market appeal.

"You don't do what we do to make money. You do it because you love the music," says Brown. Rounder-distributed labels like Flying Fish and Alligator Records develop a social aspect to the record industry which goes beyond a business-type relationship. Besides producing emerging blues artists who may not otherwise get exposure, Alligator has actively worked with musicians themselves to aid some of their economic problems.

Extending beyond any traditional definition of business procedure is the highly successful (and slightly avante garde) Rough Trade Records. Starting out as a small English firm handling less accessable punk-art bands like Joy Division, Rough Trade has taken root in America. "We changed the way record companies deal with artists, says "Steve" of Rough Trade. "We don't explbit them. We respect people who are creating interesting music and we respect the record buying public. All employees at Rough Trade arre paid the same salary and all have equal say as to whether artists get produced or not. We've got a basic system — it's called democracy," he says. "Rough Trade is an integral part of my life. It replaces going to bars at night to a certain extent."

As a manager at Rough Trade, Steve has no illusions about the role of small labels in the marketplace. "Some people think that independent labels are going to solve the problems of the record industry. It all goes back to when every label was a small label. To stay close to the music you have to stay small, and small labels simply do not have the ability to distribute and reach the same number of people as large labels. Small labels cannot grow without changing the way they do business," he said.

For years, groups like the Kinks (above) made up the mainstay of record company profits.

In Brazil, writers feel oppression

How to fight 18 years of military rule? Brazil's writers protest from behind literary disguise.

By ROGER ATWOOD

A Brazilian peasant named Fabiano was standing in the village square when a policeman shoved him to one side and barked "Get going!"

In a matter of minutes, the town's police force had surrounded Fabiano, beat him with the flat of a knife, and carted him off to jail.

"Down you go, fellow!" said the corporal as he threw Fabiano into the dark cell.

Fabiano's offense? He had walked away from a card game without paying what he owed.

Fabiano is the main character in Graciliano Ramos' 1938 novel Barren Lives. Many modern Brazilians have suffered Fabiano's fate but for a very different reason — they wrote politically "loaded" novels. Since the military takeover in 1964, Brazil's writers have endured imprisonments, torture, and exile stemming from the political nature of their work. Repression has eased somewhat in the last few years, but the constant threat of police harrassment still faces Brazil's most original — and controversial — writers.

●In 1977, novelist Renato Tapajos wrote memoirs of his days as an urban guerrilla, entitled In Camara Lenta. The book included detailed descriptions of Tapajos's experiences with prison torturers. For this, In Camara Lenta was promptly banned, and Tapajos jailed and tortured.

●Vladimir Herzog, a Sao Paulo journalist, was arrested in 1975 for disseminating supposedly anti-government information. He was tortured to death. Herzog's wife sued the government, and after three years of litigation finally won an admission of guilt. The government had previously declared Herzog's death a suicide.

●In the early 1970's, Jose Lozeiro wrote his true-to-life novel, Araceli, My Love, about a small-town girl who is murdered by a gang of youths. This seemingly non-political novel was immediately banned. Why? Lozeiro's reportage implicated members of wealthy and influential families with high posts in the government. Though the Brazilian courts later used Lozeiro's book in connection with hearings over the murder, Araceli remained underground.

"Freedom in the arts is a stiff battle in Brazil," said Daphne Patai, a Portuguese professor at UMass and an expert on Brazilian literature. "Up until the mid-1970s many writers simply could not publish anything with political implications. Or they spent their time in jail."

To get past censors and still reach the public with their dissident message, Brazilian writers often have had to disguise the political nature of their work. Some of these masks have been highly innovative and at times bizarre. Patai recalls one novelist who used animal characters to satirize the Brazilian dictatorship, Animal Farm-style. The novel cleared the censors, yet the political resonances were unmistakeable.

Other dissident writers like Ivan Angelo, have turned to a kind of docu-novel form. Angelo based his novel, The Celebration, on historical fact, but masked those facts with satire. Only in this way could Angelo get his novel past the censors.

The Celebration was translated by Thomas Colchie, the literary agent for Angelo and over a dozen other Brazilian authors.

"In this book," said Colchie, "Angelo could write about the sort of political things that couldn't be written about overtly, but had the escape that their works were fiction."

Colchie also translated Marcio Souza's The Emperor of the Amazon, a novel about a turn-of-the-century adventurer who journeys to the Amazon jungle and finds himself commanding a revolution. This novel, too, cleverly steeps its political intent in satire.

"The book had a lot of deep references to contemporary political realities," said Colchie, "which most American critics didn't pay any attention to."

"These writers have had to search for disguises," said Patia, "and turn away from overt description or literally risk their necks."

Patai remembers one Brazilian author, Carlow Heitor Cony, who in the mid-1960's attracted attention with a novel called Pessach: A Travessia. The novel centers on a young writer who, according to Patai, "gradually came to grips with his personal, artistic responsibility to his work in the face of repression."

Somehow, the novel cleared the censors. But Heitor Cony was nonetheless later jailed for his writing. Since his imprisonment, his style has shifted radically.

As Patai said, "Last I heard, he was writing these trashy, sexploitation kind of novels, one of which I had the misfortune of reading. It was all about passion and sex in Brazil. I could hardly believe it was the same writer."

"One can only theorize about the effect of imprisonment. But before he was jailed he looked like a serious literary talent. And now he's publishing so much junk, which certainly doesn't make any political waves even if you dislike it for other reasons."

Brasilian writer Marcio Souza.

Harsh as the repression may be, conditions have certainly improved since the "dark days" of the mid-1970s. Most political prisoners have been granted amnesty (an amnesty which extends also to their torturers), while political exiles have been allowed to return. Press censorship officially ended in 1978, though, as Colchie says, the government "keeps their eye" on writers and journalists.

"There are a lot of things you can say now that you couldn't say in the early '70s," said Joan Dassin, a Fordham University professor who has written extensively on the Brazilian press and politics. "1978 was a turning point, and with it came a tremendous output of political fiction and memoirs of the repression," said Dassin.

As Dassin sees it, several factors have combined to force the abestura, or "opening." Economics put pressure on the generals, as Brazil's inflation rate hit 110% and as the long-awaited economic "miracle" collapsed in the early '70s. With the financial crises, the military seems to have lost a central pillar of its support — the middle class. Finally, persistent pressure from opposition groups and divisions within the army itself further reduced its power and credibility.

Last month, Brazilians voted in their country's first free elections in 17 years. Allegations of minor fraud persist, particularly in the hinterlands. But opposition parties made significant gains in several of the most important states. In Rio de Janeiro, a one-time exile and brother-in-law of the deposed leftist president Joao Goulart, was elected governor. The most populous and industrialized state of all, Sao Paulo, is also now governed by the opposition.

But elections and "abestura" alone do not spell the end for repression in Brazil. Hard-line groups in the military still press for a crack-down. Amnesty International's 1982 report cites a "growing number of prosecutions of civilians by military courts" that regard "freedom of expression and association. . .as threats to national security." Several journalists have been charged with "infringing the press laws for writing articles criticizing military and government agencies." At present, there are about 20 prisoners of conscience in Brazil.

"The censors are still around, no doubt," said Dassin, "and there is still no democracy on the lines that we know it."

In fact, democracy has taken a beating for nearly a generation in Brazil. One can only guess at the impact of the military rule on Brazil's maturing writers who grew up under military rule. Perhaps the years of political sterility will leave them passive, unexpressive, and apolitical. Or, as Dassin says it more likely, "they will be excruciatingly political. We will soon see."

For now, the impact of 18 years of repression is clear — a heavy political stamp to Brazil's literature.

"When people like Tapajos or Souza write on political subjects, it's not because they have an ideological axe to grind," said Colchie, "nor is it socialist realism. Politics is a fundamental aspect of reality in Brazil, as it is in Eastern Europe or South Africa. And any author who explores contemporary Brazilian life has to respect its political element."

Ivan Angelo, author of The Celebration.

Prince House summer residents win appeal; will receive rebates

By DAVID SUMMERSBY
Collegian Staff

The one hundred and fifteen students who lived in Prince House last summer and endured the noise, dirt and other inconveniences due to bathroom renovations will receive about $200 per person for their suffering from the University of Massachusetts amounting to approximately $20,000.

Trying to give the students as fair a settlement as possible, the Residential Appeals Committee has awarded them 70 percent of the room fees for the first summer session and $10.00 a piece for the lack of hot water in Prince House from June 21 to June 24th.

"I am estatic about the results and happy that we have been able to resolve the issue. We have made them accountable for their actions," Betty Fleishel-Lewis, a resident of Prince, said.

Executive Director of Housing Services Joseph Zannini acknowledged and accepted the committee's decision saying, "We are sorry the whole problem happened and if we had to do it again we wouldn't have done it the same way."

"We tried to house the students in Prince House and expand the bathrooms to accomodate the handicapped at the same time and it didn't work out. Our staff has recognized that students suffered an inconvenience and we are using the committee's decision to rectify the situation," he said.

The committee's decision could create changes in the new Residence Hall Contract that the Residence Committee is in the process of drafting. "Hopefully a crucial paragraph involving two specific issues will be entered into the housing contract that will protect students in the future. One, that students are adequately notified ahead of time about any renovations to a residence hall of any magnitude, and two, any time there is a disruption of services for more than eight hours, students receive $2.50 a day," Fleishel-Lewis said.

"It has always been our intent to give students adequate notice of renovations going on in dorms," said John Findley, assistant director of Housing Services. "No one really understood what the impact of renovations to Prince House might have on the students," he said.

In addition to granting the students money, the committee has sent a letter to Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson urging and recommending that similar renovations involving drilling and demolition of walls and ceilings not be undertaken while students are living in residence halls. The letter to Madson signed by all the members of the committee said, "The experience of the Prince House residents leads us to conclude that a more prudent practice would be to plan for removal of a student population from the locus of renovation."

Lewis added that the students of Prince have been able to set an important precedent. "It will mean that students as tenants will be protected and will not suffer as we did," she said.

SGA runs bond ad

By MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association wants to find out who holds the bonds on University of Massachusetts buildings so that it can clear up alleged violations of bond trust agreements.

Because the Student Government Association has been unable to get the names of the bondholders through other means, Student Government Association President Jim Murphy has been granted $320 to run an advertisement in Bond Buyer magazine to encourage the bondholders to contact the Student Government Association.

"You may be entitled, under certain circumstances, to an early redemption of your bonds," the ad states. The ad also lists Murphy's name, office address and phone number. The Student Government Association is not mentioned.

"It's apparent people at the University aren't moving to address some of the problems we've brought out," Murphy said. "So we're trying to get in touch with some of the bondholders, to have another set of ears."

The First National Bank of Boston, trustee for the UMass Building Authority bonds, refused to provide a list of names, citing confidentiality. Murphy said he believed the names are public information, but that a challenge could take years.

Murphy has recently charged that the University and the Building Authority have been in violation of trust agreements because excess bonds totalling $1.6 million were not repaid and because $3 million in allegedly illegal loans were made over 12 years and then eliminated last summer by a changeover in accounting systems, which Murphy also claims is illegal.

"I wish I could've handled this in-house," said Murphy, who said he has made his concern public and has sent a report to UMass President David C. Knapp.

Knapp declined to speak with the Collegian and has made no comment despite four weeks of Collegian inquiries.

The Undergraduate Student Senate Finance Committee allocated $320 for the ad two weeks ago. Murphy said that following approval of the ad by legal counsel, it was sent last Friday to appear today.

If the charges Murphy has made are true, the UMass Building Authority might be required to repurchase some of the outstanding bonds, which were issued at tax-exempt interest rates of three to seven percent. Because current interest rates are higher, many bondholders can be expected to prefer immediate repayment of their bonds.

The UMass Building Authority issued almost $80 million worth of bonds in the 1960s and 1970s. Any repayment would be made from the $1.6 million in excess construction funds now being held by the UMass Building Authority.

UMass heads boo union merger attempt

By KEVIN BOWE
Collegian Staff

In a move that has generated fierce opposition from administration and employees at the University of Massachusetts, the state Board of Regents will attempt to consolidate labor unions that represent most service and maintenance employees at the state's 27 public colleges and universities.

The Regents will petition the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission to consolidate the 16 unions that represent approximately 4500 employees into "three or four" bargaining units during the month of January, said Vice-Chancellor and Director of Employees Relations for the Regents, Jay LaPorte, yesterday.

"There are people that have similar job descriptions on the different campuses and are working under different contracts making more or less money and different benefits," LaPorte said.

"This makes no sense when you have the same employer," he said.

Robert Quinn, chairman of the UMass Board of Trustees disagreed.

"The consolidation of classified units is at best unwise, at worst unworkable and will afford neither efficiency, nor advantage to the management position in Higher Education," wrote Quinn in a letter to James R. Martin, Chairman of the Board of Regents, dated Dec. 13.

Quinn wrote that the collective bargaining agreements reached in the past between UMass and the unions have been beneficial to the state and there is no reason for the consolidations.

Brian Walker, president of the Local 1776 AFSMCE union expressed vehement opposition.

"Reorganization will destroy the local union as we knew it. We're fighting this with any tools available," Walker said.

Bruce Laurie, president of the UMass faculty union which is not affected by the consolidation move, expressed opposition to the plan.

"It is a movement...inspired by bureaucratic convenience," Laurie said.

Beth LaPorte and Norman Zalkind, chairman of the Regent's subcommittee on Personal and Collective Bargaining defend the move.

The present collective bargaining system is "inefficient, ineffective and has no uniformity," LaPorte said.

"I certainly feel there are a number of inequalities that have to be addressed," Zalkind said.

If there is a consolidation it would be for the convenience of the collective bargaining process, he said.

"In their own interest (the Regents) it makes perfect management sense (to consolidate the unions). The problem is the delay of bargaining. All this is going to take time...(it will) mean delay in pay increases. It's going to be warrying on the classified employees," Robert Sherry, labor expert from the UMass Labor Relations an Research Center.

House passes financial aid bill

By RAY BEAUCHEMIN

A bill delaying the implementation of the Bottle Bill and turning over approximately $10-$25 million in unclaimed bottle deposits to the state treasury passed the State House of Representatives late last night. The extra funds have been earmarked for state student aid.

Stan Rosenberg, administrative aide to Sen. John Olver, D-Amherst who initiated the measure, said the bill "creates a revenue stream for financial aid. Prior to this, financial aid came out of the general fund. It's a boost not only in dollars, but in the importance of financial aid."

Doug Phelps, executive director of MASSPIRG, proponents of the measure, said the bill had two good effects: "It will take back what would have been a windfall for the bottle companies and is positive for the students."

The House approval, accompanied by a Senate approval Dec. 6, sets the bill up for routine approval by both legislative branches after which the bill will travel to the governor's office.

The bottle bill for soft-drink distributors will be delayed until March 31.

Another Olver-initiated bill, Senate No. 2099, will be up for Senate approval soon, according to Rosenberg. This measure will increase the present amount of aid of $19 million to $44 million, a plus of $25 million.

Opponents of this bill had said its major flaw was that no source of income had been specified, but since last night's approval of the use of unclaimed five and ten cent deposits for state student aid, the $25 million has found a source.

The bill "creates a revenue stream for financial aid. Prior to this, financial aid came out of the general fund. It's a boost not only in dollars, but in the importance of financial aid."

The action last night ends a long series of bills and proposals to generate money for financial aid. In March, several prominent legislators, Olver included, co-sponsored a bill to come up with $29 million in student aid by increasing a tax on cigarettes. This bill however, was stalled in the House Ways and Means Committee for eight months and not passed.

World and national news

Reagan willing to freeze funds for MX missile

WASHINGTON (AP) — Fighting to salvage the MX missile, President Reagan said yesterday he would be willing to freeze the weapon's production money until he sends Congress a new package of alternate basing plans from which it could pick and choose.

Reagan's action, described as a compromise with Republicans and Democrats in the Senate, signaled his willingness to rethink the so-called dense pack basing system he unveiled just three weeks ago.

The compromise was aimed at preventing a repeat of the crushing defeat — by a 69-vote margin — the MX suffered in the House last week.

It was far from certain, however, that the strategy would work.

Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, asked whether the House would accept the plan, said, "I doubt it at the present time. There'd have to be a change in the feeling out there."

Rep. Jack Edwards, R-Ala., leader of House supporters of the MX, agreed. "It would be very hard. The House has spoken rather loudly, I think."

Reagan to tackle social security

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan declared yesterday he is "not scared" to tackle Social Security's financial problems, but he's still leaving it to a national commission to pave the way. With that, a key Republican member of the panel demanded "some leadership from the White House" before the retirement system plunges over the brink.

The National Commission on Social Security Reform already had served notice it won't be able to shape bipartisan recommendations unless Reagan and House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., step into the fray. The commission faces a Friday deadline for its report.

But Reagan held his ground yesterday, saying it should be up to the 15-member commission, including "experts in the field of actuarial statistics and insurance and pension plans" to develop their own proposals. He insisted, however, that "We're not scared to touch the issue."

O'Neill, for his part, said Monday he saw little prospect for teaming up with Reagan now on the issue. But he added "I'll be glad to go over" to the White House should Reagan call.

Some of the stiffest criticism of Reagan's reluctance came from fellow Republicans. Sen. John Heinz, R-Pa., a member of the commission, noted pointedly that "It is a presidentially created commission — the intiative was the president's."

Heart recipient Clark rushed to surgery again

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Barney Clark was rushed back into surgery yesterday after his blood pressure plunged because of a broken valve in his artificial heart. Doctors replaced the entire left half of the polyurethane device in a four-hour operation.

"He's a very, very sick man who's gone through multiple surgeries," Dr. Chase Peterson, University of Utah vice president for health sciences, said following the operation. "He was in critical condition before and he's more critical now."

It was the third operation in less than two weeks for Clark, the first human ever to receive a permanent artificial heart. But it was the first time since the 61-year-old retired dentist received the heart 13 days ago that the mechanism itself had developed a problem.

In just over four hours of surgery, doctors replaced the left ventricle of Clark's plastic heart.

Man holds judge at gunpoint; faces charges

AVONDALE, Pa. (AP) — A man facing criminal trespass charges kicked his way into a magistrate's house yesterday and took the judge and his wife hostage at gunpoint, but was captured about five hours later, police and the judge's brother said.

District Magistrate Donald C. Brown and his wife, Jean, were unhurt.

Police tricked the suspect into leaving the judge's house, and after he walked out the front door four plainclothes officers jumped from hiding places and wrestled him to the ground in the snow, said Michelle Messinger, a neighbor who saw the capture.

The capture freed the judge. Mrs. Brown had been released about two hours earlier.

Philip Tigue, 49, of Avondale, broke into Brown's house about 7 a.m., police said. Brown's brother, Harold, said Tigue kicked the judge's front door loose and was armed with a pistol when he forced his way in.

Tigue had appeared before Brown the night before on a charge of criminal trespass because he refused a sheriff's notice to vacate some property he had been occupying, police said.

Quake kills thousand; 1,104 hospitalized

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Rescuers searched devastated villages in the rugged countryside of North Yemen yesterday for trapped survivors of an earthquake that killed more than a thousand people.

At least 1,082 people have been confirmed killed since shortly after noon Monday, when the worst quake in 16 centuries rolled across the small, mountainous nation at the southwest corner of the Arabian peninsula.

Yemen Prime Minister Abdul-Karim Iriani said 1,104 people had been hospitalized.

Eleven villages were levelled and 142 were badly damaged, according to first reports. Most dwellings are built of sun-baked brick and many crumbled during the 40-second quake and three severe aftershocks. Two hundred fifty children died when their schoolhouse collapsed on them, according to a state radio report monitored in Bahrain.

North Yemen does not readily grant visas, and transportation to the quake area was limited, making immediate coverage by foreign reporters nearly impossible. Broadcast and published information is monitored in nearby Bahrain. Many villagers whose houses remained standing fled outdoors in fear of further aftershocks, and a geological expert predicted a new quake as intense as the first one, according to reports yesterday.

Wife of drug tamperer surrenders to charges

NEW YORK (AP) — The wife of Tylenol extortion suspect James Lewis surrendered to authorities in Chicago yesterday on an unrelated criminal charge, authorities said.

Mort Friedman, a spokesman for the task force investigating the Tylenol poisonings, said in Chicago that Leann Lewis, 35, was taken into custody at O'Hare International Airport and was to appear before a U.S. magistrate later today. She also would be questioned by the FBI, he said.

On Monday her husband, charged with attempting to extort $1 million in the wake of the seven Tylenol poisoning deaths in Chicago, was captured in the New York Public Library, where he apparently went to write letters to newspapers.

Authorities said Lewis would be taken to Chicago to determine whether he was involved in the Tylenol killings themselves.

Mrs. Lewis is wanted on a federal warrant charging misuse of a Social Security card while trying to obtain work in Chicago.

Store struggle continues

By RICHARD NANGLE
Collegian Staff

The ongoing struggle between student leaders and the University Store will intensify next semester when the Student Government Association (SGA) will offer Economics textbooks for a lower rate than that of the Textbook Annex.

SGA President Jim Murphy said the operation will be run on a non-profit basis as a service to students. The current sentiment is that students are being overcharged at the Textbook Annex.

Student leaders are also involved in a struggle between Union Records Unlimited and the University Store concerning record sales and advertising.

All introduction and some upper level economics books will be offered by the SGA. They will be sold in the Campus Center Concourse. Ken Abert, an assistant to Murphy, said he believes the operation will put a significant dent in the profit margin of the Textbook Annex.

He said books would be sold on a limited basis (an excuse the Textbook Annex will carry the latest books students will not use).

But Jim Cummings, manager of the University Store, said any books ordered by professors through the store operation will simply be ordered by the Textbook Annex and patrons will in fact lose out.

Contrary to charges by the SGA and the Board of Governors (BOG), Cummings said the University Store is a highly efficient operation and students are getting a good deal on textbook prices. He cited an example where Brown University is selling $29 textbooks for $21.40 while the University of Massachusetts sells the same book for $19.

Assistant Merchandising Manager David Curley also supported the efforts of the University Store.

BOG Chairman Ron Keefe said the University should not be in the business of putting student run co-ops out of business.

The BOG has charged that the Textbook Annex profits are being used to subsidize the entire Campus Center operation. Keefe said the Annex makes over $300,000 per year. Cummings however, said that figure is significantly reduced when expenses are taken into account.

"I personally don't believe him," Keefe said. "They're playing with accounting."

Keefe said one of the main reason that Union Records Unlimited is struggling is because the University Store is putting a disproportionate amount of record ads in the Collegian. Cummings said record ads only amount to two to five percent of the store's total advertising budget in the Collegian. He said a large percentage of the record ads are paid for by record distributors and if Union Records Limited ordered it could come up with a similar deal. Recently the BOG allotted $2,000 to Union Records to help the law-enforcing budget.

Keefe said he would like to see the official word expenditures on paper before the BOG could formulate a policy on the way the Campus Center's Book Center operates. Cummings will not reveal those figures, Keefe said.

"Until he opens up his books (it is) all speculation. He doesn't want the students to know just how much they're getting ripped off," Keefe said.

While mice are away, cats may play: Whitmore staff shake-up possible

By JIM FINKLE
Collegian Staff

A major shake up in the University of Massachusetts top administration may take place while most students are at home over intercession.

Both Provost and Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Loren Baritz and Assistant Chancellor and Director of the Office of Planning and Budget Marie M. Reid may be on leave from the University, effective in January.

According to sources in the University administration, Baritz is expected to go on a one year sabattical to complete work on a book on the Vietnam War. Reid may be granted a one year leave of absence to pursue doctoral studies.

In addition to these absences, Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey said he expects to appoint a permanent vice chancellor for Administration and Finance to replace acting vice chancellor John L. DeNyse.

Duffey also expects to appoint a vice chancellor for University Relations and Development, a newly created position, after the search committee makes its recommendations by the end of this month.

In addition to these personnel changes, the administration is expected to set up a search committee to find a director of the newly established Office of Institutional Research, which will coordinate all data concerning the University.

While most buildings around the University will be quiet over intercession, the staff and administrators in Whitmore will continue working. This is especially true for the chancellor who will be using the time to meet with many officials.

"It'll be a busy January," Duffey said yesterday.

Duffey said he plans to meet with the Massachusetts Board of Regents of Higher Education and attend both a UMass Board of Trustees meeting and a Faculty Senate Rules Committee meeting. Duffey will also attend his first American Council on Education Board of Trustees meeting.

Last SGA meeting tonight

By PAUL BELVAL
and HANNAH HOSOM
Collegian Staff

Tonight's meeting of the University of Massachusetts Undergraduate Student Senate, the last of this semester, is expected to be busy.

Senators are expected to vote on ratification of a revised Student Government Association constitution, an amendment to increase the number of members on a senate committee and to approve a nomination for student attorney general. In addition, SGA President Jim Murphy is expected to introduce an amendment that would limit the SGA presidency to one person.

Murphy has said that limiting the presidency thus would prevent "personality conflicts" within the office. He also said that the amendment would eliminate the possibility that one popular, competent candidate would be elected with another candiate, who might be incompetent.

Murphy will probably present the senate with a nomination for a new student attorney general. If the Senate approves his nomination, then that person will replace Acting Student Attorney General Elizabeth Hill.

Murphy will make his nomination after reviewing the recommendation of a search committee, established by the Senate earlier this semester. That committee, chaired by Assistant Attorney General Richard S. Kramer recommended to Murphy that Randy Chapman, who currently serves as an assistant attorney general, be nominated for the position.

Murphy may recommend Chapman, or another candiate if he feels the search committee followed unconstitutional procedures or that someone else is better qualified.

Because many parts of the present SGA constitution are unclear, a new constitution has been written. The Senate is expected to vote on ratification of that revised document tonight.

A motion will be introduced to increase the number of positions on the Senate Coordinating Committee, which guides the Senate's central organization from 15 to 17. The Coordinating Committee is one of the few committees specifically outlined in the SGA as being limited in membership.

The body is also expected to vote on a proposal to allow SGA officers and members of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA) to receive full-time pay over intersession.

Commuter Collective director to leave UMass

By BECKY THATCHER
Collegian Staff

A noted member of the University of Massachusetts community will be leaving next week to study children's services in South Eastern United States and Latin America.

Jose Tolson, 36, this semester received a 1982 Distinguished Service award for his four year guidance of the Commuter Collective, an area government organization for students who live off campus. He leaves Dec. 20. Brown will serve as director of the Commuter Collective during Tolson's absence.

"Jose will be sorely missed, he has been the backbone of the Commuter Collective ever since I have been here. It is going to [illegible] to fill Jose's shoes," Brown said.

Don Hall, director of the Student Affairs Office, which gave the Award, described Tolson's service as [illegible].

[illegible] creative programming and [illegible] commitment to its members, Hall said.

Tolson said that his main wish upon leaving the campus is [illegible] activities, goals and ideals of the Commuter Collective continued.

The Commuter Collective has been presenting programs and workshops on progressive issues in the United States.

Tolson said.

"This kind of stuff may sound like the ranting of another generation, but it is more current than ever before," he said.

"The administrators of our country are paying little or no attention to human rights throughout the country so students do not see that there is anything they can do," he said.

When he came to UMass he was looking at the great educational experience as a chance to meet many great people, the future Einsteins, the future Martin Luther Kings, Tolson said. Instead he found alienation.

"We cannot allow ourselves the luxury of isolation because isolation at this level is what gets the country in trouble at another level," he said.

"Students leaders have to be in the forefront and [illegible] among themselves and more for the common good."

Tolson said he was pleased with the [illegible] of the Commuter Collective.

"All of us share similar views. We [illegible] institution that you have to be anti-racist and [illegible] for nothing. We wish that everybody would [illegible] front," he said.

Tolson is taking a year long leave of absence to study children's services in South Eastern United States, Mexico, Cuba, Haiti and Puerto Rico. He plans to investigate the relationship between the wealth of each country and the services they offer to children.

Barbara Brodley, publicity director of the Commuter Collective, said, "We will certainly miss Jose's enthusiasm, creativity and unique contributions."

Sexism affects UMass hiring patterns ; UMass factbook explains stats

By DIANE KADZIS
Collegian Staff

Sexism and its historic impact on women has not bypassed the University of Massachusetts in the area of faculty and in fact has helped define the hiring pattern at UMass.

Thelma Griffith-Johnson, director of the Affirmative Action Office, offered this explanation of statistics published in the "1981-82 Factbook" by the University that reveal men comprise 68 percent of the full-time faculty at UMass.

The gap between the number of men and the number of women employed, by Griffith-Johnson said, is rooted in culture and the expectations set for men and women by that culture. Traditionally women have been motivated to perform "nurturing tasks that are people oriented," she said, while men have been trained to perform in a mentally active way.

"In 1863, there were no women employed by the University. Women in this country only were able to get into college due to the Morrill Land Grant Act that established this University an agricultural school," she said.

Women were invited here as students, Griffith-Johnson explained, because the local "farm boys" would not enter the University because they held the notion professors had nothing to offer them.

When agriculture was adopted as a discipline and access to the University became more appealing, an expansion of women's functions here was not necessary.

"I hope women learn something from that story and that history," she said.

As one result of a late entry into the University, Griffith-Johnson said women tend to be placed in lower ranking professional positions and are thereby faced with a pay differential. But according to figures in the factbook, a statistical survey of the Univeristy conducted yearly, the average salary of women holding tenured positions is lower than that of men in those same occupations.

"The campus has a right to know that if it does exist," Griffith-Johnson said, noting her office is now organizing a study to determine the comparative pay rate of men and women faculty members.

"I'm convinced God didn't preordain men to be the only ones to think," said Griffith-Johnson. "I'm tired of white shoemakers becoming Ph.D's and women doctors becoming housewives and blacks being shoe-shine boys."

Griffith-Johnson said efforts to remedy the warped condition have been successful but added "we've got a hell of a long way to go. We won't have made it all the way until there are as many women and as many minorities in (top level positions) as there are white male presidents in universities."

UMass English professor, 61, dies; Memorial service set for Saturday

By RAY BEAUCHEMIN
Collegian Staff

Robert Tucker, 61, co editor of The Massachusetts Review and a former professor of English at the University of Massachusetts, died Monday at Cooley-Dickinson Hospital in Northampton following a heart illness.

"Of all my teachers here, Bob was by far the most generous. His teaching was inspired by love. His students and colleagues cannot help but continue the spirit of his work," said Charles Francis Carroll, managing editor of of Spectrum magazine and one of Tucker's students.

Tucker, born April 3, 1921 in Portsmouth, N.H., leaves his wife, Jean, and daughter, Ellen, a student at UMass, both of Amherst.

"As a teacher and editor, Robert Tucker was remarkable for his kindness and patience with young and aspiring writers. Few could match him for reading a manuscript with more tact and sympathy or editorial skill," said John Hicks, a co editor of The Massachusetts Review who has worked with Tucker since 1960.

"For years, droves of students came to him and I don't know of any that came to ask him for help that were turned away. Tucker gave lots of time. Just out of the kindness of his heart," he said.

Tucker served in the U.S. Marine Corps during WW II. In 1949, he received his bachelor's degree in English from Amherst College. He later received an M.A. from Harvard and his Ph.D in English from the University of Iowa. In 1951, Tucker joined the Dept. of English at UMass where he taught literature and creative writing until his retirement in 1981.

Tucker joined The Massachusetts Review staff in 1960 as a reader. In 1965, he became managing editor and in 1971, became co editor in poetry until his death.

Although Tucker had never published a volume of his own poetry, he was included in the Poets of Amherst anthology and was printed in several periodicals including The Massachusetts Review. He was a contemporary and friend of such poets as Robert Frost, Robert Lowell and Robert Francis.

Memorial services will be at 2 p.m. Saturday at the First Congregational Church, Amherst. Arrangements were conducted by Douglass Funeral Home, Amherst.

Campus will continue functions over intersession

By TRICIA YACOVONE
Collegian Staff

While most people are anxiously awaiting the end of the semester and all the pleasure and relaxation that awaits them during intersession, some students will be staying on campus to take classes or to work.

For those students remaining on campus over the vacation, most regular campus facilities will be functioning, but on a limited basis.

The Coffee Shop in the Campus Center will be closed throughout intersession. The Hatch will be open 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. on weekdays and will be closed on weekends. The bar at the Hatch will be open until 11 on weekdays and weekends. Only Worcester Dining Commons will be operating.

Classes will begin on Tuesday, Jan. 4, with registration and add-drop period through Jan. 6. January 10 is the last day to drop classes with a "W." No classes will be held on Jan. 14 to honor the birthday of Martin Luther King. Classes end Jan. 26.

Goodell and the Tower Libraries, open from Dec. 27 to Jan 31 except Sundays, will operate 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday and 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Saturdays. The Physical Science Library will be open Monday through Friday from 8:30 a.m. until 5 p.m. and Sundays from noon until 8 p.m. It will be closed on Saturdays, Dec. 31 and Jan. 2.

Bus schedules for the UMass Transit Service will not be available until the beginning of next week. A spokesperson for the UMTS said there will be limited weekend service for the Mt. Holyoke and Off-Campus bus routes. There will be no Orchard Hill or Campus Shuttle routes.

Some students who will be here over intersession will be living on campus in Prince dormitory. Prince is only open for graduate students and international students; however, over intersession and the summer, it is open for undergraduate students on a priority basis. The dorm was scheduled to close on Jan. 23, but has extended the date until Jan. 26.

New editor-in-chief elected at Collegian staff meeting

Duties of several editorial directors at the Massachusetts Daily Collegian were passed on today following recent elections.

Kevin Bowe, 21, a senior Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration major studying political sociology, will take over today as editor-in-chief of the Collegian, the student-run newspaper at the University of Massachusetts.

Bowe, of Braintree, was elected to the position during a meeting of the newspaper's staff last week. An associate news editor this semeter, Bowe had previously worked as a news reporter, covering state wide higher education issues and reporting on the state Board of Regents of Higher Education.

Bowe has also worked for the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MASSPIRG), and for Student Government Association President Jim Murphy. Earlier this semester, Bowe, on internship, worked as an organizer for the campaign to save the state Bottle Bill.

As editor, Bowe will supervisor the paper's 175-member staff and act as head of the organization, representing the paper at University functions and arranging long-term projects for the publication.

Bowe replaces John Brobst, an English major, who is graduating after serving one semester as editor.

John Hudson, 22, a political science and English major from Bedford, N.H., was chosen Executive Editor. He replaces Lise Zeiger as editor of the paper's editorial page.

John DiPalazzo, a senior journalistic studies major, was selected news editor. Previously a reporter and copy editor for the Collegian, DiPalazzo has worked this semester at the Berkshire Eagle in Pittsfield, his hometown. He replaces Mike Foley, who is graduating after directing the paper's news operations this semester.

Douglas Muise, 21, a junior English major from Marshfield, was named arts editor. He replaces Andrew Gordon who resigned after a semester producing the arts page and magazine supplement, The Other Voice.

Other new editors are Gus Martins, named black affairs editor in place of Phil Jennings, who is going on internship; and Billy Shea, who will take over as sports editor for the departing Jim Floyd.

IDB TIPS

We Are The Reason

by David Meece

As little children we would dream of Christmas morn
And all the gifts and toys we knew we'd find
But we never realized a Baby born one blessed night
Gave us the greatest gift of our lives

As the years go by we learn more about gifts
And giving of ourselves and what that means
On a dark and cloudy day a Man hung crying in the rain
Because of love, because of us

I've finally found my reason for living
It's in giving every part of my heart to Him
So that in all that I do, every word that I say
I'll be giving my all just for Him, for Him

We are the reason that He gave His life
We are the reason that He suffered and died
To a world that was lost He gave all He could give
To show us the reason to live!

He is my reason to live!

Merry Christmas!
In the love of Christ,

Auto repair co-op to expand service

By MATTHEW BERMAN
Collegian Staff

In an effort to continue running, the student-run College Auto Repair (CAR) co-op is offering expanded service.

In addition to allowing students to rent their tools and expertise for a small fee, CAR will fix students' cars themselves for less money than a commercial service station would charge.

This added service is designed to increase CAR's business, which has been in financial difficulties since its inception ten years ago.

Like all student run co-ops, CAR is supposed to be financially self-sufficient, but unlike the other co-ops, it is the only one that must pay rent. CAR pays rent for space in the Campus Center Garage, a total of $1200 paid to the University Parking Office for eight parking spaces.

For the last three years CAR has been trying to get a waiver from the Office of the Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance to exempt it from this rent.

"It is no secret that they're not doing as well as we'd like them to do," said Gregg Sanders of the Student Economic Development Office. He added that since CAR started this new service a profit is beginning to show.

Through a promotion campaign next semester, Sanders hopes to attract new business to all the co-ops, especially to CAR.

"CAR provides a good service but they're not getting people there. They're hidden away in the Campus Center Garage and aren't visible to most students. We're hoping that next semester's promo will clear this up," Sanders said.

Under the regular CAR service, students can work on their cars with co-op tools and be helped by co-op mechanics for five dollars per hour. CAR mechanics also work on the students' cars themselves for eight dollars an hour. Private service stations charge $25 per hour for the same work, according to Mike King, CAR's chief mechanic.

"A man came in here last week and got a tune-up for sixteen dollars instead of fifty," said King. "There isn't much demand for people working on their own car."

"We the undersigned believe that the Music Room is essential study space and should remain that way. While we support the concept of bringing computer terminals into the Campus Center, we feel that they should be located in a low use meeting room in the complex. The Music Room should and must remain a study/reading room."

The Campus Center/Student Union Board of Governors would like to thank the more than 2000 students who have signed our petition to the Campus Center administration. Because of your interest, we feel that we have demonstrated that the Music Room is of tremendous importance to the thousands of students who use it every semester. But you should know the following:

* It has been the Campus Center administrations policy not to replace headphones as they break in the Music Room. This is so they can make the claim that few students use the music listening side of the room.

* Although the Board of Governors has proposed the use of either room 178 or the recently vacated Scheduling Office for the computers, the administration has informed us that they will still be put into the Music Room. We don't think that students should be forced to choose between study space or computer space. There is plenty of room in the Center for both.

Before you go home for the holidays, stop by the Office of the Campus Center Director, Mr. William Harris, in room 822, or call him at 545-0585 to let him know that you like the Music Room as it is, computerless. Mention to him that you feel that it's the least he can give you for the $88. you pay to the Campus Center per year. Students pay a considerable amount of money to the whole Campus Center. We should have a considerable say as to how the money is spent.

Happy Holidays

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Why a loss of innocence?

Christmas time brings with it many different feelings — joy, excitement, anticipation and most importantly innocence. Not the type of innocence associated with being naive, unaware of the cheap commercialism which tragically rares its head every holiday season.

Neither is it the type of innocence that blindly accepts the sincerity of a President's Christmas message when 10 percent of the country is unemployed. It's the type of innocence an eight-year old exudes while happily sitting on Santa's lap, excitedly going over his or her list for that Christmas. It's the innocence that you feel when first walking in the door upon arriving at home after finals, plopping down on the couch in front of a roaring fire and swapping old stories with other members of the family. Many at UMass just don't experience these types of feelings at Christmas time anymore — why?

John F. Hudson

After traveling through four years of the maze called UMass, many a senior will tell you that Christmas at the University is a contradiction in terms. Unlike the time before college, when life was slower and much less complicated, gift giving involved choosing what to buy because of quality, not price. Yes, most students are broke, but at Christmas it seems your monetary worth plunges to new all time lows. When you have to take out a loan to get that personalized placemat set for the family, you know times are tough. And when you do finally get the time to shop between studying and tying up all your loose ends traditionally found at the end of the semester, it is suddenly December 23rd.

Finals around Christmas don't help much either. As kids, the countdown of days began in early December, and the month seemed to pass at a snail's pace. Now that we have finals to look forward to, December is an academic blur, littered with papers, overdue lab reports and uncompassionate professors. Spending five night in a row, holed up in Goodell, researching that thirty-five page paper on neo-classical architecture in ancient Greece is not exactly comparable to hay rides on a crisp winters evening, or goin' out for some Christmas cheer with old friends from home. As far as this type of Christmas innocence is concerned, I get the feeling I checked it at the door of my first final back in freshman year.

The last kind of innocence it seems so many people lose as they enter college is the worst loss. Its the type of feeling you get when you hear or see an act of kindness during the yuletide season. This time of year, seems to remphasize the importance of compassion. I suppose its because so many people will receive so little during this time of excessive giving. Yet most of us get so buried in our own problem, our own headaches and our own ventures that we lose sight of the true spirit of Christmas and the holiday season. It isn't out of selfishness — if anything it stems from our own unfortunate situation of being students at a special time of year, a time when a breather, or chances to sit back and truly relax are few and far between.

Unlike youth, the innocence so many of us have lost about Christmas is regainable. By cutting through the workload, stretching above the cynicism and putting off the headaches, maybe innocence can be regained. I certainly hope so. Merry Christmas.

Registration an unsound policy

The resumption of Selective Service registration has been one of the more pointless endeavors in recent American history. What started as a meaningless gesture has deteriorated in to sheer beaureaucratic travesty. Weak attempts at checking compliance, like buying mailing lists and using the Social Security rolls have yielded pitiful results. And selective prosecution of vocal non-registrants, many of them idealistic, religious or otherwise exemplary youth, has been a curious national spectacle. Now, to complement these ill conceived measures, we have the Solomon Amendment.

Joe Levendusky

The Solomon Amendmnent, tacked on to appropriations legislation that Congress passed last spring, stipulates that draft age men must show compliance with Selective Service registration in order to receive Pell Grants, College Work-Study, Student Loans and other federal financial aid. The rationale is that if one is unwilling to make a small gesture of service to our country, then he shouldn't count on it for financial assistance. But there is much that this argument overlooks.

The Amendment would make non-compliance a prerogative of the advantaged. Enough has been done in Washington to create a privileged caste. It falsely assumes that most non-registrants are likely to be students. It unfairly shifts the financial burden of enforcing compliance to the nation's colleges and universities, who are already hurting financially. Few in education think that it can be fairly and efficiently implemented. And most importantly, enforcement of federal law does not belong to the jurisdiction of financial aid officers; it is the duty of the courts.

The problem behind all of this is that Selective Service registration does not have enough support in the general public, or in Congress, to secure sufficient cooperation or funding. Yet few in government have the courage to admit that it is a bad idea and should be dropped. So we attempt to force compliance through half-baked schemes. It is this type of irresolute policy, and not an unwillingness to match the Russians bomb for bomb, which makes the United States appear weak to foreign observers.

If registration is so important — if it is vital to our security, then Congress should fund a comprehensive verification procedure and prosecution of non-registrants should be taken up vigorously and without preference. Should Congress be unwilling to authorize this, then registration should be discontinued. My guess is that Congress would not fund such harsh measures because the public would not support them. Despite a conservative trend, post-Viet Nam Americans are concerned that politicians might march their sons off to war needlessly.

Selective Service registration was a bad initiative because it was instituted without first testing the political waters, both domestic and international. It has been no deterrent to the Soviets. And reports of both the residenta Task Force and the General Accounting Office pose serious questions about the effectiveness and fairness of the system. The Solomon Amendment will not save anyone political face; it simply preserves bad policy.

Conservatives and liberals alike should oppose the amendment because it is bad governmental procedure, and because the money it will cost would be better spent for its original purpose — education. Legislation will be introduced to Congress this spring that would repeal the Solomon Amendment. Petition drives and other lobbying measures will be used to back repeal. These efforts deserve the support of all those concerned with sound government policy.

Lack of student input is fault of apathetic students

To the Editor:

In response to Dave McCarthy's editorial series on the SGA, I'd like to point out some mistakes in facts and assumptions. It is Mr. McCarthy's opinion that the transit system, DVP, UPC, Index, Legal Services, Area Governments, Academic Affairs, University Judiciary, WMUA, and Student Activities Office are the only essential services on this campus because they are used by the majority of students. Should a group be denied funds on the grounds that they are a minority, particularly when they contribute to these funds?

Whose fault is it that there is lack of student input into the funding process? Mr. McCarthy states the Senate Budget Committee members are appointed by a process "more mysterious than that of the Soviet Politburo." Here's the mysterious process: The Nominating Committee of the Senate makes recommendations to the Senate for the Budgets Committee in public. The entire SGA must approve, deny or amend the Budget Committee. Therefore, any student who takes the time to become a senator has input as to who is on the Budget Committee. Also, every student can voice their opinion at SGA meetings over the budget process or any other topic for that matter.

Lack of student input is the fault of apathetic students, not the fault of students who take the time to represent their fellow students. The SGA is here to serve us, and I feel it does the best it can. No matter how democratic a process may be, there is always someone who will complain.

Stolen camera destroys a faith in human nature

To the Editor:

I would like to relate to you a recent incident that took place on this campus, that I think the university community should be made aware of. The incident took place in the final Chemistry 107 lab of the semester. At the beginning of the lab one of the teaching assistants, a Mr. Alan Ang, asked his section of students if they would mind posing for a photograph, for his own remembrance. The students, somewhat surprised, gladly obliged. The picture was taken, after which all involved returned to their task at hand. Mr. Ang went about his teaching duties as usual, checking assignments, and trouble-shooting the various student mishaps that so often occur in laboratory work. It was in the course of performing these duties that Mr. Ang unsuspectingly placed his camera and grade book down while he assisted a student. As you have probably guessed, his 35mm camera was stolen less than a few steps from where he was standing, and more than likely by one of his own students.

I cannot describe to you the shock, dismay, and hurt on that man's face when he realized his camera had been stolen. I don't know what hurt more, the loss of the camera, or the knowledge that one of the students would think so little of him.

I was shocked, hurt, and am outraged to think that one of my so called "fellow students" would have done such a thing. I know this is a large university attended by all types of people, and Mr. Ang probably should have been more aware of his possession, but the fact remains that there is a thief or thieves among us, that should not be allowed to disgrace us all. If you know any information regarding the camera, please do the right thing and inform the authorities and restore all of our faith in human nature.

Chemistry prof.'s allegations absurd and slanderous

To the Editor:

The letter "Reid's racial and sexual discrimination suit absurd" (Collegian Dec. 8) is absurd. What the author implied that the minority in this campus, even if discriminated or mistreated, should not bring any suit against the authority while the nation's unemployment stands 10.4 percent is not related at all. $1,000 per week paid to Ms. Reid has nothing to do with the racial and sexual discrimination. In fact, if he wants to complain about his being overqualified and underpaid, he should speak up to his department head, not to slander Ms. Reid.

Setting the record straight on our Santa spoof

To the Editor:

What? No Santa Claus? ("Guess What, Virginia, Got a Surprise For You" Friday, Dec. 10th) How dare the Collegian print such fabrication! Certainly this is irresponsible journalism at its worst. How could the author possibly know whether Santa exists? He's not majoring in Santa Clausology, is he? As Francis Church of the New York Sun wrote in 1897, "Nobody sees Santa Claus, but that is no sign that there is no Santa Claus. The most real things in the world are those that neither children nor men can see...he lives, and he lives forever. A thousand years from now, Virginia, nay, ten times ten thousand years from now, he will continue to make glad the heart of childhood." I believe the Collegian owes both a retraction and an apology to its many deeply offended readers.

The road to getting there

The snow fell softly from a deep, black sky, and the moon, round and full, illuminated the already pure, white ground. It was all so quiet and comforting. It was the first snow and it was almost Christmas.

John B. Kenney

As he walked back from the library he played with the crisp night air, watching his breath float away as steam. The snow under his feet, packed tight from many other footsteps, made that sound. He wasn't sure what it sounded like but he knew what it was. It was simply the sound of your boots stamping the snow down, even tighter.

His hands were buried deep in his pockets. And his pants, as always, were too big. The collar of his long, black coat was pushed around his neck, breaking the wind that tried to bite him. His face was red and he winced, as if to tighten his face from the cold.

As he walked he thought about what was ahead of him. It was going to be hell. Everything from long homework assignments to review sessions to overdue papers. And, as if he didn't have enough pressure, he was on academic probation. "How will I ever get through this," he thought.

The semester had gone so badly. He was struggling in most of his classes. So much work, so much to think about. And Christmas, his favorite time, was almost here. "I have to be here to the last day!"

His roomate had no finals, only papers. He, his best friend, would leave that weekend. He would have no one to talk with. And his girlfriend had broken up with him weeks ago. As she put it "I need someone more mature." He hated her fiercly, but would always love her. "Christmas," he thought, "What should I pray for?"

In the distance he saw something moving, in the still cold night. The chapel bell had just sounded eleven times. As he got closer, he saw someone , in a wheelchair, trying to get up a steep curb. He stopped, at a distance, and watched.

The person a young man, was trying to get up a steep curb with enough momentum to make it to the door of a building, which was on a slight incline.

So much work, so much to think about and Christmas, his favorite time, was almost here.

He tried to make it up, and failed. He tried again, and almost fell. The snow had made an icy bank at the base of the curb. The snow, wet and cold, was freezing against the rims where he clasped his hands. He tried again, failing again and paused to regain his breath. He backed up several feet and made a run at the curb. He thrust his upper body forward, throwing his arms forward at exactly the same time, with a grace and skill that comes only with practice and determination — up onto the sidewalk. And he was gone.

He stared and pictured this man and his wheelchair. He thought, strangely, about Christmas, and burst into tears, he knew, in shame.

SGA politics not what they seem

Student Government President Jim Murphy has a proposal on the floor of tonight's senate meeting, which would eliminate the option of having two people run for the office, limiting it to one. This, supposedly, would reduce "personality conflicts" and in turn, the power of the student body.

Hannah Hosom

The president's office is divided by tradition into on and off-campus duties. The one working on campus must organize committees dealing with all aspects of student life, attend senate meetings and other related events, while the other fills a seat on the Board of Trustees. Murphy seems to feel one person can do the job.

Murphy himself has been very busy. He was not present at last week's senate meeting — the reason for his not being punctual was that he was at the Trustee meeting. If, on the other hand, there was a co-president, both functions could have been carried out. There needn't be a personality conflict — the two rarely have to see each other, if they are doing their respective jobs.

Former co-President Larry Kocot has said that in his capacity as trustee, meetings on campus, in Worcester and in Boston took over 30 hours a week. And that's half the job description? What happened to a student president?

One less president could therefore mean a reduction in efficiency of 30 hours per week. An example of how that lost time could be utilized is apparent in the situation concerning the search for a new student attorney general.

The president, as well as the affirmative action officer, have been too busy to meet and determine a yes or no answer on whether the Attorney General Search Committee met constitutional procedures. The two have had over 48 hours to meet from the time Murphy got the results until last week's senate meeting. The position had been under search for over three months, and is probably the most important apolitical office a student can hold. Too busy for a simple yes or no answer on a unanimous decision?

Many senators expect the president may nominate the present acting attorney general, although she was not determined to be qualified enough by the committee the senate chose. Her assistant, the unanimous choice of the committee, is in the office more than she is, knows the issues better, and writes most of the decisions that have come out of the office. And there has been no time to appoint him.

The president's job is demanding, and simple time commitments often conflict. More seriously, important motions, and in the case of the attorney general, are being left at the wayside while ones like narrowing the president's office are receiving full consideration. It's time the senate stands firm, make it's own decisions by questioning its officers and recognizing what moves are pure politics and which are good for the students.

The Who succeeds on stage

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

The Who may be old, tired and ready to call it quits, but any of the 13,500 people who saw them in Worcester Saturday night would have a hard time believing that assessment.

For what is supposedly the final time, the Who breezed into the new Centrum to say goodbye to the two generations who have grown up with music. Throughout their two-hour set, the Who played 24 of their most popular songs from their 20-year career, pleasing both those who have followed them since the 1960s beginnings and the younger set (who seem to have dominated the audience), familiar with only the most recent releases.

Beginning with their old anthem, "My Generation," played with its usual ferocious intensity, the band thrashed and their way through music from most of their albums, several from their newest release, "It's Hard." Backed by a superb light show, the concert became, as usual for the Who, a bombardment of the senses. Thanks to the acoustics in the Centrum, the music was clear and understandable as the foursome backed up by a keyboard player/percussionist/singer/guitarist.

Peter Townshend, the band's lead guitarist and [illegible]

The Who — Roger Daltrey, John Entwistle, Kenny Jones, and Pete Townshend — played at the Centrum Saturday night.

If it all sounds like an obligatory Who performance, with all the usual material and antics, don't be fooled. The Who were not simply going through the motions; they were putting out. Townshend played with ferocity, often drifting into solos of power chords, backed by the ever-present, never wavering bass line of John Entwhistle. Lead singer Daltry was also in fine form, singing as powerful as ever and swirling his microphone precariously around the stage. Drummer Kenney Jones also played well, although he remained relatively inconspicuous in the background.

Unlike previous shows in past years, there was no smashing of guitars, no destruction and mayhem at the end. As the Who finished their encore, a powerful version of "Twist and Shout," Townshend leapt in the air several times, accenting his final chords. When the music stopped, the band simply put down their instruments, walked to the front of the stage and in classic Who fashion, stood together and bowed. As they filed off the stage, Townshend remained, looking out at the crowd, as if transfixed with the outpouring of emotion from the fans. Then, slowly, he turned and followed the others. It looked as if Pete Townshend did not want to say goodbye, but had to.

But since the days, as Townshend greeted [illegible]

[illegible] Who fans. I was surprised and upset when the Who announced that they would be their final tour of at least America. It'll rob us of the biggest and best band in the world was quitting now that they had made it big. I had hoped they would change their mind.

But now I've changed my mind. The Who have provided much to the world of music and the people who believe in that music. They were innovators, paving many new trails in music, while offering the most energetic live concert available. Now, that energy expended on the road is wearing them down. The Who say they will not bisband, just stop touring. Perhaps this decision is best. They can still record, still make new inroads, while remaining healthy and alive.

The Who will play their final North American concert in Toronto, Canada, this Friday night. When they leave the stage, they will return to England, possibly for good. Hopefully, we can still expect powerful albums from the band in the years to come, but the intensity of their live act may become just a memory. For area fans, last Saturday's Centrum show will not be a memory which will easily fade.

Pleasure Dots "spec"-tacular

By DOUGLAS MUISE
Collegian Staff

The Pleasure Dots are a little-known Northampton based rock quintet that will be making an essential appearance Thursday night at the Wok Lounge, Hadley. Their name sounds like an oblique line from a Dickenson poem, but the band's innovative pop musings are anything but obscure. In fact, accessability is one of the band's strong points.

The band — Annie Tomolonius on vocals, Frank Schartz on lead guitar, Steve Ellis on rhythm guitar, David Chevan on bass, and Albert Fortin on drums — has been together since 1980, but they've yet to establish a popular following. According to David Chevan, a lot of clubs in the area are hesitant to book local bands and hence, they haven't really gotten a lot of popular exposure.

"It's not always easy to get local gigs, because there's a lot of bands out there competing for space — especially on big nights like Friday and Saturday. And on off-nights, clubs would rather play disco than risk losing money with a band," he said.

The Pleasure Dots draw from a wide diversity of musical forms including pop, rockabilly, R&B, and Motown. But first and foremost, they're a dance band, Chevan insists.

"The emphasis is on the beat. There's nothing we like to see more than people dancing," he said.

"Most bands try to blast the audience away, but we try to get the people into the music," he said.

THE WHO: MAXIMUM R&B
By Richard Barnes
St. Martin's Press
$12.95 (paperback)

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

For what has been billed as their final tour of North America, the Who have employed many stunts designed to publicize their farewell and generate some income.

For the first time, a major business has underwritten the cost of a rock and roll tour. The last concert, this Friday in Toronto, will be shown live via closed-circuit television in bars and clubs throughout the country. The band has appeared in commercials and on posters. In every city they've played, the Who have been greeted with enthusiasm. Indeed, a proper send-off for one of rock's greatest and oldest bands.

In addition to the onslaught of publicity, Richard Barnes, Pete Townshend's former art school roomate and long-time confidant of the Who, has penned a book on the band's career.

Dubbed an "authorized" biography of the Who, the book, a large paperback, is packed with hundreds of photos and posters throughout the band's career, many in full color. The text, broken into years and scattered between pages of pictures, features many insights into the band's history, particularly the early years, and provides a look into the minds of Townshend and the other band members.

While not technically well-written, with passages often jumping from time to time with no warning or introduction, the book is written in a colloquial, conversation style. At points, it seems as if Barnes himself is sitting down and talking about the band while showing off his scrapbook of Who memorobilia.

This book, however, is not an expose on the order of many books about famous performers. The Who: Maximum R&B includes interviews with many people associated with the band, including its members, managers Kit Lambert and Chris Stamp, and others who have worked with the Who throughout their 20-year career. Barnes himself offers many recollections, including a fascinating story about how, in the midst of a small beer and dope party with band members in 1962, he jokingly suggested The Detours, as they were originally called, change their name to The Who. The name, of course, stuck, despite a short time when they were known as The High Numbers.

Photographically, the book includes many live concert shots from their early years to the present. Among the most powerful shots in the book, however, are a series of photos of Keith Moon taken at a party he was attending the night he died. Moon's deterioration really showed in these pictures, particularly one disturbing shot showing the drummer speaking to Kenny Jones, the man who would eventually replace Moon after his death.

This book provides a unique look at the Who and enables fans to take a look under the gloss of publicity and see who Townshend, Daltrey, Entwhistle and Moon really were. It's not all complimentary; not all an expose. It's a fair and balanced look at a band and the human beings who made it one of the most powerful forces in music history.

And as if all that weren't enough, the book even includes a flexidisc with Townshend's original demo recordings of two of his most famous songs, "My Generation" and "Pinball Wizard." These rarities will surely please any Who fan who thinks they have everything the band has recorded.

If there is ever to be a complete, accurate, fair history of the band, this book is it. It's a study of four people and those around them, of 1960's Britain and the music industry in general.

The Messiah has come and his name is

Y'SHUA

Y'shua? Yes, that's his name. You've never heard of him? Sure you have. He's commonly called Jesus. Y'shua is the Jewish way to say his name. He's very Jewish, you know.

Think of his lineage - Abraham, Isaac, King David, down to his mother Miryam. Think of the place of his birth - not Stockholm or Rome but Bethlehem - as promised by the prophet Micah in 720 BCE. Think of the way he came - before the birth. Joseph, his foster father, was told by an angel:

"And you are to give him the name Y'shua because he will save his people from their sins."

Now many would have liked it better if the angel had said, "And you are to give him the name Santa because he will bring you presents."

Many people would rather not hear about sin. But it's a fact, it's a condition, it's a problem that needs a dramatic solution.

The condition of humanity (call it sin if you have the courage) has been lamented for centuries. Oh yes, there has been progress, but it's the wrong kind of progress because now a few desperate men pushing a few buttons can annihilate all life on this problem-ridden planet. Is that a solution?

God promised a Messiah, a deliverer, a problem solver. And if there's anything more difficult to accept than the fact of sin (yours and ours) it's the idea that God solves our problems. But he can! He can make us want peace, give us hearts to care about one another, relieve guilt, mend broken homes, give meaning to our lives and diminish the din of the 20th Century with the music of his love.

God's dramatic solution: Y'shua. That news is going to make some people unhappy.

Maybe you don't like Jews. Maybe you have a grudge against Christians. Maybe you don't like your sins, yourself or the God who made you. Sorry about that, but it doesn't really change the truth. Before you dismiss what should be good news, remember that the truth might be so simple that it was overlooked by the people who should have known.

The need was and is, due to the "human condition" (just in case you're choking over that three-letter word "sin") God's salvation is a sacrifice, a sin bearer, a savior, a mediator, a mentor, a Messiah.

Y'SHUA IS ALL THAT AND MORE!

We hope that our message doesn't annoy you. The purpose of this statement is to help you discover the love, joy and peace we have found in the Messiah.

If you want to know more about Y'shua, we're eager to tell, delighted that you want to know, and happy to help you find what we have found.

There is much more we could say and want to say, but it would take a book. God gave a book and it's called the Scriptures, but we have a book that can help you understand what the Scriptures say about Y'shua. It's published by Moody Press of Chicago for $2.25, but if you don't believe in Y'shua it's free as a gift from Jews for Jesus and our friends who want you to have what we have. And that includes love, joy, peace and hope for a beautiful future.

So don't be bashful. We can't put big statements like this in the newspaper every day. Respond now and let us reach out to you. Skeptics are welcome.

This semester's Collegian staff sends greetings to all!

In 1870, the Massachusetts Daily Collegian was founded as Aggie Life. Its purpose is now to provide the University community with a daily newspaper that gives students an informational account of events pertaining to them. It is also an educational tool that offers an opportunity to acquire newspaper experience and obtain some credentials for those with a professional interest in the news media.

Since the paper was first published, University of Massachusetts students have volunteered countless hours to ensure the production of the Collegian, often with little or no recognition. The Collegian Board of Editors would like to thank this semester's keeps of the 112-year-old institution.

EVEN STRAIGHT A'S CAN'T HELP IF YOU FLUNK TUITION.

Today, the toughest thing about going to college is finding the money to pay for it.

But Army ROTC can help—two ways!

First, you can apply for an Army ROTC scholarship. It covers tuition, books, and supplies, and pays you up to $1,000 each school year it's in effect.

But even if you're not a scholarship recipient, ROTC can still help with financial assistance—up to $1,000 a year for your last two years in the program.

Relief! Green leads in first UM win

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

Ahh! Relief, I thought to myself as time finally ran out in last night's 76-72 Minuteman win over Bentley College. A victory at last.

In fact, I was so happy that I walked into the lockerroom of the victors and though the entire team wasn't there, I did go around to each player there, one at a time, and say thank you that I didn't have to write another story about a Minuteman loss. I had wanted to finish up the semester with a winning story.

The last player that I got to was Edwin Green, who was chatting with another reporter about his 15 point, six rebound, and four blocked shot performance.

"You're happy," he said with a look of relief that made me feel guilty for even feeling down about the situation at all.

Edwin Green has decided to put everything together this year. You can see it in his performance. He moves better, he shoots better and most importantly he wants the ball. And he said he was not pleased with losing.

"After those games I had to go back to my room quietly," he said with special emphasis on the word quietly. "I had to open my door quietly (again with the lingering last word) because I didn't want anyone to see me because I was embarrassed."

And just when I thought I could almost grasp what he was telling me, he added:

"And the next day, I have to go to classes," with a look that tells you he means he's glad the Curry Hicks Cagers are on the winning track.

It wasn't exactly an artistic success, this win over a Bentley College team that was 5-2 coming into the game, but a win is a win, especially to an 0-4 squad.

UMass pulled out to an early 12-4 spread as four of the five starters, Donald Russell, Ron Young, Green, and Horace Neysmith each picked up a couple of points with Green leading the way with a couple of jumpers and a serious dunk from a nice Neysmith feed.

The Minutemen refused to allow Bentley to slip back into the game, something they would do a couple of times before this night was out, as the Falcons put together a quick run of fast break buckets by Jerry Cizynski (16 points on the night) and Don Wilcenski (22 points), an announcer's nightmare tandom in the name department if a college team had one.

Bentley pulled within three at 20-17 and the yoyo game began. UMass pulled out to 30-21 on six John Hempel points and a Hempel assist to Neysmith.

But Bentley came back to within five at 37-32 just before a Darryl Carter double pump jumper sent the Minutemen into the lockerroom for halftime with a 39-32 lead.

The 3221 fans who had witnessed the first half appeared to be a little sluggish. They seemed to be looking for a knockout instead of just a 15 round decision.

A knockout was not in the offering last night, however, just a knockdown.

The Minutemen started to click as the big men started to get position for some easy layups and Russell, who also chipped in 15 points on the night, dropped in a few jumpers from outside. And UMass led 55-44.

Bentley came back and made a game of it, but never really picked up the big points when they needed them so that a couple of Carter free throws were able to secure the game.

And when Edwin Green went home last night, he was noisy.

Remembering the 1982 UMass fall sports highlights

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

And so the end has arrived. Time to cram for exams (anyone have the notes for Food Science and Nutrition?), pack for the trip home to beautiful Revere, and say goodbye for now (and to some for good) to good friends. The whole affair can leave you a bit misty-eyed.

But, this is the sports page, so enough of this sentimental stuff. Sports, what a semester, what a good time, what a great group of athletes.

The fall of 1982 saw the final season of UMass tailback Garry Pearson. To list all the honors that Pearson picked up would take too too much space. The memory I will carry of Garry will not be of a great run or pass reception though. No, I will always remember the emotion of the Minutemen and their fans (and what truly great fans) as Pearson left the field for the final time.

"Garry, Garry, Garry," the crowd screamed as teammates and coaches alike embraced one of the greatest athletes ever to go to UMass.

Almost as emotional was the way the band simply refused to yield the field after the AIC game had ended. Fans stood and swayed to the music as Alumni Stadium tried in vain to forstall the inevitable, the end of football season, the last for seniors.

The afternoon was, for this senior, one of the most unbelievable ever witnessed. I even stayed in the press box extra late in an effort to be the last fan to leave (oh no, misty again).

The field was dark as I jumped the fence and crossed at the 50 yard line (something I'd always wanted to do) made a fake move just like Pearson usually did, and headed out of the stadium.

Just as I was about to leave though, I heard two booming voices. The noise came back inside the stadium on the field so I returned.

There, on the very spot where I deftly alluded an imaginary defender, were Freddy Reid, ex-captain of the Minutemen, and his friend Tom Kenney, alias the Turkey Man. They were playing one-on-one football, for real. I had to smile at them. Some people are able to keep the game going forever, I thought. You just had to like those big bears as they battled it out on the field of honor.

It was a semester that saw Marlene Susienka, a truly wonderful person and athlete, totally dominate the women's golf scene under the watchful eye of her number one fan and coach Jack Leaman. The only shame of it all is that golf is not really a spectator sport so Marlene didn't get all the acclamations she really deserved.

The soccer team almost pulled off a tremendous upset over the defending national champions, the University of Connecticut, only to lose in overtime. What a heartbreaker. They were winning until a UConn goal with only :23 showing on the clock sent the contest into overtime.

The women's soccer team headed for the national playoffs but came away empty handed, unless you remember that almost all of that squad should be back next year.

And through it all, athletes competing in the name of the University of Massachusetts gave of themselves in an effort to be the best that they could be. It wasn't always enough but it was still an effort that the fans had an opportunity to appreciate.

The fans, oh the fans, without whom a lot of the hard work of athletics would not be completely worth it. It is a give and take relationship, athletes and fans. Both add something to the other and vice versa.

And, for my part, I must thank both groups. I was given the privilege of seeing teams rally and fans scream in a unified type of battle that is unique to college campuses. It was a true pleasure to oversee the sports pages (though most of the professors haven't seen me in a while). I thank you all. Merry Christmas, Happy New Year, good luck.

Editor's note: this is Jim Floyd's final note as editor of the Collegian sports pages. He did the best he could. Bye.

Women hoopsters overcome turnover plagued Vermont

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

BURLINGTON, VT — Paced by the Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week, Karen Damminger, and freshman Barbara Hebel, both with 20 points, the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team snapped a two game losing streak with a sloppy 63-59 win over the University of Vermont, last night.

It was sloppy, turnover filled ballgame and UMass came out on top thanks to a healthy ten point advantage in rebounding. Vermont turned the ball over 30 times, while UM coughed it up 25 times.

Massachusetts, though, held a 49-39 rebounding edge and frequently grabbed the second shot or rebound.

UMass, now 4-6, opened the game with a 8-4 lead before UVM caught up and the score see sawed back and forth for the rest of the half. Vermont pulled slightly ahead to lead by two at the half, 38-36.

The Minutewomen came out strong in the second half but could not break away from the Catamounts and both teams continued to trade baskets and cough up the ball.

UMass made their move with 13 minutes left in the game as Damminger scored the first six points of a nine point Minutewomen spurt. Center Kelly Collins added three as UM outscored Vermont 9-0 to erase a 47-44 UVM lead. UMass led 53-47 and the maroon and white never trailed again.

Pesky Vermont would not die, however. The Catamounts fought back to even the score at 57-57 with 3:42 to go in the game. But baskets by Collins, Hebel, and Damminger iced the victory for UMass.

This was a game that the Minutewomen had to win following losing efforts against Boston College and Fairfield to regain some confidence and a winning feeling.

The way UMass won the game wasn't pretty, but it got the job done. It was a ragged ball game and full of turnovers. Both teams shot only 40 percent from the floor and UMass foul shooting was very near poor at 47 percent. Foul shooting will be one area the Minutewomen must improve in or it will sooner or later cost them a game.

The rebounding was the difference in the win and Collins and Damminger led the way for UMass with ten each. Rebecca Kuchs grabbed eight. Last week, Damminger was named the Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week for her stellar performances in the Harvard, BC and Fairfield games. Damminger scored 57 points in the three games, an average of 19 points a game.

Massachusetts will resume play in January with a two game swing through New York that will take them to West Point and to Syracuse and the Carrier Dome. UMass will also tackle UConn, Yale, Holy Cross, St. John's and Boston University among the top teams they will face.

It will be a time for the Minutewomen to gain experience and poise that should pay off in February.

LAST NIGHT'S BOXSCORE — Marlene Susienka 0-0-0, Rebecca Kuchs 2-0-4, Wendy Ward 3-0-6, Karen Damminger 9-2-20, Kelly Collins 4-1-9, Maria Chomentowski 0-2-2, Jerrie Bernier 1-0-2, Barbara Hebel 9-2-20

Provost to retire, pursue academics

Loren Baritz will step down from his vice chancellor's job in June.

By JIM FINKLE
Collegian Staff

Provost Loren Baritz will resign from his position in the University of Massachusetts administration beginning in June to resume duties in the UMass history department and write an analysis of the Vietnam war.

Baritz's retirement from the administration was announced on Tuesday by Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey in a memorandum to vice chancellors and academic deans.

"Provost Loren Baritz has indicated his desire to return to the faculty, resigning as Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs and Provost effective June 1, 1983," Duffey stated in the Jan. 25 memorandum.

In addition to working in the history department, Baritz will serve as a special adviser to the chancellor and will aid in the transition of a new provost, according to the memorandum.

"I will be available to the chancellor," Baritz said, noting that he and Duffey have not yet decided exactly how much time he will spend as a special advisor.

Baritz said he has planned to write an analysis of the impact of the Vietnam war on American life since the 1960s, and said he decided over the summer that "it has to be done now," because he sees a "redeclaration of the cold war," with the election of President Reagan.

"The attitude of Reagan is a throwback to the attitudes that created (the U.S.) involvement in Vietnam," Baritz said last week.

Baritz said he began to write his book, which is tentatively titled Backfire: Vietnam and the Americans, over the summer. He said he works on the project during the evenings.

"I found myself being tugged between personal writing in the evenings and working in the office," Baritz said. He said he has already written a 60-page overview of the book.

Duffey requested Richard S. Stein, a professor from the chemistry department, to head a search committee to select a new vice chancellor for academic affairs and provost.

Stein said the committee, which will be formed during the next few weeks, will be composed of faculty, administration, and student representatives.

A veteran member of the searches for the dean of engineering, and dean of natural sciences and mathematics, Stein said he has met informally with Baritz and Duffey to discuss the search.

He said he thinks the search will not be completed by June, and that it will be necessary for the chancellor to appoint an acting provost to serve in that position until a permanent provost is appointed.

Although Baritz is stepping down from his duties as the administrator overseeing academics at UMass, he said he considers his future position to be "a step up."

Both Duffey and Baritz said Baritz's resignation was prompted only by his need to pursue his writing. Both administrators were finalists in the search for a chancellor that eventually selected Duffey.

Baritz's literary agent is currently negotiating a publishing contract with about a dozen New York publishers that Baritz said have expressed an interest in publishing the work.

He said he plans to sign a contract within the next month. The book will be published in the Spring of 1985.

Draft registration mandatory for aid recipients

By JOHN DiPALAZZO
Collegian Staff

Thousands of University of Massachusetts men will have to prove they have registered for the military draft by July 1, or lose financial aid next semester.

According to federal regulations that were signed into law on Sept. 8, but which have only recently been implemented by the Reagan administration, all male college students must show they have registered for the draft in order to receive federal student loans or grants.

Arthur R. Jackson, director of the UMass Financial Aid Office, said the number of UMass students that would be affected by the regulations could be conservatively estimated at "several thousand."

"This will be the most crucial financial aid issue of the spring semester," Jackson said.

The law was an amendment to the Defense Authorization Act for 1983, and states that local draft boards must provide documentation of registration to students upon request.

The government estimates that about 500,000 men between ages 18 and 22, who must register with the Selective Service System, have failed to register. Some nine million men of draft age have registered. It is estimated that the new rules will effect two million men throughout the country.

The new regulations will affect Guaranteed Student Loans, PLUS auxiliary loans, National Direct Student Loans, Pell Grants, supplemental grants, work-study programs and other programs, which distributed more than $8.5 billion last year.

To comply with the law, students are required to sign a statement certifying that they have registered when applying for federal financial aid. They must also supply proof of their registration.

Jackson said the amount of paperwork handled by the Financial Aid office would double as a result of the rule.

"It's definitely going to complicate everything," Jackson said.

"We don't know if the Selective Service Boards are adequately staffed to provide adequate documentation that these people have or have not registered for the draft," Jackson said.

He said that the Financial Aid Office has not received directions from the U.S. Department of Education concerning the enforcement of the directives. Once the Financial Aid Office learns exactly who the law will affect it will notify all affected students at UMass before the end of the semester, Jackson said.

A lawsuit seeking to strike down the law has been filed in the U.S. District Court in Minnesota by the Minnesota Public Interest Research Group and the American Civil Liberties Union against the Selective Service System and the U.S. Dept. of Education.

The American Civil Liberties Union and the Minnesota Public Interest Research Group contends that the law discriminates on the basis of age, sex and wealth. In addition, the American Civil Liberties Union charges that the draft law itself is invalid because a required 60-day notification period was not given when registration was announced by President Jimmy Carter in 1980.

El Salvador military aid is protested

18 protesters are arrested at Army recruiting office

By AMY JENNESS

NORTHAMPTON — Singing "we shall not be moved," 18 people were arrested for trespassing and carried out of the U.S. Army recruiting office on King Street last Tuesday night.

Calling themselves the "U.S. Out - 18," members of the Northampton Committee on Central America began the sit-in at 2 p.m. on Tuesday. The action was to protest President Ronald Reagan's recent announcement that human rights conditions in El Salvador have improved.

"We're here to show our outrage at President Reagan's certification that progress has been made with regard to human rights in El Salvador," said Jean Caian, a spokesperson for the group.

Sgt. Kevin O'Leary, the recruiting officer for Northampton, arrived at his office and found the demonstrators sitting on the floor singing protest songs.

Outside, supporters stood along King Street holding banners and protest signs saying "U.S. Out - 18" and "U.S. out of El Salvador."

By 7:30 p.m. when the Northampton police arrived, the crowd outside had reached about 25 people. Supporters said they came to the demonstration because they heard about it on the 6 p.m. news or because their friends had called them.

One protester, Peter Bohmer, a University of Massachusetts graduate student in economics, said he had been involved in the protest against the Vietnam War and he saw a lot of parallels between that and the situation in El Salvador.

"The main thing stopping Reagan (from goint to war in El Salvador) is the people," Bohmer said. "The people are saying no, we don't want another Vietnam."

O'Leary said he had not called the police but had called his supervisor who, in turn, had called his supervisor. They decided to close the office at 6 p.m. and if the protesters would not leave, then the police would be called to remove them.

At 6 p.m., O'Leary asked the group if they were going to leave and they refused. The protesters were again asked to leave when the police arrived, and they again refused.

They were given a third chance o leave when O'Leary asked each person individually before the police removed them one by one from the circle they had made by locking arms.

Upon removal from the group, each person went limp and was carried to the hall to be handcuffed. Some volunteered to walk to the paddy wagon from the second floor office while others were carried by the police.

The 10 men were taken to the Hampshire County Jail and the eight women were taken to Northampton Police Headquarters. They were arraigned Wednesday in Hampshire County District Court.

As protesters were handcuffed and carried away, O'Leary shook his head and said, "There must be an easier way. We tried to avoid antagonistic people here. We gave them every chance to leave and they didn't."

O'Leary said he thought the protesters could have found another place to hold their sit-in. Focusing on the Army was unfair because the Army has free speech rights too, he said.

"I may not agree with these people, but I'll defend to the death their right to express themselves. I don't think they feel that way about the Army," O'Leary said.

No one was hurt during the protest or arrest and the only damage to the building was a crack in the hall wall, which a police officer accidently hit with the butt of his gun.

The Northampton Committee on Central America also organized a 24-hour candle light vigil on Jan. 24 and 25, as well as a guerilla theater presentation in downtown Northampton at noon on Jan. 25.

Students planned picket

By JOHN DiPALAZZO
Collegian Staff

A group of University of Massachusetts students planned to picket the Holyoke office of U.S. Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R-Mass., to protest U.S. involvement in El Salvador.

As of press time, the outcome of the protest itself scheduled for Jan. 27, could not be learned.

In a telephone interview before the planned protest, Sinaan Koont of the Western Massachusetts Latin American Solidarity Committee (WMLASC), which organized the picketing, said the group planned to picket outside Conte's office between 10 a.m. and 12:30 p.m. on Jan. 27.

WMLASC, a UMass Recognised Student Organization (RSO), along with other RSO's and other groups, expected to draw more than 50 people at the rally, Koont said.

The protesters will deliver an open letter to Conte's office, which will ask Conte to take steps against U.S. military involvement in El Salvador.

Specifically, Koont said the protesters will ask that Conte initiate legislation to overturn U.S. certification stating that there has been an improvement of human rights in El Salvador. By law, human rights certification is needed before U.S. aid can be sent to foreign countries.

Protesters will also demand that Conte and other legislators stop all military and economic aid to El Salvador "because the funds are used to exterminate the population," according to WMLASC's statement of purpose.

They will also demand that Congress transfer funds from the "bloated" U.S. military budget to create jobs for the unemployed.

"There may be a move afoot in Congress to (stop aid to El Salvador) and we want Congressman Conte to be in the forefront of this," Koont said.

When contacted by telephone on the day before the protest, a representative from Conte's Holyoke office declined to comment on the rally.

Duffey makes Reid decision, puts off others

Vice chancellors to be announced

By JIM FINKLE
Collegian Staff

With the announced resignation of Provost Loren Baritz, Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey will have the unique opportunity of appointing three of the four vice chancellors at the University of Massachusetts.

In addition to eventually appointing a successor to Baritz, who will retire in June, Duffey is currently reviewing finalists for the positions of vice chancellor of administration and finance, and vice chancellor of University relations and development.

Last February a search committee, chaired by retired professor Carl Swanson, submitted a list of seven finalists for the administration and finance position to former Chancellor Henry Koffler. A permanent vice chancellor was not appointed at that time because of Koffler's resignation.

Because the Amherst campus was without a permanent chancellor until this October, the vice chancellor position was not filled. As a result of these delays, Acting Vice Chancellor John L. DeNyse has served in that capacity for over 19 months.

Duffey, who has been reviewing the candidates for more than three months, said he is not yet ready to announce a permanent vice chancellor. He acknowledged the inconvenience and stress that having an acting vice chancellor for such a long period of time placed on DeNyse, as well as his staff, and said he would make the appointment as soon as possible.

Duffey is also reviewing the finalists in the search for a vice chancellor for University relations and development.

The search committee for that position, which will be filled for the first time, submitted a list of finalists, Duffey said.

Search committee chair Harry T. Allan, dean of the School of Business Administration, said the committee found two qualified candidates for the job. Allan declined to release the names of those candidates.

Duffey said he is reviewing the recommendations of that committee and will make an appointment after meeting with the candidates and checking their references. He said he has no specific deadline for making this appointment.

Five semi-finalists each visited the campus for two days in December for a series of interviews with students, administrators, professors, the chancellor and the search committee.

Those candidates were: Jose Barron, executive director of El Congreso Nacional de Asunton Colegiates (an organization that serves Spanish speaking students and faculty in higher education); Regis Ebner, vice president for development at Duquesne University; Harold Jackson, vice president for public relations as Tennessee State University; David S. Leiderman, director of government relations of the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies of New York; and James M. Shea, vice president for University Relations at Temple University.

The vice chancellor for University relations and development will oversee all relations between Umass and external communities, including alumni, government, local and media relations.

The vice chancellor for administration and finance is responsible for campus construction, overseeing grants and contracts, managing the transportation and mail services, coordinating food services and the Campus Center, and operations at the Physical Plant.

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey (above) recently named Marie M. Reid (below) to work on a special assignment at the School of Education. Duffey will also fill vacancies for three vice chancellor positions.

Reid undertakes special assignment

By JIM FINKLE
Collegian Staff

Marie M. Reid began a new assignment at the University of Massachusetts this month, ending more than four months of negotiations with the administration regarding a change in her duties at UMass.

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey announced on Jan. 15 that Reid would take leave from her duties as head of the budget office to work on a special assignment at the UMass School of Education.

Reid "will assist in the development of a consortium of New England colleges and universities to serve non-traditional students," according to a statement issued by Duffey. While working on the assignment, Reid will continue her graduate studies at the UMass School of Education in the area of education administration, according to the statement.

Reid was unavailable for comment at press time.

Duffey's announcement marks the end of negotiations with Reid that received criticism from the University community.

These negotiations began when Duffey transferred final authority over the budget to Acting Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance John L. DeNyse, removing Reid's final control over the budget. Reid hired legal counsel, saying that the change, which she perceived as a "demotion," was against UMass personnel policies.

After a series of negotiations, Duffey offered Reid a one-year leave of absence with full pay, during which time she would complete her graduate studies at the UMass School of Education. At that time, Reid signed a five-year contract with the University, that will begin in April, when her previous contract expires.

The controversy began when Reid told the Collegian she intended to seek other employment while on leave, breaking her contract with the University, that will begin in April, when her previous contract expires.

Because of pressure from faculty and students, Duffey called off that deal and began another series of negotiations that resulted in Reid's new assignment.

Reid will assist in structuring financial and budgetary systems for the consortium, which was begun and planned by the UMass School of Education. She will continue to receive her annual salary of $52,500 while on assignment.

The consortium is designed to help those other than the "typical" student gain access to higher education, according to Professor Robert Wellman of the School of Education.

The program is patterned after two similar programs in other states, Wellman said. Reid served as director of one of those consortiums in Westchester County, New York, he said.

"It's a fortunate coincidence," he said of the timing of events that made Reid available for the position.

Associate to the chancellor Bonnie R. Strickland also commented on Reid's experience for the assignment. "It's a happy accident that Marie Reid and the consortium happened to be available to each other," Strickland said.

Strickland said the chancellor "wants to return to the post of director of the Office of Planning and Budget and hopes she will return," after the assignment is completed.

Although Reid has said the administrative restructuring was the impetus for her threatened lawsuit, Strickland said Reid has dropped plans for legal action.

UMass ranks in top 10

By TAMI BORTON
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts graduate departments of linguistics, chemistry and sociology were ranked among the top ten in the nation on the basis of reputation or publications, according to a recent study, "An Assessment of Research Doctorate Programs in the United States."

"This is a recognition of the progress the University has made in academics, research and scholarship over the last decade," Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey said last week. "It's a magnificent achievement."

Recognition of these departments is attributed to the faculty, according to Samuel F. Conti, dean of the UMass Graduate School. "The UMass Graduate School, including programs not ranked in the top ten, have shown remarkable improvement over the past ten years," Conti said.

The linguistics department was tied for eighth in its field on the basis of its reputation.

"The program has an excellent record for professional success after graduation, slightly better than MIT, which was ranked first in the poll," Elisabeth O. Selkirk, acting linguistics department head, said. The fact the department is relatively new may have prevented it from ranking higher, she said.

The quality of teaching is the primary reason for the chemistry department's acclaim, according to George R. Richason, associate department head. "The quality of teaching at both the graduate and undergraduate level is very good," he said.

The chemistry department was ranked ninth in its field on the basis of publications. "I am pleased our faculty is prolific enough in the quality of their research to be recognized in this vital area of evaluation," Richason said.

The number of publications is an excellent criteria for the amount of research done, Richason said. "We have a large number of professors recognized nationally and internationally for their research," he said. "The fact our peers recognize the quality of our faculty's accomplishments is a good mark for the quality of the department."

The sociology department was also ranked ninth on the basis of its publications. 'We were very lucky in that we received federal dollars for our studies making us able to conduct high levels of research," Peter H. Rossi, director of the Social and Demographic Research Institute said. "This is because we are good," Rossi said.

"But the whole faculty is strong and has a good reputation for research, important for both policy and discipline," he said.

UMass was one of only three Massachusetts universities recognized by the study, the other two being Harvard and MIT.

The study was sponsored by the conference board of the Associate Research Council, and ad hoc group consisting of the American Council on Education, the National Research Council, the Social Science Research Council and the American Council of Learned Societies.

Barry L. Del Castilho's slight southern drawl reveals that he hasn't been in Amherst very long.

Del Castilho, Amherst's new town manager, explained that spending ten and a half years in Durham, North Carolina has caused him to pick up the accent even though he is a native of New Jersey.

After being chosen for the position of town manager in September, Del Castilho left his position of city manager in Durham. He arrived in Amherst in mid-December.

Del Castilho said his first reaction to Amherst was its "cold", otherwise he said Amherst has a slower, nicer pace compared to Durham, a city of 100,000 people.

Durham had serious financial problems, Del Castilho said, and Amherst's financial situation is better.

"Durham is not in a good position," Del Castilho said. "We're very lucky here."

Del Castilho said municipal support of child care is not strange to him. He said he would support some kind of town funding of child care. In Durham, only a child care referral service is given town funding, Del Castilho said.

Rent control does not exist in Durham, and Del Castilho said that he has no knowledge of it.

Overhaul of the personnel system will be Del Castilho's first priority while in Amherst. The personnel system for part time workers is inadequate and rules for salary increases and employee benefits need to be established, he said.

Del Castilho said he also wants to look at renovation or replacement of the police and fire stations and renovation of the Town Hall.

"The needs are fairly obvious. A new police station is needed. The current fire station is a long way from South Amherst," Del Castilho said.

Del Castilho said his most difficult challenge in Amherst has been understanding the system. He explained that in Durham, the city manager and the city council are the only governing bodies. In Amherst there many other committees, he said.

"I'm finding out how much authority I have, what I must take to the Selectmen and the role of the finance committee...I'm getting to know the town's history, the personalities and getting a general orientation," Del Castilho said.

Del Castilho graduated from Brown University in 1969 and received a master's degree in Public Administration from Syracuse University.

After graduating from Syracuse, Del Castilho began as an administrative assistant in Durham. He held increasingly more responsible positions in Durham, and in 1980 became the city manager.

The duties of Amherst's town manager include administering the business of the town and assuring that policies made by the Board of Selectmen are followed by the departments and agencies within the town.

Search begins in town of Amherst for assistant's job

By NANCY GONTER
Collegian Staff

Town Manager Barry L. Del Castilho has begun the search for a new assistant town manager and hopes to choose the official by March 1.

The assistant's job will be advertised in national publications at the salary range of $24,227 to $31,253. The position was vacated by Christine H. Hart, who left the job on Dec. 22.

The assistant's job description will be similar to the one established by former town manager A. Louis Hayward. Some of the assistant's responsibilities include the administration of town personnel, coordination of the human service operating budget and capital program and participation in town purchasing activities.

One of the major responsibilities of the assistant town manager under Hayward's description was collective bargaining. Del Castilho has deleted this responsibility from the description.

A Holyoke management consultant firm, Sheridan and Associates, was hired to conduct collective bargaining with the town's labor unions, at a cost of $10,800.

The new assistant town manager will replace colective bargaining duties with new responsibilities, including the management of town building leases.

Regents to vote on union, admission issues

By KEVIN BOWE
Collegian Staff

The passage of uniform admission standards for state public universities and colleges, and the successful completion collective bargaining negotiations with employee unions are two of the major issues the state Board of Regents of Higher Education are facing in 1983, according to James Martin, Chairman of the Board.

But, these moves have sparked opposition from many segments within higher education, including many students, union leaders and UMass administration officials. ministration officials.

The Regents have released a preliminary admissions proposal by which public universities would require incoming students to have a combined SAT score of at least 800 and a high school class rank of the upper 40th percentile, or a combined SAT score of 850 and a class rank in the upper 60th percentile. For students to be accepted to state colleges they must have SATs of at least 750 and a class rank in the upper 50th percentile or a combined SAT score of 800 and a class rank in the 60th percentile.

Under the proposal, which would be fully implemented in four years, a certain percentage for the incoming students would be waived from these requirements. The state community colleges would continue their policy of open admissions.

The plan has come under criticism from many individuals and groups, including UMass President David C. Knapp, the Massachusetts Black Legislative Caucus and members of the UMass/Amherst student government.

Critics fear the policy could bar motivated but disadvantaged students from aspiring to a four-year college education. Those students accepted who are waived from the admission requirements will be "stigmatized" as a result of the special exemption, according to these critics.

The Regents maintain that minimum standards would improve the quality of public higher education without limiting access. Institutions will be asked by the Regents to submit a detailed plan for improving minority enrollments under the new admissions proposal.

The Regents are holding a public hearing tomorrow regarding the admission proposal. They will also hold a two-day conference at UMass with the Trustees and presidents of the state colleges on the matter. At their March meeting the Regents expect to pass a minimum admission standard policy, Martin said.

As part of their collective bargaining strategy, the Regents are moving to consolidate 16 separate labor contracts serving the blue collar and service employees at the 27 public colleges and universities into three or four negotiating units.

This move has generated unprecedented unity among the labor unions at UMass and between the unions and the UMass administration. All vigorously oppose the Regent's proposal.

In the past the UMass administration has conducted labor negotiations, and the loss of this authority will erode the administration's power over the operation of the University.

The unions fear the consolidation process will delay pay raises for its members, which could result in employee rejection of the unionized system of obtaining pay raises.

During January, members of two UMass unions that would be affected by the possible consolidation, the University Staff Association and AFSCME Local 1776 signed a joint petition to the Regents opposing their plan.

John B. Duff, State Chancellor of the Board of Regents, defended the union merger, saying it was "equitable, efficient and economical." Jay LaPorte, a staff aide for the Regents said similar job positions at different state colleges or universities pay different salaries because the salaries are negotiated under different contracts.

As Chancellor Duff moved into the final phase of reorganizing public higher education in Massachusetts, which began in June of 1980, he strengthened his position when the Regents announced this month that Duff's contract had been extended for another three to five years.

"John has been very courageous in supporting the long term academic interest (of public higher education in Massachusetts) even though some of his academic colleagues are opposed to them. This (Duff's reappointment) has the strong support of all the Regents," said Martin.

Duff said he was looking forward to completing the major reorganization goals for establishing minimum admission standards, rationalizing the budget process for the public higher education system and negotiating collective bargaining contracts.

"I've had a very strong feeling of being in midstream," Duff said at the press conference announcing his reappointment.

Instructions on financial aid form distribution are provided on a sign outside the University of Massachusetts Financial Aid Office in the Whitmore Administration Building. Forms will be available to students this week.

Financialaid forms are now available

By JOHN DiPALAZZO
Collegian Staff

Financial Aid Forms for the 1983-1984 school year will be available to students during the first week of February after a delay of some two months.

Because of the delay, students will have only one month to complete the forms, which must be sent to the College Scholarship Service by March 1.

Last year, more than 20,000 University of Massachusetts students applied for financial aid. About $51 million in federal, state and private student aid was distributed through the UMass Financial Aid office last year, according to Arthur Jackson, director of the office.

At UMass, financial aid forms will be delivered to all students living in dormitories during the first week of February, Jackson said. Other students can pick up forms at the Financial Aid Office in the Whitmore Administration Building, at the Whitmore information desk or at the Campus Center information desk, he said.

Distribution of the forms was delayed because of a lawsuit filed by the National Coalition of Independent College and University Students against the U.S. Department of Education. The suit, which was resolved on Nov. 15, charged that the Department of Education allowed two private financial aid services to charge fees for processing applications for federal aid.

Jackson said he hoped the late distribution of forms would not cause problems among students. He said the form can be completed in 45 minutes to one hour.

Accordig to the Financial Aid Office's normal timetable, students entering UMass next fall will be notified of their awards at the beginning of April and all other UMass students will be notified by the middle of May, Jackson said.

However, he said the awards are dependent upon notification by the federal government of appropriation levels for student aid programs. Last year these notifications were late and juniors and seniors were notified of their awards in June.

Students who submit their forms by the March 1 deadline will receive "the best consideration they can, given the variables," Jackson said. Forms submitted by students after the deadline will be dealt with only after all forms received by the deadline have been processed, he said.

In terms of funding, Jackson said the level of funding for student aid should be stable for 1983-1984 "from all indications so far."

"It still doesn't mean things look bright," Jackson said.

The outlook for student aid funding would be darkened by a proposal by President Ronald Reagan that would cut all funds for the Supplementary Educational Opportunity Program, the National Direct Student Loan program and the State Student Incentive Grant program.

Final Congressional approval of all student financial aid legislation should come by late spring, Jackson said.

Federal student aid has been funded thus far by temporary "continuing resolutions" by Congress. Any real changes in funding levels would come when the final legislation is passed.

"The real fireworks" will start after the State of the Union address, during which the president outlined all his budget proposals, Jackson said.

"We're not resting easy until it (the legislation) gets passed," Jackson said.

A bill that would have increased funding for state student aid programs was killed in the Ways and Means Committee of the state House of Representative during the last legislative session. Jackson said he hoped similar legislation would be introduced in the present legislative session.

UMass employees and their families get tuition waivers

By NANCY GONTER
Collegian Staff

All full-time employees of the University of Massachusetts and their immediate families are now eligible to attend school without paying tuition.

This new policy, recently adopted by the State Board of Regents of Higher Education, will allow full time employees from all the state's community colleges, colleges and the universities to attend the schools tuition-free.

"It is an appropriate and timely act by the regents," Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey said last week. "It is a benefit that makes the University an attractive place of employment for all members of the staff."

"It is an appropriate and timely act by the regents," Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey said last week. "It is a benefit that makes the University an attractive place of employment for all members of the staff."

Among those eligible for waivers, which will be effective immediately are more than 5,000 employees at the Amherst campus, more than 900 maintenance, clerical, technical and trade employees at the community colleges and a number of other workers.

The number of people who will take advantage of the tuition waivers is uncertain, but Chancellor of Higher Education, John B. Duff, estimated the cost for the spring semester will be $300,000 across the state.

Undergraduate tuition for state residents at the University is now $1,129 a year and graduate school tuition is $1,434 a year. The tuition at the community colleges is $634 yearly for state residents.

Employees at UMass have said they are pleased with the new benefit. Union and employee leaders said the new policy will help the University recruit employees and retain those already employed.

Kathleen Murray, president of the University Staff Association (USA), said the new policy will alleviate the problem of employee turnover.

USA represents the clerical and technical workers at UMass. There is a 25 to 33 percent turnover in that group each year, Murray said.

"We think it's absolutely wonderful. We were glad to work with the other groups," she said.

Murray noted that originally the policy was only going to include undergraduate tuition waivers. She said they were happy to get both graduate and undergraduate waivers.

Before the new policy, members of USA were allowed to take four free credits a semester. Under the new policy, part time workers, who were not granted tuition waivers, will be allowed to take seven free credits, she said.

Bruce Laurie, the president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP), the union for faculty members and librarians, said he was pleased with the tuition waivers.

The exclusion of retired people and married children in the campus guidelines for the tuition waivers caused some objections, Laurie said.

The new policy's major intent was to aid in the retention of current staff and faculty and to improve the University's ability to recruit new faculty and staff, Laurie said.

Returnable cans are placed in storage by Jerry Russell at Russell's Package Store in Amherst. The bottle bill took effect in Massachusetts on Jan. 17.

New returnable bottle law causes large price increase

By RICHARD NANGLE
Collegian Staff

Now that the controversial Bottle Law has taken effect in Massachusetts, it's possible the drinking habits of University of Massachusetts students could change drastically.

Added costs, along with deposits, have hiked the price of a case of Budweiser at Four Seasons Package Store on Route 9 in Hadley from $9.99 to $12.70. Of the extra $2.71, $1.20 is due to the five cent deposit now required on bottles and cans less than 32 ounces, another 30 cents pays for a deposit on the cardboard box the beer is purchased in.

All area package stores are charging deposits on the cardboard boxes bottles must be returned in. Excluding the deposits, the price of beer has increased 15 percent at Four Seasons.

Speculation among package store employees is that students will turn to kegs as a more economical and efficient form of weekend entertainment. At Four Seasons, a quarter keg of Budweiser sells for $22 (excluding deposits on the keg itself and the tap). While two cases of Budweiser now sell for $25.40, a quarter keg is equivalent to four and a half cases of beer.

Only off-campus students can legally take advantage of the price difference because students in residence halls are forbidden by University regulations to bring kegs into dormitories.

Dave Mazzo, wine manager at Four Seasons Package Store, attributes two-thirds of the rest of the price hike to an across the board increase that would have been implemented whether or not the law was passed. Bottling companies say the other third of the increase will pay for handling costs, Mazzo said.

But Mazzo is not buying the bottling company's explanation.

"I don't think it (the price) would have gone up without the bottle bill," he said.

In order to make room for the returned containers, the store made some changes. Those things that did not sell very well had to be cut," Mazzo said.

The same holds true for Spirit Haus Liquor Store on Route 9 in Amherst, even though the store purchased a trailer for returned bottles.

"There are so many different types of imports and we don't have much storage space in the store," said Spirit Haus clerk Derek Jackson. "We have a fairly large store and we still don't have the space."

And things may get worse for Amherst area package stores.

"When the semester starts I think there are going to be a lot more problems," Jackson said.

But Jackson foresees a new trend that the Bottle Law has begun.

"A lot of kegs went out of here last weekend. People can get together and buy a quarter keg and save $10 or $15," he said.

Jackson said he sees the high increase as an example of bottling companies punishing Massachusetts residents for supporting a law the companies spent millions of dollars to defeat.

"Most people who voted for the Bottle Bill probably didn't think the price would go up this much. Our sale prices are higher than the original prices were," Jackson said.

Elise Jacques, staff coordinator for the UMass Public Interest Research Group (UMassPIRG) said a poll taken before the November election referendum showed people supporting the bill even when told a price increase was likely.

"It doesn't surprise me this is happening although it makes me very angry. I think people know that the Bottle Bill is not costing that much," Jacques said.

The hikes, in fact, are unnecessary since in other states with bottle bills it has been proven that approximately 10 percent of the bottles are never returned Jacques said. In Massachusetts this would result in $15 to $25 million in revenue for the bottling companies, she said.

Shirley Chisolm talks on economy, civil rights

Kennedy, Johnson gave blacks hope'

By CRIS SCHUSTER
Collegian Staff

Due to President Ronald Reagan's "simplistic and failing policies," the progress of black people has been halted in this country, former Presidential candidate Shirley Chisholm said during a recent lecture on the "U.S. Constitution and Black Americans" at Hampshire College.

Chisholm, who will be teaching "American Political Systems" and the "Social Roles of Women" at Mount Holyoke College this semester, said that under President Reagan, "the federal commitment to right the wrongs of yesteryear" is gone.

"It was the federal government that brought about civil rights. The federal government has always been the protector of all people of America," she said.

"The blood, the sweat and the tears of blacks lies deep in the soil of America. Black people want no more and no less than any other group that came to these shores looking for freedom," she said.

Chisholm said after the Kennedy and Johnson administrations, blacks "dared to have some hope in our hearts that our children are not going to be doomed. We should have known that all the gains made under Kennedy and Johnson were too good to last.

"I'm not here to say the white people are not suffering. I never thought I'd live to see again in America thousands of people standing in line to get a meal," she said. "The number of people who have lost their homes in the past year is incomprehensible. You can't believe what is happening to America.

"At this moment the foundation is being laid for yet another generation denied their hope of the American dream," she said. "People's tolerance is being reached."

The Revolutionary War, in which more than 3000 Blacks fought against the British, "was a battle for a principle and that principle was liberty," she said. "As in the Civil War, thousands of blacks soldiers fought in World War I, World War II, the Korean War. In each conflict blacks dared to think the struggle would mean freedom," she said.

Blacks have a heritage unlike any other group on this continent, Chisholm said.

"This unique heritage has been our burden and our blessing."

No other group has been able to withstand "the insults, abuses, penalties the way blacks have been able to resist all these years and still laugh as a people," she said.

Shirley Chisholm, former United States Representative and presidential candidate, spoke on many issues facing the federal government in a recent speech at Hampshire College.

Reaganomics may bring us together'

By CRIS SCHUSTER
Collegian Staff

At no other time in United States history has there been a greater need for hope than there is now, said a former 1972 Presidential candidate during a recent speech.

Shirley Chisholm, a member of the U.S. House of Representatives for 13 years and the first black woman to be elected to Congress, told an audience of more than 300 people at Hampshire College that she was "going to tell it like it is" in her speech on "Congress at Work."

"President Reagan has taken this country on an intellectual trainwreck," Chisholm said. "If nothing else, I firmly believe Reaganomics might bring us all together."

"I believe Congress is the last best hope. There is a higher caliber of younger, smarter, better educated, more articulate people than ever before," she said.

However, Congress has become a "clumsy elephant" unable to pass even minor bills without several days of debate, she said.

Another problem with Congress is the salary representatives receive, she said. She strongly favors pay raises for the members of Congress, she said

"In order to get good people, quality people, you have to pay. You get what you pay for. "The U.S. House of Representatives is moving in the direction of the Senate where only the very rich can afford to be there," she said.

Chisholm, the congressional representative of the Bedford-Stuyvesant and Bushwick districts of Brooklyn, announced in February 1982 she would not seek re-election.

"I never intended to spend all my creative years in politics," she said. "I'm a very young, vibrant middle-aged woman. I want to organize and get ready for 1984."

Chisholm said she decided not to seek re-election because she felt with Reagan in office she could accomplish more out of Congress, and she wants to help organize women's campaigns for 1984. She is currently not planning to run for an office, she said.

Another problem with congress is constituents don't care anymore, she said.

"We let our President get away with so much," she said. "Everybody is fast asleep. Nobody is moving. When we wake up it might be too late. In a democracy, you don't get anything by sitting back and whining and complaining. Wake up!"

"We cannot in good conscience say it is only President Reagan who is responsible," she said. "Silence gives tacit approval."

"Liberty means responsibility. That's why most men dread it." — George Bernard Shaw

Computer art is developed by UM professor

By SCOTT HERSEY
Collegian Staff

High technology and art: to some, especially those at a large state university such as the University of Massachusetts, these terms might seem mutually exclusive.

Because high technology programs have been the steady recipients of increased funding while some art programs have suffered, there have been divisions between the two camps.

UMass art professor Robert Mallary has combined his natural talent for art and design with an acquired knowledge of computer programming to produce art with a computer.

Mallary creates different designs and sculptures — sometimes in 3-D — using the University's Control Data Cyber 720 computer.

"I've always been interested in art and technology," said Mallary, who teaches a class in computer graphics.

In simple terms, what he does to create these designs is program the computer to draw lines along different planes.

For example, to draw a circle there are three different variables — the vertical and horizontal location of the center of the circle, and the radius of the circle itself.

By varying each of the three variables; he can produce circles of different shapes and sizes.

Though Mallary works on his designs on a computer terminal in his office in Marshall Hall Annex, the final products are sent by telelphone to the University Computer Center in the Graduate Research Center. There they are transferred to paper using a graphic plotter.

The plotter, according to Mallory, is a machine with moving pens and paper, which may be operated by a computer program. Although it commonly uses only four colors — blue, green, red and black — Mallary says he has occasionally been able to sneak in, on an off day, and substitute some of his own colors in the machine.

Mallary said he first became interested in computer graphics when he arrived at UMass in 1967.

At that time, computers were just beginning to become popular tools, and Mallary says he was curious exactly how a computer could be used for art purposes.

So, he decided to learn about computers, and for the next five years he spent a great deal of time in front of a terminal trying to figure out how they worked.

It was after he took a summer course in the FORTRAN computer language that it all came together.

"I love to program now," he said. "Its an addiction."

"You have to learn to discipline yourself to work with the machine," he said. "You have to be patient, exact and have a logical mind."

"The computer doesn't make mistakes," he added, "only the operator does."

Since then, Mallary has become somewhat of an expert in the field of computer aided design, having created the first computer generated holograms — 3-D designs generated by lasers.

"I got a grant to work on the project," he said. "I spent the summer at the Hampshire College holography lab making holograms generated by computer."

"We were perhaps the first ones in the world to pioneer this field," he said.

He has also been chosen to give the keynote address at an April computer art conference at the University of Nebraska.

"It's fascinating," he said. "I wouldn't be in it if I didn't find it fascinating."

Massachusetts student aid legislation failed to receive statehouse approval

By JOHN DiPALAZZO
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — A bill that would have taken unclaimed returnable bottle deposits and put that money toward student aid died in the state legislature during the final days of its last session.

The bill, Senate No. 2126 was initiated by Sen. John Olver, D-Amherst, and would have also delayed implementation of deposits for soft drink bottles until March 31.

The amount of money that would have been collected under the bill has been estimated at between $10 and $25 million.

Stan Rosenberg, Olver's administrative assistant, said the bill had been approved by the Senate, and was passed onto the House of Representatives, where it was amended. The Senate accepted the ammended version, but when the bill went back to the House it was amended further. The bill died when the clock ran out on the legislative session on Jan. 3.

A related bill filed by Olver, Senate No. 2099, which would increase the present amount of state student aid from $19 million to $44 million also failed to gain approval. This bill, however, had no funding source, though it was assumed funding would have come from Senate No. 2126, if both bills become a law.

Rosenberg said Olver has filed Senate No. 2099 again for the present legislative session, though he did not know whether the section of No. 2099 again for the present legislative session, though he did not know whether the section of No. 2126 that would have raised the money for student aid would be refiled.

The part of the bill that would have delayed the implementation of the bottle bill for soft drinks, Rosenberg said, was a "moot point." The bottle bill, encompassing soft drinks and beer, took effect on Jan. 17.

Rosenberg said the legislature was "pretty well committed" to passing a bill to increase financial aid since the Senate passed No. 2126, in different forms, three separate times.

Duffey announces two staff changes

By JIM FINKLE

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey announced the hiring of one senior staff member and the departure of another during January.

Bonnie R. Strickland will serve as associate to the chancellor while Richard W. Noland, chairman of the Chancellor's Working Group on Long Range Planning, will go on sabbatical after completing that assignment, which lasted more than two years.

According to Duffey, the working group finished its work when it submitted its draft of the Long Range Plan for the administrative area last month.

Duffey said he will review the document and make changes where necessary before submitting the final draft to faculty and students for comment.

The working group submitted the first half of the plan, which dealt with academics, last March. That plan met great opposition from the UMass campus and was eventually withdrawn, rewritten by Provost Loren Baritz, and approved by the Faculty Senate, Undergraduate Student Senate, and other campus bodies.

Duffey clarified Strickland's duties. "She's going to share the full range of responsibilities in the office," Duffey said. He said she will participate in executive staff meetings.

Strickland, who is stepping down from her position as chair of the UMass psychology department, said she will serve as a senior adviser from the faculty to advise the chancellor on the workings of the campus.

She said she has been appointed for a one-year term, and that Duffey plans to make this a continuing position, revolving the administrators chosen to fill the job.

Strickland will receive an annual salary of $60,500 for her duties in the chancellor's office, a sum she said is only $1,000 above her salary as a department head.

In addition to serving on many faculty committees at UMass, Strickland has been chair of the National Council of Graduate Departments of Psychology, chair of the professional forum of the American Psychological Association, and is currently president of the Division of Clinical Psychology of the American Psychological Association.

Born in Louisville, Kentucky, Strickland attended Alabama College, graduating with highest honors. She received both her masters and doctorate degrees from Ohio State University.

Many offices to be elected in town election this spring

By NANCY GONTER
Collegian Staff

The opportunity for students to have a voice in Amherst town government could come their way in the Spring town elections.

Eighty openings for the Amherst town meeting will be available in the elections. Ten seats are available in each of the town's eight precincts.

Town Meeting, which starts at the beginning of May, will decide such issues as rent control, town funding of the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority (PVTA), and funding of the emergency shelter.

Town Meeting is the legislative branch of town government. Laws are passed and money is appropriated by Town Meeting. The authority to change or adopt town bylaws is also given to the Town Meeting.

Town Meeting members serve three year terms. Two hundred and forty Town Meeting members are elected from the precincts. Members of the School Committee, Board of Selectmen, and the Town Clerk, Town Manager and the Town Meeting Moderator may also vote in the Town Meeting, bringing the number of voting members to 256.

This year the Town Meeting begins May 2, and should run for several nights. The Town Meeting is held each year on the first Monday in May, and special town meetings can be called at any time. As a matter of policy, the Selectmen call a special town meeting each fall.

People interested in running for Town Meeting member must obtain nomination papers from the Town Clerk, collect 10 signatures from registered voters in their precinct, and return the papers to the clerk by Feb. 22.

Other elected positions to be filled in the election include two three-year terms on the Board of Selectmen, two three-year terms of the School Committee, and one two-year term on the Housing Authority. The positions of Town Meeting Moderator, Elector for the Oliver Smith Will, Jones Library Trustees, and one seat on the Redevelopment Authority will also be on the ballot.

Nomination papers for these town offices can also be obtained from the Town Clerk and must be submitted by Feb. 4.

Selectman Frederick Steinbeck has already announced his intention to seek re-election. Steinbeck, who was elected in November of 1981, will be running for his second term. The other available seat on the Board of Selectmen is being vacated by Francesca Maltese. She has chosen not to seek re-election.

Steinbeck, who had indicated earlier this winter he would not seek re-election, said some town residents had convinced him his fiscal conservatism is needed on the Board. Steinbeck said he wants to be involved in several projects, including a planned new police station.

The Selectmen are responsible for setting overall policy for the town and for supervising the town government. The Selectmen are considered the counterpart to a city mayor by the Massachusetts Constitution.

Amherst TV cable service discontinues three channels

By NANCY GONTER
Collegian Staff

Area cable television subscribers have expressed their anger in recent weeks over the loss of three channels at the end of December.

Times Mirror Cable Television of Pioneer Valley cut the channels without warning because of a mid-November ruling by the Federal Copyright Royalty Tribunal. The ruling would increase the copyright fees paid for programs over distant signal broadcast stations.

The Amherst Calblevision Committee has requested the Board of Selectmen, who issued the cable license, call a public hearing on the subject and suggested the town take the company to court if it fails to pay rebates.

According to Town Manager Barry Del Castilho, there is a legal question whether Times Mirror is in violation of their license. The license allows the cable company to air 20 channels, but it has not been determined whether the company must have the 20 channels on the air or whether it must have the capability to carry 20 channels, he said.

The three channels will definitely be replaced, according to August LaVelli, general manager of Times Mirror. The decision of which channels will replace the deleted ones has not yet been made. A presentation of the replacement channels will be made to the Selectmen by Feb. 15, LaVelli said.

The three channels that were cut are Channel 9 (WGN) from Chicago, Channel 56 (WLVI) from Boston, and Channel 11 (WPIX) from New York. Of the three, only one was deleted from the 12 channel basic service. Two were deleted from the seven-station "tier service" that was added by Times Mirror last July.

The signals were replaced with a printed message stating that the channels had been discontinued because of a recent government ruling.

Under the tribunal ruling, the cable company would be required to pay 3.75 percent of their gross revenue for each distant signal they carry above the set limit of two. Cable companies may carry up to two distant signal channels without incurring any cost.

Ramones, Phil Collins highlight UPC '83 season

By TAMI BORTON
Collegian Staff

The Union Program Council, (UPC), will be presenting five concerts this February to kick off the 1983 concert series.

The Hot Trumpet Repertory Co. will play Feb. 15 in the Student Union Ballroom. Tickets are $3 each for UMass students and $4 for the general public. They will go on sale Feb. 4 at Union Records, For the Record, and all Ticketron outlets.

Phil Collins will appear in concert with his band, the Fabulous Jacuzzi's and the One Neat Guy band on Feb. 17 in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. Ticket prices are $10.50 and $11.50 for students and $11.50 and $12.50 for the public.

The Ramones will play in the Student Union Ballroom on Feb. 23. Tickets go on sale Feb. 10. The price is $8 for students and $10 for the public.

Tickets for both Phil Collins and the Ramones will be available at Union Records, For the Record and the Fine Arts Center. There is a limit of two tickets per person for these shows.

The Solo's and Duo's concert series will be presented in the Cape Cod Lounge free of charge. Ronald Shannon Jackson will play on Feb. 11, J.R. Mitchell and Walter Davis, Jr. on March 4, Jackie and Renee McClean on March 11 and Abby Lincoln on April 15.

The Blues in the Bluewall series will cost $3 per show. J.B. Hutto and the New Hawks will play Feb. 12, Koko Taylor will play March 5, and James Cotten on April 9.

All shows begin at 8pm.

The first UPC organizational meeting will be held on Feb. 8, at a location to be announced. Help is needed in the areas of security, publicity, hospitality and stage crew. All interested are welcome to attend the meeting or stop by the office, Student Union room 406, Spierer said.

Permanent room undecided for computer terminals to go in Campus Center

By NANCY GONTER
Collegian Staff

No permanent location has been decided upon for computer terminals that will be placed in the Campus Center, but the Board of Governors will not allow them to be placed in the Music Room.

Before the end of last semester, the Board of Governors conducted a petition drive, collecting 2,500 signatures in opposition to locating the terminals in the Music Room.

"At the end of last semester, the location was up in the air. But the terminals won't be going in the Music Room," according to Jerry Quill, a member of the Board of Governors.

The Board of Governors wants to locate the terminals in room 178, a small conference room in the Campus Center, Quill said.

After the petition drive, no decision was made about the location. Bernard F. Wilkes, assistant director of the Campus Center Administration said he didn't think anything had been resolved in deciding where the terminals will be placed.

"The Board of Governors has been discussing it, but they have not submitted anything of substance," Wilkes said.

Charles D. Lyman, associate director of the University Computing Center said that 8 to 12 terminals will be put somewhere in the Campus Center. That number could be increased to 20, if the usage is high enough, Lyman said.

Money has been set aside for improving the Campus Center Concourse, according to Quill. If money is left after the improvements are complete, the Board of Governors might decide to improve the Music Room, he said.

UMass student is charged in death of ex-roommate

By NANCY GONTER
Collegian Staff

HAVERHILL — A 19-year old University of Massachusetts student has been charged with first degree murder in connection with the death of a Hampshire College student.

Gena Spero, a resident of the Haverhill area, has been charged in connection with the death of her former roommate, Gina Sindoni, of Beverly, according to a spokesman from the Haverhill District Attorney's office.

Spero pleaded innocent to the murder charge in Haverhill District Court on Jan. 18. Judge Louis Cyr ordered that she be held without bail at Framingham State Prison for psychiatric evaluation. A further court hearing was scheduled for Jan. 28.

Spero, who was enrolled in the Stockbridge School of Agriculture, and Sindoni, a former Hampshire student, shared an apartment at 66 Green St. in Northampton until recently.

Sindoni's body was found Jan. 10 submerged in a bathtub at the Haverhill apartment of Michael P. Costas. Police said Costas was Spero's former boyfriend. Costas is not a suspect in the case.

Spero was arrested on Jan. 18 at Arbor House, a private psychiatric hospital in Jamaica Plain.

Results of the Jan. 28 probable cause hearing for the murder charge were not available at press time.

Joey D's goes out of business, files bankruptcy

By JIM POTTER

Students looking for a place to wine, dine and dance will find one less local establishment this spring.

Joey D's, the popular disco dancing nightspot at 351 Northampton Road on the corner of Route 9 and University Drive, shut its doors at the beginning of January due to financial difficulties, according to former manager Steve Duca.

The club and restaurant, which opened in the fall of 1981, served drinks and Italian and American food and boasted of having the largest dance floor in Amherst.

Last week, the Amherst Board of Selectmen was scheduled to meet with Joseph DeNatale, the owner of Joey D's, to discuss the future of the club's all alcoholic beverage license, but DiNatale failed to appear at the meeting.

According to a letter sent to the board by DiNatale's attorney, Manuel Farber of Springfield, his client did not have to appear at the hearing since his petition for bankruptcy is still pending in court.

DiNatale, who also owns the popular Mike's Westview Cafe on Sunderland Road in North Amherst, could not be reached for comment.

Joey D's was just one establishment that has failed after a short life at the Route 9 location. Before Joey D's opened, Branagan's and the Steak Out, two other restaurants closed their doors.

Book exchange aids Yiddish language revival

150,000 books are collected by local group in 2½ years

By JOHN DiPALAZZO
Collegian Staff

There is a nationwide effort under way to revive the Yiddish language and one of the leaders is right here in Amherst — the National Yiddish Book Exchange.

The Exchange, which is operated in connection with the University of Massachusetts and the other four colleges in the area, is housed in a former Amherst elementary school and has collected 150,000 books since it began operation two and one-half years ago.

Aaron Lansky, executive director and founder of the Exchange, said he became concerned with the availability of Yiddish books when he was studying that language as a graduate student at McGill University in Montreal.

While trying to collect books for his own Yiddish library, Lansky said he "heard more and more stories of (Yiddish) books being thrown out."

The books were usuallly thrown out when their original owners, Eastern European Jews who immigrated to the United States early in this century, had died. Their heirs, not knowing the language and having no use for the books themselves, disposed of them.

Yiddish, which has been the spoken language of jews in Eastern Europe for about 1,000 years, became the language used to "pioneer new expression" among European Jews beginning around 1880, Lansky said.

Yiddish literature flourished in Europe and in the U.S. early in the 20th century, Lansky said, but it began its decline during the middle of the century as a result of the Nazi holocaust of the 1930s and 1940s and repression and purges of Yiddish writers by the Soviets in the 1950s.

Although 10 million people spoke Yiddish in 1939, Lansky said that number has "drastically diminished."

The only Yiddish-speaking community in the world today is the Chasidim — a community of Orthodox Jews. Even there, Lansky said, that language is now used in print, and Hebrew is used instead.

The language began its renaissance between 10 and 15 years ago, Lansky said, with most of the interest coming from what he called "the politically conscious post-Vietnam generation." The appeal of the language lies in the fact that for 1,000 years it was an "outsider's idiom," he said, used by Jewish communities that lived largely outside the main society by Eastern Europe.

This outsider's perspective has similarities with perspectives expressed today, and Lansky suggested young people today view themselves as being "up against the system."

Because of the rapid resurgence in the popularity of the language, which is now being taught in about 60 colleges in the country, scholars have had a hard time coming across Yiddish texts, since most Yiddish books have been out of print for 50 years, or have been thrown away.

Noting the renewed interest in the language and the need for books, Lansky returned to Western Massachusetts, where he was once an undergraduate at Hampshire College. He started the Book Exchange in an "old factory loft in Northampton" in June, 1980.

After beginning the nonprofit organization with few volunteers and some borrowed money, the Exchange grew rapidly. Lansky and his assistant directors, Nansi Glick and Sharon Kleinbaum, now direct many volunteers and receive financial support from the Exchange's 1,000 members, from foundation grants and from its own book sales.

Lanksy said he had three objectives in mind when he began the Exchange: to collect old books that would otherwise be destroyed; to return these books to active use; and to promote Yiddish culture.

Looking back on the success of the Exchange, Lansky said "we've succeeded beyond our wildest expectations."

Yiddish books, some of the many thousand collected by the National Yiddish Books Exchange in Amherst, are sorted by Nansi Glick, Sharon Kleinbaum, and Aaron Lansky at the Exchange. The Exchange is connected with the University of Massachusetts and other area colleges.

Although the Exchange began its collection operation by relying on people to send in books, it soon organized a group of "zamlers" (Yiddish for "collectors") to actively solicit donations. There are now more than 150 zamlers leading collection drives in 60 cities, Lansky said.

And book collection is not without its drama. Lansky said the Exchange rescued 8,000 Yiddish books from a garbage dumpster in New York City in April, 1981, after receiving an urgent telephone call.

Once the books have found their way to the Exchange, as about 1,000 do each week, they are sorted according to subject. There is a substantial backlog, though, and one room in the old school's basement is filled from floor to ceiling with books that have yet to be sorted.

Sorting is done in another room, where between 15 and 20 boxes of books are sorted daily by volunteers, usually area college students. After the books are sorted, they are either put into the Exchange's permanent collection, put into one of its special collections, or made available to the public through the Exchange's catalog.

Through its catalog, the Exchange allows individuals and libraries to buy books. The money generated by the sales goes toward financing the operation.

The Exchange receives orders for books from the Library of Congress in Washington, D.C., from Illinois, New Jersey, Oklahoma, California, Pennsylvania and Florida, to name but a few. Others came from such places as England, France, Germany, Canada and Japan.

"This is the sole place in the world that these books are available — there's no other place," Lansky said.

The permanent collection kept by the Exchange consists of about 20,000 volumes. Also, some rooms are devoted to the works of specific authors, such as one for the writings of Sholem Aleichem, on whose book the play "Fiddler on the Roof" was based. A rare book room containing Yiddish texts dating back to the 18th century is also maintained by the Exchange.

While collecting Yiddish books, the Exchange has also come across many other items of Yiddish culture.

"There was all kinds of stuff out there waiting to be saved," Lansky said. Among the cultural items are sculptures and a Yiddish typewriter.

Also in line with the Exchange's goal of promoting Yiddish culture is a reading room, which is now being remodeled. The room will be named after Aliza Greenblatt, (mother-in-law of Woody Guthrie and grandmother of Arlo Guthrie) whose personal library has been donated to the Exchange and will be shelved in the room. The room will hold other exhibits as well.

In addition to being a repository and center for Yiddish books and culture, the Exchange is a focal point for courses, lectures and translation projects. Lansky said Yiddish writers can draw larger audiences when they speak at the Exchange than when they speak in New York City. In addition, a steady stream of tourists from all over the world visit the Exchange, he said.

Jewish organization offers courses for spring semester

Hillel, the B'nai B'rith Student Foundation at the University of Massachusetts will sponsor eight courses for the Spring semester.

"Jewish Holidays: A Hands-On Practicum" will teach the customs, folklore, music and prescribed observance of major Jewish holidays. The course may be taken for one to three credits.

"Issues Facing Israel Today" will focus on the government politics, kibbutz, army, religion, and sex roles of modern Israel. The course will feature guest experts, who will address various topics. The course carries one credit.

"Hebrew For Beginners", a basic reading and speaking course for those with no prior knowledge of Hebrew, will be offered for one credit for a half semester.

"Hebrew For Beginners Plus" will stress reading and speaking for students with a minimal acquaintance with Hebrew. One credit may be earned each half semester.

"Intermediate Hebrew" will focus on conversation using Upland materials. Some knowledge of Hebrew is necessary to take the course. One credit for each half semester is offered.

"The Bible Revisited" emphasizes the art of biblical narrative from Moses through Isaiah. One credit is offered for the course.

"The Bible with Medeival Commentaries" will use Rashi, Iba Ezra and Maihmonides as well as later Chassidic commentators. One credit may be earned by taking the course.

"Chassidic Mysticism" will study some of the terminology of Kabalah as used to formulate the basic philosophy of Chabad Chassidut. One credit is offered with the course.

For more information, interested persons can contact the Hillel office at 545-2526.

For those students without a place to live, there is still housing available in Amherst and neighboring towns, although the cost of living off campus may be quite high.

The University of Massachusetts Off-Campus Housing Office estimates rents in Amherst average about $184 per person each month and the high price tag may be turning away some students. As a result, the Umass Housing Assignment Office has received about 250 applications from students who want to get back on campus after some time out of the dorms.

"More juniors and seniors are trying to get back into the dorms than in the past," said Gerald A. Quarles, UMass housing assignment coordinator. "There is no fear of rent increases and utilities are paid for."

Joanne R. Levenson, director of the Off-Campus Housing Office, said she also believes students are being discouraged from moving off campus because of the high cost of rent and utilities.

In an effort to afford living off campus, many students have taken to sharing apartments with others. In Brittany Manor, for example, the rental office said there are about 1,000 residents living in 255 two-bedroom apartments. More students might be sharing their apartments with others if it were not for a town ordinance that prohibits more than four unrelated people from living in the same house or apartment, according to Amherst Building Commissioner Chet Penza.

As a result, there is some off campus housing available, although Levenson said, there is a three percent vacancy rate, which she considers too low.

"Statistically, it might seem like there is a lot available. In fact, it has always been hard to find housing, but we noticed a bad situation getting worse," Levenson said.

According to apartment complex managers and other officials in Sunderland and Northampton, housing is also scarce in nearby towns.

Potential apartment dwellers will find most of the area complexes full, but some rooms may be found in apartments or houses.

Sunderland apartment managers report few rooms are available. Both the Northwood and Squire Village apartments have no vacancies and Dorothy Ambriglio, manager of Squire Village, said all sublets have been taken up for the spring.

"All sublets have been filled for the spring and I doubt anyone else will sublet," she said.

The Off-Campus Housing Office, located in Hasbrook Laboratory, will be open until 8 p.m. on Tuesday and Thursday this week.

"If worse comes to worse, we will refer homeless to an emergency shelter in Amherst," Levenson said.

500 vacancies assure smooth dorm openings

By TAMI BORTON

No problems are anticipated this spring for on-campus housing, according to Gerald A. Quarles, housing assignment coordinator at the University of Massachusetts.

"Right now we have 500 vacancies. I will be greatly surprised if there are any problems," he said.

"There will be some adjustments at the beginning of the semester, but this is largely due to sorting out housing preferences," he said.

Students who cannot enter their rooms immediately will be temporarily housed in either another room or the Campus Center Hotel if necessary, Quarles said.

"I doubt there will be any on-campus housing rush during registration," Quarles said. The housing assignment office monitors the student population closely and all registered students receive housing preference forms. "Unless there is a hidden population somewhere, we will have no problem," Quarles added.

The housing roll carried students classified as suspended until Jan. 25, the day after the deadline for readmittance. "No shows" are carried until noon on the first day of classes. This means enrollment in dormitories decreases significantly at the beginning of the semester, Quarles said.

"For instance, in 1981 we had a fall enrollment of 11,289, which dropped to 10,500 two weeks after school opened," he said.

The on-campus housing situation is better in the spring semester, Quarles said. "This is because of fall graduates, junior and seniors who move off campus during January, and the lower new student enrollment during the spring," he said.

University dormitories have a capacity of 11,400 residents. At present, there are 10,900 students signed up for on-campus housing. "I expect we will end up housing about 10,350 students," Quarles said.

Budget proposal unveiled; town taxes may decrease

By NANCY GONTER
Collegian Staff

A $7.3 million operating budget, recently proposed by Amherst Town Manager Barry L. Del Castilho for fiscal year 1984, may slightly lower the tax rate.

In a presentation by Del Castilho, Finance Director James A. Lindstrom and Public Works Director Stanley Ziomek, the budget officials requested a $565,000 increase over last year, a 9.5 percent increase.

The main reason for the increase request is higher personnel costs due to cost-of-living raises totalling $250,000. Inflation, program expansion and employee benefit causes, are other reasons for the requested increase.

Del Castilho, who came to Amherst at the end of December, said 1984 should be a good year for the town because funds are available to adequately continue existing services and allow for limited areas of improvement.

Inflation has subsided, making it easier to budget than in past years, Del Castilho said.

Because federal revenue sharing funds are scheduled to expire this September, the budget includes less money so one full year's budget can be reserved for fiscal year 1985, Lindstrom said.

The property tax levy will remain the same as that of the last four years, Lindstrom said. New assessments of property in town were to be sent to individual taxpayers by the end of January he said. Property values as a whole will rise 8 percent, he said.

The budget must be approved by the Town Meeting. The Town Meeting is scheduled to begin in May.

WFCR begins its search for new general manager

By NANCY GONTER
Collegian Staff

Public Radio Station WFCR at the University of Massachusetts began a nationwide search last month for a new general manager, after restructuring control of the station.

Since Robert S. Goldfarb's resignation last July, WFCR's program director Joan Wilbur, and Chief Engineer Charles Ferguson have been running the station.

The search was delayed six months after Goldfarb's resignation so that questions of control of the station could be decided, according to E. Jefferson Murphy, the station's Five College coordinator.

According to Murphy, the legal responsibility and authority of the University of Massachusetts over the station has been reaffirmed. The Five College interest in the station has also been reaffirmed, Murphy said.

The Western Massachusetts Broadcast Council, which has managed the station will now concern itself with fund raising and advertising of the station, not governance, Murphy said.

A new Radio Committee has been set up, Murphy said. Five representatives from the listening community will sit on that committee. The committee will work with the station's already established Community Advisory Board.

An open letter to our readers: we're here to help you out

This spring semester, the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, the student-run newspaper for the University of Massachusetts and the surrounding area, is upgrading its editorial and business services to help provide better service to its readers.

Throughout the semester, readers of the five day per week tabloid will notice many changes in format, design and news coverage, all intended to provide more easily readable information. In today's edition, for example, we have used narrower columns for our stories and have changed the type face on the reporters bylines, to help each page appear more symetrical and pleasing to the eye.

In addition, the Collegian has placed a new emphasis on the coverage of Amherst area news for both interested students and permanent residents of the town. In the future, we plan to extensively cover Amherst town government and life as well as provide news and information about the other schools within the Five College area.

To assist those who would like to find out more about the paper and provide easier access for advertisers and newsmakers, the Collegian will operate a table on the Campus Center concourse several days each week. Staff members at the table will be able to assist people filing news releases, requests for notices, placing classified advertising, as well as providing information on display advertising and both paid and volunteer work at the paper.

For full service, of course, readers are welcome to stop by the Collegian business and news offices in room 113 in the Campus Center Basement.

To assist groups and individuals who may want to take advantage of the newspaper's many services, we provide the following list of types of services we provide and how to make use of them. For more information, anyone is invited to stop by our offices or call us at 545-3500.

One time events, such as lectures, discussions, concerts or educational films are publicized in the Collegian in the "Newsline" column. People or groups sponsoring such events should type the information and submit it at least a week in advance to the Collegian News department. Every effort will be made to print as many notices as possible, but due to time and space limitations, publication cannot be guaranteed and notices are printed only one time, usually the day before the event. Questions about "Newslines" should be directed to the paper's News department.

Meetings of student or community groups are listed in the daily "Hypercurricula" column. Each Hypercurricula request should be filled out on the standard form available from the Collegian offices or the table on the Campus Center Concourse. Events are listed only on the day they are taking place and the requests must be submitted by 3:45 p.m. the Friday before the week of publication. Again, due to space limitations, the Collegian cannot guarantee all Hypercurricula notices will be published.

Suggestions for news or feature stories are always welcome by the Collegian. Anyone who feels they know of something which should be in the paper is invited to write, call or visit the paper's offices with their suggestion. Most stories are handled by the paper's news editor, although stories of particular interest are also assigned by the Women's, Black Affairs, Arts and Sports departments.

Letters to the editor are published daily in the Collegian and every reader is invited to submit letters or longer editorial columns. All letters for publication must be typed and signed with the writer's name and address, for verification purposes. All items for the editorial page should be addressed to the paper's executive editor.

Advertising information is available at both the Collegian front counter and Concourse table. Rate cards, listing the price of advertising and the standard sizes and mechanical requirements, are available. Information about classified advertising is available at both locations, as well as express classified placement service.

In general, the Collegian is pleased to help anyone communicate what they need to the student body, whether it be in the form of a news story, editorial, or advertisement. Any editor is available most afternoons to assist anyone and answer questions.

Fondly recalling those school days of the past

Alumnus compares 'Mass Aggie,' 1928, to UMass, 1983

By IRMARIE JONES
Special to the Collegian

Editor's Note: This article and the following article originally appeared on August 17, 1982 in the Greenfield Recorder.

These articles are written by a 1945 graduate of the University of Massachusetts. They are reprinted with her permission in order to give present students of UMass an idea of the UMass past.

Aerial view of Massachusetts Agriculture College, now known as the University of Massachusetts, taken between 1924 and 1934. "Mass Aggi-' was founded in 1863 and had four faculty members, four wooden buildings and 56 students. Students were required to be "sixteen years of age, and to pass such examinations as is required for admission to Normal Schools and such further examinations as shall be prescribed," in order to enter Mass Aggie. In 1892, "Mass Aggie" was allowed to grant graduate degrees and in 1908 the Graduate School was established.

When S. Judson Ewer of 11 Beacon St. entered Massachusets Agricultural College in the mid-20's, tuition was free; tuition for an in-state student at the University of Massachusetts, the same institution, is now $1,129 per year.

When Ewer was a student, he had a choice of two or three music appreciation courses; the UMass music department now includes some of the finest vocal and instrumental musicians in the country on its staff, offering undergraduate and graduate degrees in music.

When Ewer graduated in 1928, there were 109 students in his graduating class; commencement at UMass last June conferred approximately 4,300 undergraduate degrees and 600 graduate degrees.

"I don't particularly like to go down there anymore," said Ewer who had brought out his college yearbook. "The college pond's still there, but all the new buildings are crowded right around it. When I was there, you could look from Clark Hall (on east campus) toward the pond, and it was wide open."

Majors at the small rural college were limited, as expected, to courses relating to agriculture, such as dairy, poultry, landscape, gardening, pomology, floriculture, botany, and chemistry.

"Agricultural education covered a multitude of sins. If anyone was really interested in literature or liberal arts, agricultural education was the course to major in," Ewer said, pointing out that Ellsworth "Dutchy" Barnard of Shelburne, who was in his class, went on to become an English professor after attending MAC with that major.

Another class member, Maxwell Goldberg, was in the English department on campus for many years.

Ewer, whose home was in Leyden, attended Greenfield High School. He entered "Mass Aggie" to major in botany. His four college years he lived off campus at 13 Phillips St. There were few, if any, commuters.

Every male student (there were only 20 women in the 1928 graduating class) was required to take Reserve Officers Training Corps instruction in his freshman and sophomore years.

"Oh yes, we wore uniforms with the high leggings and had to attend lectures by the military staff. We even had to learn to ride, which was new to me even though I had grown up in the country," Ewer said.

One of Ewer's great interests was music. He had taken piano and organ lessons while he was in high school.

"At the first convocation in Stockbridge Hall, President (Edward M.) Lewis said the college needed an organist for assemblies and chapel services. I volunteered and played the organ all four years. I wonder sometimes how I had the nerve," Ewer said. "I used to have a lecture in Clark Hall (far across campus from Stockbridge), and I asked Professor (Vincent) Osmun if I could leave early, since I was supposed to be playing as the students came in to the assembly; but he wouldn't let me. I really had to hurry."

To understand the importance of organ playing, it is necessary to know that there were two brief required chapel services each week at 7:30 a.m. Attendance was taken. There was a voluntary chapel service Sunday afternoon and a required assembly on Wednesday afternoon, when again attendance was taken. Ewer played the organ as the students came in and as they left, earning a small amount of money for the service. Sometimes on Sundays he had to accompany a vocalist or violinsist — "Good experience," he said.

"When I graduated, President (R.W.) Thatcher, who took Lewis' place thanked me for my services at the chapel," Ewer said, and then he smiled, saying "Some of the kids nicknamed me, 'Joe Organ.'"

As Ewer leafed through the yearbook, looking at the seven men in the glee club orchestra and the 20 or so women in the Girls' Glee Club, he said, "I took a music appreciation course from Stowell Goding, and he was a French teacher. Look at the music department now. Some of the top people in the country are teaching there. It's very impressive."

"The campus was so beautiful then. I remember the rhododendron garden below the president's house and the pond in winter and summer...just beautiful," Ewer said.

World War II cast a shadow over Amherst campus

By IRMARIE JONES
Special to the Collegian

The summer of 1941 was an ominous period in this country's history, but for me the rumblings of a war in Europe were only annoyingly in the background. I was about to become a freshman at Massachusetts State College.

During the summer, I was sent the name of Carol Goodchild of Springfield, who was to become my roommate (and became a lifelong friend); we wrote back and forth. I was assigned a "big sister," a young woman from the sophomore class who would help me learn the vicissitudes of life on campus. And I read every issue of Mademoiselle magazine that summer to find out what the "well-dressed coed" would be wearing that fall.

What all of us saw when we arrived on the Mass. State campus was a beautiful, tradition-filled, rural college in the small town of Amherst. The central campus featured grass and pathways with the college pond as a focal point, the chapel reflected in its water. The old brick building lent a Victorian charm.

The women in our class were the first ones to use the new Butterfield dormitory, perched high on Orchard Hill, seemingly miles from class buildings. Still operating under the aegis of our "home away from home," the women's dormitories were complete with housemothers, sign-out sheets, strict sign-in hours and Women's Student Government Association council, which acted as a court for their peers.

No young woman today can possibly understand the seriousness of returning to the dormitory at 10:05 p.m., when the week-night sign-in time was 10 p.m. the housemother would be at the door, watching for those late arrivals, and every time a young woman was late she received a demerit. If she accumulated five demerits the unfortunate student had to appear before the WSGA council to learn her punishment. (As I look back, it's a wonder we ever became independent thinking adults.)

Every floor had two upper-class protors, who were on hand to keep the noise level down and to make sure no men (perish the thought) ever sneaked onto a floor. On the other hand, the proctors were sometimes welcome mother confessors.

Even the college world could not protect us from the events outside on that Sunday, Dec. 7. Several of us were returning to our rooms in the dormitory after Sunday dinner when one of our proctors rushed up to say the Japanese had bombed Pearl Harbor.

Immediately, some of the college men enlisted and were gone from campus. For the most part, the rest of that college year was as normal as could be expected. It was my sophomore year when drastic changes took place.

When we arrived in September, we found that many of the fellows had been drafted or had enlisted. A good share were still around, having signed up in the Enlisted Reserve Corps and various other reserves. All male students were required to take two years of ROTC training as part of their courses, and many of them had become officers as a result of four years in ROTC.

One way the war was brought home was in the scheduling of blackout drills "in case Amherst was bombed." The living rooms of our dormitories were fitted with blackout drapes, and when the siren sounded for a blackout drill we all rushed to the living room with our homework and stayed there until the all-clear sounded.

Just after the start of the second semester, the world fell in for the enlisted reserves. They were called to a convocation. I slipped into the balcony as an army officer told them they had to leave immediately.

The next announcement was that the Army Air Corps would be coming on campus immediately, and the men remaining would have to get out of the dormitories. Some of them squeezed into fraternity houses, and others found quarters in town.

On Washington's Birthday at dusk army trucks came rumbling by "the Abbey" as we all hung out the windows, waving to the shouting young airmen who were being taken to Thatcher and Lewis dormitories on the hill.

The maximum of 750 air cadets was soon reached. We became used to hearing the marching men singing their "sound off" on the way to meals, and watching the young soldiers on practice guard duty around Memorial Hall.

At that time the Collegian was a four-page paper, published once a week, more like a high school paper. I was a reporter my freshman and sophomore years. When we returned for our junior year, Sept. 1943, all the editors had been drafted. Three of us who had been reporters took over, one as editor, one associate editor and myself as managing editor. We continued in those positions for a year and a half, until finally, at the middle of our senior year one of the fellows who had been discharged early was chosen editor.

We were kicked out of our office in Memorial Hall, as the Air Corps officers wanted the office for their use. Therefore, most of the time we were putting out the paper from the janitor's room in the basement of Memorial Hall.

Many of the women accelerated their courses in order to graduate early and help out in the war industries. A few women enlisted. When we graduated in 1945 there were 89 in our class, 79 of them women.

Red tape during add/drop can be frustrating; Remember this wise advice: Don't panic!

By TAMI BORTON
Collegian Staff

The add/drop period can cause anxiety among students, especially new students, who must rearrange their schedules.

According to an annual survey taken by the New Students Program, adding courses is often the most frustrating experience at the University. Fortunately, some simple guidelines and various University resources can minimize the red tape of this trying time. "The first thing to do is not to panic," according to Ralph Jones of the Registrar's office.

Students should be aware they will have to stand in lines.

"My advice is to be patient. No one will kick you out of school if you don't have five courses the first day," Sarah Hamilton, chairman of the Smooth Opening of School Committee and staff member of the New Students Program said. "Take one day at a time and relax."

"Understanding what the problem is, is the key to avoiding the run around," she said. "For instance, problems with grades are handled at the records office and problems with bills, the Bursar's office.

Hamilton said assertiveness is a necessary asset many students lack. "Don't be afraid to ask questions," she said.

Once the problem is identified, students must be perisistant, but reasonable in their persistance. Often students will have to persist and go beyond the recpetionist to seek solutions Hamilton said.

"However, sometimes the secretary knows as much as anyone in the office," she said. Sometimes a particular office cannot help and persisting to the point of anger is ridiculous, she said.

Jones said registration by mail, which replaced the "bullpen registration" of past years, takes a great deal of the frustration out of the add/drop period.

"Eighty-five percent of the students pay their bills on time and receive their registration packet in the mail," he said. "The 10 percent who pay their bills late must go to the Registrar's office to pick up their registration packet."

The five percent who have not paid their bills will spend a lot of time waiting in lines, Jones said. "But they have put themselves in those lines by not pre-registering," he said.

However, time spent waiting in lines can be minimized. If a class is over subscribed, the best thing to do is go to the class and get on a waiting list, Jones said.

"Academic departments have some latitude on allowing extra students into classes, but this depends on the department," he said.

Adding and dropping in the afternoon allows time for the initial rush to die down, Jones said. "However, if a student absolutely needs a course, all possible means of getting that course should be checked."

The University administration has taken measures to identify, solve and avoid problems.

The Smooth Opening of School Committe is a coordination committee with the purpose of assessing school opening, identifying and solving problems. The committee, comprised of the administrative office heads on campus, meets prior to school opening and again after the opening.

"We have been very successful at meeting our goals and solving problems such as traffic patterns in Whitmore, computer errors and mailing problems," Hamilton said.

Although many students will have to wait in lines and on course waiting lists, problems can be prevented and solved through planning and using the university resources available.

Express drop today in SUB

For students wishing to drop a class before classes begin tomorrow, an express drop program will be held today from 10 to 3 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom (SUB).

February 1 to February 14, and students have until February 28 to drop a course. Add/drop forms will be available on the Campus Center concourse the main lobby of Herter Hall and room 120 of the School of Business Administration.

An updated open-course list will be posted in the lobby of Machmer Hall today through February 14, and will be published in the Collegian, providing students with the latest information on course openings from the academic departments.

The Information Data Bank has published a four page information sheet that includes a list of times and places where students can add courses. This publication was included in the registration packet and will be available in dorms and in the Student Union Ballroom over the weekend.

Students do not need to go to the Registrar's Office except to pick up a registration packet or turn in a completed add/drop form.

Students choose courses through CASPER computer

By TAMI BORTON
Collegian Staff

Students needing help finding course openings or counselling can seek advice at the College of Arts and Sciences Information and Advisory Center (CASIAC) located in E-20 Machmer Hall.

The CASPER computer terminal is programmed to index classes on the basis of content, core requirement and time.

"For example, a student can come to CASIAC seeking a D-core in the area of law, and he has free time in the morning. Something will turn up on CASPER," James Shaw, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, said.

This program which has been operating for two years now, is not perfect because the courses are often elementary level and departments often neglect to supply new course opening information, Shaw said.

Another aspect of the CASIAC office that provides help is the institutional grapevine at the Students Counseling Office in Machmer E-20.

"The 20-member student staff is trained and knows everything about the University administration and being a student," Shaw said.

A minimum of two student counselors are always in the office between 8:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m., he said.

Students with eight credits or less will be contacted by CASIAC for a special orientation and help session, Shaw said.

"Approximately 100 students have eight credits or less," he said. "We feel they might need some extra help, so the CASIAC office is reaching out."

Advisors from the office will assist students in arranging their schedules. Shaw said any student who needs help and has not been contacted should contact CASIAC.

Some things never change. Even back in the '30s, students received parking tickets.

Warning: parking at UMass is hazardous to your wallet

By HANNAH HOSOM
Collegian Staff

Those of us without cars, although life gets wildly inconvenient at times, appreciate not having to deal with one of the greatest enemies of large moving vehicles in Amherst: the towing company. Watching friends get up an hour and a half early to make sure their car is still where they left it provides an indescribable sense of relief: for these four years. That's *one*thing I don't have to worry about.

Winter parking at the University of Massachusetts is especially dangerous. Special rules are in effect between Dec. 1 and April 1 because of the threat of snow.

Parking at any meters overnight is a major no-no, and the horseshoe in Southwest is included. Most of the lots near campus used primarily during the daytime are also off-limits. Therefore, lots near the stadium (although who would park way out there in the middle of the winter?), near Whitmore, across from the Fine Arts Center, are all not to be trusted.

Also, never park in a handicapped space unless you have the proper sticker. No matter what time of the year it is, you might as well kiss your car goodbye if you do that. Head of residence spaces are equally well-guarded.

If you are willing to chance parking anyway, maybe a mention of how all this affects the wallet will help you watch your car more closely. Towing costs you $25. But, there is also a storage fee, which begins the moment the car enters the Amherst towing lot, of $5 for every 24 hours it's there.

So, if you think you left your car in a doubtful area a couple of days ago, don't make any assumptions. Better check and save the five bucks — it'll pay for a couple of sixes, or the month's laundry (just kidding, Mom) or a bouquet of flowers from the Campus Center. . . which is much nicer than having to walk down to North Amherst to get your car back. Especially in the winter.

Student-run businesses offer services, work experience

By TAMI BORTON
Collegian Staff

Student-run co-ops and businesses located at the University provide services and offer an opportunity to become involved in a business experience.

The Bicycle Co-op sells bicycle parts and accessories, provides professional repairs and has a do-it-yourself work area, complete with tools and advice. Members, who must work at least two hours per week, are entitled to reduced prices.

The University Photo Co-op, located across from the Student Union Post Office, is open weekdays from 10 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. In addition to offering low cost film, paper, chemicals and film processing, it serves as an opportunity for students to learn about photography and business.

The Sporting Goods Co-op sells athletic equipment and clothing to students at affordable prices. Students may volunteer to help run the co-op, which is open from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. weekdays.

The Student Auto Workshop, located in the Campus Center Garage, offers space, tools and professional assistance for University members who wish to do their own auto maintenance and repairs. The service is an alternative to high priced garages and provides an opportunity to learn auto mechanics skills.

The Student Federal Credit Union is the largest student-run credit union in the country. It is federally chartered and offers many of the same services offered by regular savings banks. Students, members of their immediate families and University employees can take advantage of its high interest rates for savings and low interst rates on loans by paying a one-time, one dollar membership fee and depositing a minimum of five dollars in an account.

The credit union is staffed entirely by volunteers and offers two internships for academic credit per semester. Business hours are Monday through Thursday 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. and Friday 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Union Records unlimited is a student-run and student-funded business providing records, tapes, concert tickets and accessories at low prices. The store is located next to the Hatch cafeteria in the Student Union Building and is open weekdays and Saturdays from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Earthfoods is open weekdays 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. providing vegetarian lunches to the University community. Volunteers, which are important to the program's success, receive a free meal for an hour of work.

People's Market, located across from Earthfoods, is a student run natural food store open weekdays from 9:30 to 5 p.m. and on Wednesday to 7 p.m. Volunteers are welcome and receive two dollars of food credit per hour of work.

The Economic Development Office maintains and monitors student run businesses and co-ops. Students assist the full-time professional administrative staff, which is funded by the Student Government Association.

Students can become involved with any one of the co-ops and businesses on campus by contacting the respective office.

Many restaurants offer varied choices

By TAMI BORTON
Collegian Staff

Students tired of dining common fare or itchy off-campus dwellers need not travel any further than Amherst center to find a variety of fine dining and entertainment.

A short walk from campus will bring those out for a bite or drink to the Carriage Shop complex where restaurants, a deli, a pizza place, bars and even a night club are located.

Dastardly Dan's is the first stop. It offers video games, drinks and a chance to meet some of its regulars. Next door is The Sub, a take-out or eat-in salad and grinder shop.

Charlie's and The Pub are also located side by side. While both serve sandwiches and the like, Charlie's has daily drink specials, video games, a pool table, a jukebox and a dart board. The Pub also offers a daily happy hour, video games and pool, plus a disc jockey and dancing.

La Mia Pizza is also located in the Carriage Shops and serves pizza. La Mia delivers, provided the order is large enough. Amherst Deli, highly acclaimed by the Valley Advocate's annual reader's poll, serves deli sandwiches, dishes, salads, bagels and desserts.

Silverscape Cafe, across the common from the Carriage Shops, serves natural food entrees, salads, breads and desserts. For a less expensive, more casual vegetarian meal, one might try the Faces of Earth Cafe.

A short walk up Pleasant Street brings one to Classe Cafe, new to Amherst. Classe Cafe serves breakfast and lunch and a Sunday brunch featuring special pancakes and other goodies.

Continuing toward the center brings the hungry or thirsty walker to another cluster of shops housing restaurants and bars. La Raclette and Judies, both serving French food, offer more expensive dishes than other restaurants in the area, but both atmospheres are very nice and the food is distinct. Judies new sit-down bar is sure to attract many who have a passion for Irish coffee, and the glassed-in patio is great for watching people while enjoying lunch.

Delano's Restaurant and bar attracts a lot of young people for lunch, dinner or its two for one happy hour, from 10 to 12 p.m. Their menu offers sandwiches, burgers, salads and omelettes.

Barselotti's and the Time Out are good bars to throw down a couple of beers while watching a game on television. "Barsi's" offers food with their evening happy hours and features a pool table. The Time Out is a favorite of UMass students and offers free popcorn, a jukebox, video games and a dart board along with libations.

A student hangs a sign in the college store reminding other students no meat will be served on Tuesdays and Fridays due to the shortage of meat during World War II.

Hiding "down the alley" is Taco Villa, serving fast, but very good, Mexican food. Beer is also served at Taco Villa. Amherst Chinese Food is a wonderful place to find Chinese food, void of monosodium glutamate, for lunch or dinner. Their luncheon specials are worth checking out. Kim Toy, a quaint restaurant, located next to Amherst Cinema, also serves Chinese food

Plumley's on the Common is an elegant place to eat, and Plumley's Pub, located in the basement, periodically featuring live musicians, is a nice place for a relaxing cocktail.

Next to the Common is the Lord Jeffery Inn, which serves formal breakfasts, lunches and dinners, and is an excellent place to take the parents or grandparents.

Tucked into the shops along Main Street is the Gas Lite, great for quick breakfasts or lunches or a cup of coffee.

Across the street from the Amherst Cinema and Kim Toy is the Village Inn, also known as the Drake, a unique bar. The Drake has the largest selection of beer on tap in town, and serves sandwiches. Their breaded and fried french fries are well-known in Amherst. The downstairs bar houses one of the areas only public fussball tables.

Whatever the pleasure, fine dining or a quick sandwich, mixed drinks or a beer, a relaxed atmosphere or dancing, pizza, Mexican or Chinese food, it can be found in downtown Amherst, just a short walk away from UMass.

Traffic was a problem even back in the late '60s when Southwest was being built.

Poor reviews stop add lines

By TAMI BORTON
Collegian Staff

Poor reviews in the Collegian was the primary reason for eliminating course adding from the express registration of last semester, said James Shaw, dean of the College of Arts aand Sciences.

The express add/drop set up, where students could sign up for courses from twelve departments on campus, was planned to help students save time arranging their schedule and reduce traffic in the departments. However, long lines, waiting and confusion caused problems of disorganization and crowding last semester.

"We got terrible reviews, and figured if students didn't like the program we should not try it again," Shaw said.

An express drop, held from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom will replace the program of last semester. "This program should run smoother than last year's set up. There will be very little waiting in lines," he said.

By eliminating the aspect of course addition and through better staffing, such problems should be avoided, Ralph Jones of the Registrar's Office said.

"Although congestion will vary, lines should go quickly," he said.

"Students should experience very little standing in line," Shaw said, "I don't think there will be any waiting."

A modified express add program may be offered in the future, Shaw said. "We were originally attempting to save the student shoe leather, but there were expectations that could not be managed last year," he said. "At least we are eliminating half the running around."

Both programs were developed by Shaw at the suggestion of the Smooth Opening of School Committee, a coordination committee that evaluates school opening and addresses any problems that may come up.

Everywomen Center serves University community

Created as a result of the collective efforts of several local women's groups, the Everywoman Center has served the needs of University and community women for over ten years.

Located on the second floor in Wilder Hall at the University of Massachusetts, the center is open year-round Monday through Friday.

The center has eight major areas of concern. Included in these areas are: poor women, Third World women, employment counseling, violence against women and personal counseling.

Helping to serve these concerns are:

POOR WOMEN'S TASK FORCE: This task force works closely with the Poor Women's Advocate to help low income, single parents return to school and counselors from the task force provide information on financial aid, welfare, daycare and housing.

WORKING WOMEN'S TASK FORCE (WWTF): Women who are employed, unemployed or underemployed can get information and help from this task force. Information on affirmative action, sex and race discrimination and sexual harassment can be obtained through the WWTF. The WWTF also sponsors support groups and workshops for working women.

THIRD WORLD WOMEN'S TASK FORCE (TWWTF): TWWTF provides counseling and advocacy and addresses the needs of Third World women. This group works in cooperation with other organizations to make traditional institutions more responsive to Third World concerns.

RESOURCE AND REFERRAL: Referral books and survival information about housing, childcare and job information are available. Resource files with pamphlets, articles, newsletters about issues concerning women as well as a library with works by and for women are available in the center.

COUNSELOR/ADVOCATES: These women offer 24-hour rape counseling. Support groups, short and long term counseling, referral and training sessions for medical personnel to sensitize them toward sexual assault issues are also offered.

The Everywoman Center is not wheelchair accessible, but arrangements can be made. For further information about the center or its services, call 545-0883.

Students find their salvation with coffee and croissants

By JOANNE KASPER
Collegian Correspondent

The alarm cuts through your foggy sleep...you stumble over the clothes littering the floor and stand under the stinging shower. No time for breakfast — the campus stretches interminably between you and your 8 a.m. class.

Finally, you reach the building and pull open the door, only to be hit immediately with that wonderful scent of brewing coffee, freshly fried doughnuts and French pastries.

Scattered across campus in several of the classroom buildings, these student-run coffee shops operate five days a week throughout the school year.

Their purpose for existing is two-fold. They provide a kind of oasis for the bleary-eyed, starving student who had to miss breakfast that morning, and perhaps even dinner before. For those of us who need artificial stimulation in order to function before noon, that cup of coffee or cocoa or tea could mean the difference between another page of notes or an extra hour of unanticipated sleep under the disapproving eyes of the professor.

In addition, these coffee shops provide the Registered Student Organization (RSO) groups which run them with funds the groups can use to sponsor activities or to purchase equipment, tools, stationery or anything else they might need.

These ambitious and hard-working people who help run these groups have found a way to gain experience and dependence while at the same time provide a much needed service for the multitudes of sleepy students on this campus.

"Salvation," you think. Maybe, just maybe, you'll be able to make it through your class. You need caffeine, though. You need it now, not at 9 a.m. but now.

Get involved through the Student Government Association

By HANNAH HOSOM
Collegian Staff

What did you say? You're bored? Oh, right. Nothing to do around here...classes, parties, all the same old stuff. You keep thinking about joining a club, but don't have time. Well, you're already part of the largest organization on campus: the Student Government Association (SGA).

If you are a fee paying undergraduate or continuing education student, when you pay your bill, there's a student activities fee on it, which goes into the Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF). This, in turn, is allocated by the Undergraduate Student Senate to hundreds of smaller student organizations on campus. Some are funded directly, while others have to petition for money, but nearly every event on campus is tied in some way to the SGA.

After money for buses and services is dispensed, the remaining money is budgeted by the Undergraduate Student Senate. This is why the elections ever year for senators are so important. Those elected officials decide on policies, as well as where our $3.5 million in the SATF goes. In turn, the Senate elects its treasurer and speaker, and individual committees choose their chairpeople.

Every spring, the campus-wide election for president and a University of Massachusetts Trustee is held. The positions may be held by one person, as they are now, or by two. The president's office functions to coordinate committees on campus dealing with current issues and to investigate long-standing problems. The trustee position is a seat on the UMass Board of Trustees, and the person attends meetings of the board operating at the highest level of University decision-making.

If you are interested in getting more involved in any group, there is almost one for every interest, or you can start your own. Ask someone in room 420 of the Student Union for a listing of groups. Or you can get involved with the governing body, the Undergraduate Student Senate. You can be as involved as you want to be, and considering what you can give to any group, from the Outing Club to the Science Fiction Club, the Collegian to the Senate, you can get a lot out of it.

The University of Massachusetts library system consists of Goodell Library, the University Tower Library, two science libraries and a music library.

GOODELL LIBRARY: the location for the library system's card catalog, most reference materials, a book collection of about 70,000 volumes, all current periodicals in the social sciences and humanities and back-files of 1,200 of them, microfilm collection, a basic law collection and the most frequently-used government publications. The Tower contains less heavily-used materials in the social sciences and humanities, the non-circulating collection of art books and journals, the University archives and special collections and rare books.

Most of the science collection is found in two branch libraries: the BIOLOGICAL SCIENCES LIBRARY (545-2674) on the second floor of the Morrill Science Building, and the PHYSICAL SCIENCES LIBRARY (545-1370) on the second floor of the Graduate Research Center. The MUSIC LIBRARY (545-2870) in room 149 of the Fine Arts Center contains all materials relating to music.

Tours of Goodell and the Tower leave from the lobby of Goodell at 10:30 a.m., 1:30 p.m. and 2:30 p.m., February 1 through 4. Appointments for other times and dates can be made (on 24-hour notice) at the reference desk, Goodell Library (545-0150).

Intersession hoop not a total loss

Triple overtime win highlights intersession

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

The road of the Minuteman basketball fan has been a rather long one since a majority of the student population headed away from Amherst to earn tuition and eat home cooked meals in December.

When we last saw the Minutemen, they were picking up momentum with a three game winning streak that helped to make their overall record appear respectable at 3-4. Things were looking up. They did not look up for very long, unfortunately.

Things took a turn for the worse after Christmas. The Minutemen journeyed to the sunshine state of Florida hoping that they could stay hot. They did, putting up their highest game point total of the season, with 106. Unfortunately, North Texas State and Samford College were hotter.

Playing at a torrid NBA-type scoring pace, North Texas State netted 110 points to offset the Minuteman explosion of 106 and the game just became another notch in the loss column.

It was the weekend of the big snowstorm and the driving was a little hazardous, but not as hazardous as the game that took place that Saturday afternoon.

Samford, not to be outdone, bulldogged its way to a 72 point evening at Minuteman expense as they beat UMass 72-61.

The games had been lost, but at least it appeared that an offense had been found that would put points on the board. All season long the Minutemen had been playing good defense. The thing to do now was put the defense together with the offense.

And they did. the Minutemen came home to Amherst and played well enough to beat visiting Holy Cross. They were in the game or leading the contest until a severe drought from the free throw line (featuring a few "Oh my God, did I just shoot that?" lobs) allowed the Crusaders to slip by for a 75-72 victory.

The thing about the Holy Cross game though, was the fact that UMass could have won. They should have won. Now if the team could just continue to play well enough the win AND hit their free throws down the stretch, they could start chalking up a few victories.

The next Cage contender was Temple University. Bill Cosby was there ("You're smiling aren't you. I see you...") to see his undergraduate alma mater (Temple) play his graduate one. In order to show Cosby a better time, the Minutemen put on two performances, one a melodrama and the other a comedy.

The first half was, quite simply, a very well matched battle that showed promise of turning into a full scale war in the second half as Temple led at halftime, 25-21.

Act II was not what it was expected to be, however. The Minuteman machine collapsed under the stress of a full court trap defense that the Owls unveiled, and the local hoopsters managed only four points in the first eight minutes of play.

To the Minutemen's defense, they were playing without the services of floor general Donald Russell, and his absence was a key factor in what ended up being a guessing game as to whether UMass would lose by more than 20 points. They didn't, but 19 was close enough for the Owls as they prevailed 73-54.

Carrying a four game losing streak on their shoulders and looking to finally put everything together, the Minutemen then travelled down to New Jersey to play Rutgers University. It was the weekend of the big snowstorm and the driving was a little hazardous but not as hazardous as the game that took place that Saturday afternoon in the Rutgers Athletic Center.

The Minutemen discovered what life in the Atlantic Ten was like without the services of sophmore guard Don Russell, who missed the Temple game (73-54 loss) with an injured wrist.

The Scarlet Knights, led by 6'9" bad man Roy Hinson, almost had their flashy 10-2 record coming into the game shoved in their faces as a scrappy effort by the Minutemen provided some pretty tense courtside occurences on both benches, not the least of which was a double bench clearing argument between the players and coaches.

Now if the team could just continue to play well enough to win AND hit their free throws down the stretch...

For several minutes, in fact, the ball might just as well have been put away and the boxing gloves passed out to settle that incident.

When basketball play resumed, Rutgers got their act together and, even though the Minutemen had put on one of their best performances of the year, the end result was still a loss. This time the final score was 79-67.

But things could not go bad forever. And, when the Minutemen finally decided to win a game, they did it in classic form, a triple-overtime victory over Monmouth College, 87-85.

It was a seesaw nail biter as neither team was ever able to take control. With time running out in regulation, the Minutemen found themselves trailing by one point. Donald Russell, who had returned to the lineup for the Rutgers game, stepped to the free throw line with six ticks left on the clock, hit one, missed one and the game ended in a deadlock.

Monmouth scored first during the first five minute period and the going looked bleak for UMass until a John Hempel jumper from almost out of bonus from the left corner tied the game again with only .99 seconds remaining. (Time as reported on the officials clock)

It was UMass in the drivers seat in the second overtime as they scored first. This meant that Monmouth could only tie it up as long as the Minutemen scored when they got the ball. With the score tied and Monmouth sitting back in a zone defense, the locals ran the clockdown for the last shot. Skip Connors, who has been a pleasant surprise for the Minutemen, appeared to have driven in for an easy layup with about six seconds showing on the clock. But a Donald Russell time-out nullified the bucket.

That period ended in a tie and it looked as if both of these teams might be playing all night before anyone was going to give in.

UMass pulled it out in the third overtime in grand fashion when Ron Young buried a 23 footer from the left of the key as the buzzer sounded and the Minutemen celebrated.

Unfortunately, no winning streak was in the offering for the hungry hoopsters. The University of Rhode Island saw to that when they brought the Minutemen back to reality with an 86-76 loss that left UMass winless in the Atlantic Ten.

No, the road of the Minuteman basketball fan was not an easy one during intersession. But, at least school is back in session now. Now there will be other fans to walk that dark road with all its hidden holes and rocks. It's better when everyone is around. Misery loves company.

And then again, maybe, just maybe...See you at the Cage.

Hey, we can still become; Champions of February

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

QUESTION: What do the Massachusetts Minutemen basketball team and Jim Kirk's favorite vulcan, Mr. Spock, have in common?

ANSWER: A lot of people are sure that both are dead.

It will be pretty difficult to tell whether Spock's body will regenerate as a result of the Genesis Project before the next Star Trek movie is released, but he still has a chance. Mr. Spock may be alive after all.

The same is true for the Minutemen. They are not dead. They are not fast breaking their way to the NCAA playoffs, but they haven't given up and gone home.

The clapping and the shouting of encouragement is still present every day in the Curry Hicks Cage as the team runs through preparatory practice sessions. The hustle is still present, so is the desire.

They are a team waiting for a break, a team that needs a push to get rolling. They have the talent to win that is true, but, in collegiate hoop, talent is not everything.

College basketball is as much a game of emotion as anything else. Teams ride high and low periods. Winning streaks and slumps reflect one of the dominant emotions of the game, momentum.

What the Minutemen are lacking is momentum. Last year's squad got all the momentum it would need to carry it through the season when it defeated Duquesne in the Cage. It was the lift, the elation that got everything together.

That lift hasn't arrived yet for UMass, not this year. That, however, does not mean that it won't. It's never too late. One quick burst of energy and a groove would be very easy to find. Never say die. Don't abandon ship.

So, what should returning basketball fans do in order to keep from giving up hope. After all, if they started the season over today and pulled out a couple of close wins instead of dropping a couple of close losses, things might be very different.

That's it. Of course. In order to make the games more fun let's play make believe. (Just like you used to do on Mr. Roger's Neighborhood, "Can you say free throw. I knew you could.")

There are two possible make-believe options that would satisfy just about everyone.

First, let's change the records in our minds. Forget any losses you remember and replace them with victories. Simple arithmetic will tell you that your team is now undefeated. The fans can justifiably go absolutely bonkers in the stands as the team takes the floor now. The Cage can rock with every Edwin Green dunk or Donald Russell fast break layup.

Or, we can put the past behind us and just set out to win February. All we care about now is February. That's the month that counts at UMass. Forget December and January, they're just tuneup months for February. Yep, February, that's our month.

It's something to cheer for, something extra. It's the added dimension to get that winning edge, that special feeling, that momentum. February, that's it, let's go for it.

Just imagine to yourself for a minute, the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team, February Champions of the World. Sounds pretty impressive, doesn't it?

And if the team starts to win more games and you, as a fan, have been yelling your best for THE CAUSE (February, that's our month) then you're part of the victory. Yes, you too can contribute to Cage Craziness.

Things are getting better, the time is now to take February.

And then we'll circle Uranus in search of Klingons. (Sorry) Spock lives.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Jim Floyd believes.

Pearson looking at professional football career

By BILLY SHEA
Collegian Staff

Well, after three seasons of varsity football greatness which was nicely touched off by a tri-recordsetting superhuman 288 yard performance against American International College in the final game of his career (he also set New England career and single season rushing marks that same day), UMass tailback Garry Pearson is taking a step up, starting with a clean slate, this time against the big boys.

It's prove yourself again time for Garry Pearson, except this time the pot waiting on the other end of success is much greater this time. We're not talking about free beer at parties anymore. We're talking football for money, possibly, if Pearson plays his cards right, big money. Pearson doesn't have any fantasies about what pro sports is all about.

"It's a business, I know that much. I've got a lot to learn though, about everything," Pearson said." But I think I'm ready."

"I was happy here but I don't think I realize how happy," said Pearson, reflecting on a career that netted him just about every major rushing record in UMass history.

What Pearson realizes is that all the collegiate records in the world won't mean a thing when he goes to training camp, especially if he decides to go to the NFL. It's play for pay time and it's produce or we'll get somebody else to do it.

Pearson found happiness at UMass and now is looking for happiness in the professional ranks. Right now, Pearson's trying to figure out if he'll be happier in the upstart United States Football League or the security of the NFL. He must decide by January 29 when the Boston Breakers, who chose Pearson as their second territorial pick behind Nebraska's center Dave Remmington, open training camp in Orlando, Florida.

What makes Pearson's decision to opt for the USFL or the NFL extremely difficult is timing. The USFL season begins in March and the NFL draft isn't until April, so Pearson must make up his mind before January 29 workouts begin at the University of Central Florida whether he wants to play for the Breakers or wait for the NFL draft.

So the newly formed United States Football League is moving forward daily in putting together a representative professional football league and at the same time is making decisions for collegiate football stars such as Garry Pearson difficult.

Unlike his UMass teamates Scott LaFond and Wilbur Jackson, Pearson is projected to go fairly high in the NFL draft in April, some say as high as late third round early fourth round, and Pearson must choose between being a top pick in the USFL or a possible fourth rounder in the established NFL where fourth round picks don't always make the team.

"I'll go down to the mini-camp (last weekend at Medford High), see what they are offering and go from there," said Pearson. "I also want to see if they sign Remmington because that could affect my contract."

The money and the success seem to be in the USFL for the 185 pound tailback but Pearson isn't disregarding the NFL by any means.

"I've always wanted to play in the NFL and this league is also something new so I'm giving it a good look."

Pearson's agent, Tom Toner, a former linebacker for the Green Bay Packers who represents such people as Northeastern's Danny Ross and Syracuse's Joe Morris, will be influential in which league Pearson will play in.

"I like him a lot," said Pearson. "I can really sit down and be comfortable with him."

Several questions arise when visions of Garry Pearson in a professional football uniform comes to mind.

Is his 5'11" 185 pound body sturdy enough to absorb the punishment of the NFL or even the USFL? I mean, Lawrence Taylor hits a lot harder than the 210 pound Yankee Conference linebackers that have been taking shots at Pearson the last three years.

Does Pearson possess the speed mandatory to be successful tailback in the NFL or even to be a kick returner or a punt returner? A play against Connecticut comes to mind when Pearson was stopped from behind at the goaline on the tail end of a 60 yard run in which he seemed to run out of gas which seems to suggest he doesn't.

When you are talking about your average football player these questions would be justified. But obviously, Garry Pearson isn't your average football player, so whatever he decides to do, expect results.

Garry Pearson: NFL or USFL? It'll be carrying the ball for the Boston Breakers or back to school to wait for the NFL draft for Pearson.

USFL offering seniors shot at pros

LaFond may stay in school

By BILLY SHEA
Collegian Staff

Scott LaFond gets plenty of respect, and not just because he is 6'2" 260 pounds and turns sideways to squeeze through the weightroom door.

This is a big man who must make a big decision and the All-Yankee Conference offensive lineman is giving pro football a long look.

LaFond, along with teammates Garry Pearson and Wilbur Jackson, was a territorial pick of the Boston Breakers of the United States Football League. But unlike Pearson and Jackson, LaFond isn't sure if he's prepared to withdraw from school and forfeit the last semester of his football scholarship if he doesn't catch on with the Breakers.

"The only way the Breakrs will pick up my educational expenses is if I make the team," said LaFond, who has one semester of classes and a semester of student teaching remaining before graduating.

LaFond doesn't like the idea of leaving school but a mini-camp at Medford High organized by the Breakers a week before tryouts, may help make his decision to go to the Breakers tryout camp at the University of Central Florida January 29 a bit easier to make.

"Me, Wilbur and Garry are going to drive down there and I'm going to check out the competition. I want to see how many lineman are there, how many they plan to keep, see how I stack up against the rest of these guys," explained LaFond. "If I think I have a reasonable shot at making it, I'll go."

When LaFond talks about making it, he means just that, making it.

"Hey, its just like when I came here as a freshman. I just wanna get on the bus. That's all I want to do. I'll play special teams, tackle, guard, center. I don't care. I just want to play for money. That would be great."

Scott LaFond: degree is important.

Money is making LaFond's decision a difficult one. The question in LaFond's mind is: Is it worth risking his last semester of free education to try out for a pro football team where an annual paycheck could be in the $25,000 to $30,000 range?

"I have a lot of things to consider," pointed out LaFond. "I plan to get married in September, so I have to think about a comfortable life for both of us. I'm not greedy. I could live on $30,000 easy."

"But I have to think about my education because it is important to me. If I go and don't make it, it will set me back, as far as my degree is concerned and I'd like to get the degree as soon as possible."

Jackson is Florida-bound

By BILLY SHEA
Collegian Staff

When you hope and pray for an opportunity to do what you like to do and get paid pretty good money to do it, you don't want to miss the chance to give it a try.

So Wilbur Jackson, a senior offensive lineman for the University of Massachusetts last season and a territorial selection of the Boston Breakers of the new United States Football League, will leave school this semester and head to the University of Central Florida in Orlando, January 29 to give his best effort to join the Breaker's squad, for their first season.

"It's an opportunity that most guys don't get and I want to take advantage of it," said Jackson, noting this is the opportunity he has been waiting for.

"The coaches (UMass) told me that I might go in the USFL draft so I was getting ready. This is a chance to play ball for money and I always hoped I'd get a chance," said Jackson.

Not known to work overtime in the weightroom, Jackson is working on cutting a few pounds off his 280 pound frame but at the same time increase his strength, lifting with fellow UMass teammate and Breaker draft pick Scott LaFond.

"Wilbur is a good offensive lineman," said LaFond. "He hardly spent any time in the weightroom, either. His leg drive is unbelievable. All he has to do is straighten his man up and he can move him right out."

A look at Jackson suggests he is carrying around a litle excess luggage, but the senior from Boston is working on his foot speed and agility, which will improve with the loss of weight.

"I'm jumping rope, doing some running, working on my quickness," explained Jackson.

As to what to expect when he arrives in Florida, Jackson hasn't the faintest idea.

Wilbur Jackson: jumping at chance to play for Breakers.

"I'm not even sure how I'm getting down there," said Wilbur. "I guess if I don't fly down I'll take a train. There's supposed to be about 100 guys there. They'll probably keep about 40 for the travelling squad and another 10 on a taxi squad. I don't know. I'm just going down there to try to make the team."

Jackson's priority right now is making the Breaker's football team, but Wilbur isn't totally rejecting a chance to get a degree.

"I'll come back to school to finish up," said the physical education major." Right now though, I have a chance to play professional football and I may never get a chance again. I don't want to pass it up."

UMass women still awake after intersession

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

Life has not been a pajama party for the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team during intersession. Sure, they stayed in the campus center (a place that has room service) when they weren't on the road, but nice accomodations can't overshadow the fact that the team has not won a game since December 14.

The team, which has been billed as a young team going through growing pains, is not quite ready to roll over and play dead for the rest of the season though.

"We haven't given up," said point guard Wendy Ward while a half dozen teammates listened and watched the Sunday night movie in Patti Maguire's fifth floor room. "The attitude hasn't gone down. Everyone is a little down, but they haven't given up."

Ward, who is in a five way tie for third place in league steals (one of the other five is Rebecca Kucks), has seen the Minutewomen play spurts of very good basketball. This could be a good team, she contends.

"Even though we've lost, we have been able to play well sometimes. We just haven't been able to put a whole game together," said Ward.

And, as Ward started talking about the times when the team has played well, heads started to shake up and down all over the room. There have been times when these people have gelled. The engine has turned over, it just hasn't caught yet.

"We were down by 34 at halftime against Yale," nodded Ward, "and only lost to them by 13."

Ward was eager to talk about a Fordham game in which the Minutewomen came back from a 23 point deficit only to fall one bucket short of a 'W' at 77-76.

True, stories about cutting into leads are not the things Wendy Ward wants to talk about. She would much rather be discussing a winning streak then answering all those "What's wrong?" type inquiries. but, when the team isn't winning, that's about all you can talk about, until you win.

Looking at the positive aspects of the Campus Center stay, Karen Damminger earned Atlantic Ten Rookie-of-the-Week honors for the second time following a 21 point performance in a losing battle with West Point. Damminger, who was picked for the first time after a burst of 27, 10 and 19 points against Harvard, Fairfield, and Boston College respectively back in mid-December, has been an exceptional freshman among a troup of talent frosh.

Barbara Hebel continues to lead the team in scoring with a steady 15 points a game average. That's good for fifth in the league's individual scoring leader statistics.

Rosterwise, Nadine Jackson has returned to the squad and should add strength to the Minutewomen's inside game.

And, the Minutewomen will be playing a majority of their schedule games at home from here on in.

A couple of the players giggle at something that had occurred on the television and the noise level increased. Still a few others joked with each other about themselves and other members of the team.

"We have the potential to play well," finished Wendy Ward as still a few more teammates come into watch the TV, laugh and hang out.

No, life has not been a pajama party for the Minutewomen this intersession.

The team is not winning, but Wendy Ward knows things will only get better.

Thompson threat may be deeper than you think

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

Georgetown coach John Thompson must hold himself in pretty high esteem. While most college basketball mentors try to convince their star players not to head for the big money of the NBA before graduation, he has decided that he may give one of his boys a shove out of the nest to fly or die in the pros.

In early January, following a Hoya loss at the hands of St. John's, Thompson said that he would tell sophomore center Pat Ewing to go pro if the pushing and shoving of his star player continued. Ewing was being harassed too much and the referees weren't even trying to help him out, lamented Thompson.

Bad idea John. If Pat Ewing thinks that there is pushing and shoving going on now, then he won't be able to have any fun at all in the big league. Wait until the Rick Robeys and Moses Malones start to pay nightly housecalls, then Ewing will feel what it's like to be pushed and shoved.

But, then again, maybe the decision has already been made. Ewing might have already decided to forego his junior and senior years at Georgetown and this is all some plan by an alumni group that allows Ewing to leave without downgrading the program.

Think about it. With Ralph Sampson sticking with school and holding off on the big money for a full four years, Ewing would most likely look like a bad guy, a greedy alterego to Sampson should he go hardship.

But, if Ewing is martyred all year long for being physically molested on the hardwood, he just might be able to pick up a few more points on the popularity scale.

"Poor Pat Ewing. He had to go pro so that college kids wouldn't pick on him anymore."

"It was horrible, guys were pushing and shoving him and he couldn't do anything to get away. It was just horrible."

Maybe it will become one of the year's big sports stories. Instead of watching highlight films filled with slam dunks and behind-the-back passes, fans can be treated to slow motion replays of Ewing as he grimaces in pain after an elbow in the ribs.

Everyone will get into it. Last year was the dawn of the tee-shirt under the game jersey. (Everyone does it now.) This year will be the year that Ewing develops a new approach to the game, the pained expression. Little kids will practice folding their bodies up in front of the mirror at home as if they had been hit really hard so that their routine is perfect in the next youth league game.

Teams may adopt a game philosophy that includes a designated role of "fouled viciously and with malicious intent" in it. Ex-football punters would probably be good guys to pick up for this integral position since they have already held jobs with a need for some acting skill.

That may be the answer. It is all part of a carefully planned public relations move to help with Ewing's image. After, all, he is turning into a very valuable piece of property and the NBA is always trying to get better PR.

Or maybe Thompson really does think that the going will be easier and less dangerous for Ewing when he leaves school. I don't think so.

Boyden basketball can be fun despite the crowd

By BILLY SHEA
Collegian Staff

The intramural basketball season is upon us and the panic it stirs among the former high school player who hasn't picked up a ball since his last intramural game last year will be felt all through this first week at Boyden.

This brave sole will attempt to resurrect skills that once made him a legend in his own mind in just one week and what this influx creates is an overpopulation problem at Boyden.

When you step through the door of Boyden gymnasium and observe a sea of grey university gym outfits running up and down every court, and countless people standing on the sideline, don't despair.

First of all, if you're alone you have a distinct advantage over the guy who came with a couple of buddies. You have more flexibility, thus you won't have to turn down a good run if there's no room for your friend.

Boyden regulars who come alone have the best shot at slipping by guys who've been waiting an hour to play. Just scan the gym. Look for the familiar faces. You don't have to know their names. That's not important. What's important is — if you can play — whether or not the kid has room for you on his squad. He's probably seen you play, so the better you are, the easier it is to get picked up.

Guys that show with three or more guys forget about getting pick up if it's crowded and call their own winners. Calling winners is important. Who you call it with is even more important. Just don't turn to anybody and call winners.

Track down who has winners before you and call it with the guy that has the winners immediately before you. That way, if someone tries to steal your winners, just bring the kids right to the man you called winners with. After a minor confrontation, probably consisting of several dirty looks, the game should be yours.

Choosing a court is important in getting a decent workout without spending an entire afternoon at Boyden. Naturally, everyone heads right to the glass hoops to see what the situation is there because, lately, that's where the best games are being played. That will be the most crowded court, but three other courts should be open. (Boyden likes to keep a court open for badminton and volleyball, so beware of spiked, volleyballs or birdies floating through your game.)

Speaking of Boyden safety, watch out for guys shooting on one hoop while your down the other end. Because the place is so crowded, some people insist on risking the safety of themselves and the players in the game, so they can be adequately warmed-up when their big game is up. It doesn't matter what you tell them, they'll do it anyway, so the best idea is to be alert. Physical abuse abounds. Personal safety is top priority.

The most important thing to remember down at Boyden is to have someone on your team keep score and make sure he opens his mouth if there's a problem with the scores. Best to pick someone big. They usually have a little more success with people who can't add.

They play winners to 15, and that can go awful quick. The nicest thing about a crowded Boyden is that it tends to boost the level of play. No one likes to sit after waiting an hour and only play one 15 minute game.

So whatever happens to you down at Boyden this week or in the future, remember one thing. No matter how intense the play may get and regardless of the few obnoxious people you may encounter, it's only a game.

UMass gymnastics shaping up

Team works on strength and routines

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team worked hard over intersession, focusing on problem areas and improved their routines and scored in almost every event, by increasing the difficulty of their moves.

The team's workout consisted of two hours of lifting weights three days a week, strength workouts and calisthenics four hours a week Monday through Saturday. The team's objective was to improve scores on rings and vault. The strength workouts helped to improve the ring's score almost two full points. In a non-league victory over Cornell on January 22, the Minutemen improved both scores defeating the shaky Cornell team.

The strength workouts helped raise the vaulting score but it was mainly a running drill which contributed to the successful scores. Tony Sbarra and Willie Stevens both received 9.2 for their double front somersault vaults and Peter Lucchini hit a piked tsukahara for a 9.3 score. John Macurdy took the high score with a 9.5. All together, the vaulting score was raised one point.

UMass improved a point in floor exercises with Macurdy coming up with a strong 9.55 performance. Macurdy is currently tied for seventh place in the East with his 9.55 on floor exercise.

For the past three weeks the team has been working on strength moves and cleaning up moves. That is one reason why the pommel horse scores did not improve.

"We showed good improvement in all events except pommels," co-captain Bob Goulart said. "There were strong performances but the breaks were there. We have to sit down and perfect all of the moves we've learned."

After two weeks of weightlifting and three weeks of various strength workouts, the team took two days last week to do only routines. With this training procedure, coach Roy Johnson, who is not worried about the pommel horse scores, expects the Minutemen to come through.

"Our real objective has been to improve our ring and vault score, which we did," Johnson said. "And we can improve a lot more. We've improved our strength on rings and now we have to work on our form on pommels."

The team looks in good shape as they prepare for East Stroudsburg on Friday. Co-captain John McGonagle performed a powerful rings routine against Cornell, executing a near perfect cross and keeping a straight body on his handstands to earn a score of 9.65. McGonagle is seventh in the East for his rings score.

"I think that was his best performance," Johnson said, "He was holding a much stronger cross, his stands are better and he hit his dismount."

Bert Mathieson and Willie Stevens are two top performers for UMass who have worked hard over intersession to improve. Mathieson, who is ranked ninth in the East in all-around competition with a 53.2, has learned three new skills including a front toss on the parallel bar and a veronin (release skill) on the high bar.

Stevens has cleaned up his floor routine and added a double twisting back somersault. Johnson said Stevens' pommel horse routine looked better as did his vault. Both Stevens and Mathieson can be counted on for the rest of the season to bring UMass top scores.

UMass women gymnasts shape up over break

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

While most were at home earning enough money from part-time jobs to buy this semester's books, one group of women were in Boyden gymnasium, lifting weights to improve their cardiovascular endurance.

The workouts paid off as the University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team scored an all-time high of 170.7 points against Yale in its first meet in six weeks. The Minutewomen, who have a record of 4-1, walked over Yale by eight points on January 22 (170.7-162.30) after three weeks of strength and endurance training.

Besides lifting weights, the women had normal workouts but began learning new tricks which are being gradually worked into routines. The team lifted weights only two or three times as week so as not to tighten muscles or alter their balance, according to coach Ken Anderson. A group dance routine was also added to the workouts.

"I'd have them dance together every day," Anderson said, "so I'd know they're warmed up."

New moves were learned to increase the difficulty level and gain more points. Anderson plans to restrict the women to the level at which they have clean solid routines. The new tricks will be slowly added into performances through the end of February, when the team will meet the New England's top ranked team, the University of New Hampshire. By slowly improving, Anderson hopes to be at UNH's level by the February 20 meet at New Hampshire.

One of the reasons UMass won the Yale meet was execution. Yale had several difficulty tricks which would have scored high if they were hit. UMass saved its big tricks and performed smooth, clean routines.

"They (Yale) weren't consistent in their routines," Anderson said. "They're not as clean as we are. I won't let someone do something until I'm sure they can do it."

The Minutewomen performed without one of their top all-around performers, Tricia Harrity, who is out indefinitely with an ankle injury.

"Considering she was out, I think we came up with a strong meet," Anderson said. "Vaulting was very strong for us and bars, which tends to be our weaker event, came through."

Vaulting was the first event and UMass didn't waste any time climbing out on top. Sue Allen and Robin Low both placed first with matching 9.1's. Allen hit a tsukahara in a tucked position for her vault, and Low performed a tsukahara in a pike position.

On the uneven bars, Yale's Gay Bronsons hit her difficult moves to pick up the high score witha 9.05. Allen placed second with an 8.9.

Low took the balance beam event with an 8.95, and proceeded to take honors on the floor exercise with a lively performance. The best by far on floor exercises, according to Anderson, Low captured an all-time high for herself in all-around competition with 36.2 points. Low is in the top 20 in the nation for all-around performance this year.

"We're a much stronger team in the balance beam," said Anderson. "There's been great improvement. Considering we didn't have a full line up and Karen Knapp had a watered down routine on floor because of a bad ankle, we did very well."

The Minutewomen had two new faces added to the line up against Yale. Incoming freshman Lisa Griffen just became eligible in January to compete for UMass. Griffen performed in the vault, balance beam and floor event scoring highest in floor exercise with a 9.0. Anderson said that Griffen was not in shape but did perform well.

Senior Janice Baker competed for the first time in almost three years after a knee injury sidelined her in her freshman year. Baker, who competed in the uneven bars and scored a 7.4, is a former Olympic trialist. She finished tenth in the nation in all-around competition in 1976.

Wingert winging it as UMass gymnast

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

When he was younger, Lew Wingert had his hands full trying to keep up with his little brother who seemed to be trying out for everything under the sun. The only way to keep up with him was to do what his little brother was doing.

If his brother got into karate, Wingert got into it. When his brother got into gymnastics, Wingert did too. The difference between the two was that Lew's brother didn't stick with things very long. But Wingert did and that's how he got into gymnastics.

"In the beginning, I really wasn't interested in it aside from my brother's interest," said Wingert, who competes in five events for the UMass gymnastics team. "Four of us tried out for the team and I was the only one who stuck with it."

Wingert went out for gymnastiacs in junior high school but said it wasn't until tenth grade that it began to become almost a profession. He tried pole vaulting in high school. "There was no pressure on me because it's related to gymnastics. I'd come in first or second every other meet," he said. He also tried tennis but dropped it to stick with gymnastics. He was the captain of his team in his last two years of high school and taught recreational gymnastics to elementary school children during those two summers.

"Lew is a very hard worker," Roy Johnson, coach of the UMass team said. "If he continues to improve as he did over interesession it would be great. He could be a real solid performer."

Wingert came to UMass because he knew there was a spot for him, unlike his first choice, Southern Connecticut, who had a very strong program. "I'd be their waterboy," Wingert said.

"I saw it was a growing team (UMass)," Wingert said. "I saw it was the place for me. There was a big void because the team lost eight seniors. I knew the team would get better."

Lew Winert: backbone of gymnastics team.

As a freshman, he competed in rings and pommel horse. This year, long horse vaulting is the only event he doesn't compete in. Through his hard work over intersession, he has improved close to four points on his overall score.

One of his philosophies is that you can always stand to get better. No matter how good we are, we can only get better. We (the team) haven't reached our peak yet," said Wingert.

Knowledge is important to him. He said it's impossible to know everything in your lifetime but, like in gymnastics, he sets high standards for himself.

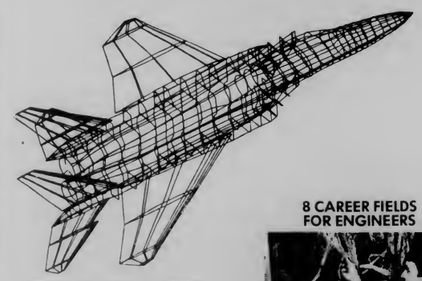
ENGINEERING TAKES ON EXCITING NEW DIMENSIONS IN THE AIR FORCE.



Computer-generated design for investigating structural strengths and weaknesses.

Developing and managing Air Force engineering projects could be the most important, exciting challenge of your life. The projects extend to virtually every engineering frontier.

8 CAREER FIELDS FOR ENGINEERS

Air Force electrical engineer studying aircraft electrical power supply system.

Engineering opportunities in the Air Force include these eight career areas: aeronautical, aerospace, architectural, astronautical, civil, electrical, mechanical and nuclear. Hundreds of diverse specialties are included in a wide variety of work settings. For example, an electrical engineer may work in aircraft design, space systems, power production, communications or research. A mechanical engineer might be involved in aircraft structure design, space vehicle launch pad construction, or research.

PROJECT RESPONSIBILITY COMES EARLY IN THE AIR FORCE

Air Force mechanical engineer inspecting aircraft jet engine turbine.

Most Air Force engineers have complete project responsibility early in their careers. For example, a first lieutenant directed work on a new airborne electronic system to pinpoint radiating targets. Another engineer tested the jet engines for advanced tanker and cargo aircraft.

OPPORTUNITIES IN THE NEW USAF SPACE COMMAND

Recently, the Air Force formed a new Space Command. Its role is to pull together space operations and research and development efforts, focusing on the unique technological needs of space systems. This can be your opportunity to join the team that develops superior space systems as the Air Force moves into the twenty-first century.

To learn more about how you can be part of the team, see your Air Force recruiter or call our Engineer Hotline toll free 1-800-531-5826 (in Texas call 1-800-292-5366). There's no obligation.

Don't get the impression LaFond is shying away from a challenge, because this guy exudes confidence when he speaks.

"It's not the NFL but it's hittin' anyway you look at it," LaFond said of the USFL. "There's gonna be some hard hitting but I'm ready to go down there and move a few people around."

He might be moving a few people he knows around. Former UMass offensive linemen Chris O'Neil and Victor Pizzotti will report to the Orlando based camp as free agents.

LaFond realizes there are going to be some desperate folks down there, who would go to just abut any extreme to make the Breakers.

"People say, 'oh you're a gymnast' and think you sit there and twiddle your thumbs," Wingert said. "I want to be more than that because after I get out of school, no one's going to remember my gymnastics."

On the UMass team, Wingert is the backbone. He's the first man. He's the one who has to start the team off right.

"Lew can score 8.5 no problem," Johnson said. "If he starts the team off with an 8.5 average that can push us right up to a 9.0 which we want to get."

Although he comes from a line of workaholics, Wingert said he tries not to be one. He likes to work a lot but wants to dedicate some time to something worthwhile. After college, Wingert plans to still workout in gymnastics but won't compete.

Scott McQuaide, a junior from Lowell has been a bright spot in an otherwise disappointing season for the 0-5 University of Massachusetts wrestling team. McQuaide has a 12-5 overall (including tournaments) and has six pins to his credit in the 158 pound class and placed third in the MIT tournament.

Movies: critiquing the dogs

By ANDREW GORDON

TOOTSIE

The E.T. of this winter, this comedy has been a critical and commercial success and will probably pick up an armload of Oscar nominations next month.

Dustin Hoffman, in his first film since 1979's Kramer vs. Kramer, is excellent as the unemployable actor Michael Dorsey and his female counterpart Dorothy Michaels. He again brings humor, pathos and insight to his role(s), creating not one, but two, full-bodied characters; which eventually mesh into one.

Director Sydney Pollack must also be praised. Pollack, who also plays Hoffman's flustered agent in Tootsie, has put together a film which, though it is both sensitive and funny, never sacrifices one for the other. Pollack also pulls some dynamic performances from his supporting players.

Teri Garr is super as an acting student and girlfriend (sort of) of Hoffman's. Flaky and sincere, it's a role she's played many times before; I think she is the role. Bill Murray gives a beautifully understated performance as Hoffman's intense playwright roommate. Rumor has it he totally improvised the character, which was created by Elaine May (though she is uncredited in the film).

Then there's good guy/bad guy character actors Charles Durning and Dabney Coleman, but standing out is Jessica Lange who, as the soap star love interest, creates a complexly tender character in Julie; naive yet worldly, soft but tough. Lange has finally broke out of the starlet stigma of King Kong and has established herself as a leading Hollywood actress. She follows the film with the title role in the soon-to-be-released Frances.

It is in the characters that the strength of all film lies, and Tootsie screenwriters Larry Gelbart and Murray Schisgal understand this. It is to their credit that they use these wonderful characters as a vehicle for an important message.

The film does have one flaw, though. You may think it petty but Tootsie has what are easily the worst extras of any film I have ever seen. In particular, the film's closing scene is a beautiful dolly shot moving backwards down a long New York street. The focus is Hoffman and Lange, but what distracted the hell out of me was the fact that the extras, dozens of them, remain completely motionless until several moments after they come into camera view, and then they come to life and move in ridiculously precise and overplayed movements.

Pet peeves about background action aside, Tootsie is the best film to come out this season.

What an adorable couple! Goldie Hawn and Burt Reynolds do nothing more than make goo-goo eyes at each other for 90 minutes in Best Friends.

BEST FRIENDS

Best Friends, on the other hand, could vie for this season's worst. Burt Reynolds and Goldie Hawn star as Richard and Paula, two screenwriting lovers who abruptly get married and then just kind of hang-out, and go places, visit their folks, break up and get back together.

The film goes nowhere. But then again, it doesn't start anywhere either. I don't know what the film was trying to be, but it's less funny than most T.V. sitcoms and less romantic than many recent coffee commercials.

If the characters are Tootsie's major strength, they are Best Friend's major weakness. We get no insight at all into the main characters, and this is probably because the filmmakers didn't feel the need to give us any. We know Burt Reynolds and we know Goldie Hawn, so why bother with the hassle of building Richard and Paula. Once every ten minutes or so they just have Burt laugh his impish Burt laugh and Goldie smile her cutesy Goldie smile and we're expected to like them. Well this is not the case. Richard and Paula rag and whine and complain throughout the duration of the film and only pause to make goo-goo eyes and share really stupid inside jokes that we're not privy to. They're no more intersting or likeable than anyone else in the film, only more attractive.

THE VERDICT

Another winner from Sidney Lumet who gave us Serpico, Dog Day Afternoon, Network and more great films than I can list here. Lumet here gives us an intense character study of a down-and-out Boston lawyer, played to perfection by Paul Newman.

Newman's lawyer is an alcoholic ambulance chaser who is thrown a big malpractice case by a friend and colleague. Through the case he seeks to absolve himself, to prove he isn't a bum. We become connected to the character, sympathetic to his wearied idealism, and his struggle becomes important to us.

With him are Jack Warden in a good performance as Newman's friend and Charlotte Rampling in an unnecessary role as a love interest. Against him are powerful performances by James Mason as the prominent defense attorney and Milo O'Shea as a judge you just want to hit.

Lumet very successfully combines the drama of the trial process, as he did with 12 Angry Men, with the intensity of personal conflict, like his Prince of the City. The film may ultimately be simple and predictable, but it is exhilarating and very satisfying.

TRAIL OF THE PINK PANTHER

A challenge to Best Friends. It's hard to call the newest of the pink panther pictures the worst film of the winter as it really isn't a film at all. It's a slapdash compilation of scraps, clips, out-takes and poorly shot new footage thrown together in an effort to cash in on the appeal of the late Peter Sellers.

Well, it doesn't work, because we've seen the clips before and taken out of context they're not half as funny as when we first saw them; the out-takes were out-takes for a reason: they're abominable; and as for the new footage, it's so drawn-out, boring and pretentious that viewing is thoroughly unpleasureable.

The Trail of the Pink Panther doesn't work on any level; not as comedy, not as documentary (which it often purports to be) and certainly not as tribute. If director Blake Edwards had any respect for Sellers he wouldn't have blasphemed him so unmercifully.

AIRPLANE II; THE SEQUEL

This comedy, on the other hand, doesn't try to be anything it's not. I was led to believe that this film was a useless rehash by several local film critics, who complained that the film too closely paralleled the structure and humor of the original. Well, what did they want, Woody Allen? Airplane II gives the audience everything that appealed to them in the original: jokes, parody, humorous references and sight gags. Sure it has old jokes, but it also has hundreds of new ones.

Not a bad film at all. It is silly, sophomoric fun.

48 HOURS

And speaking of exhilarating, 48 Hours is a powerhouse detective flick which combines all the staples of a successful actioner: sex, violence, humor, interesting characters and a good storyline.

These are all things which come with the territory in any Walter Hill film. Director Hill's films, in particular The Long Riders, Southern Comfort, The Driver, and The Warriors, feature non-stop action, fast pacing and a steady camera. Like these latter two films, 48 Hours is set against the steamy neon nights of the city, in this case San Francisco.

Nick Nolte stars as a grizzled cop searching for a psychotic escaped convict and his partner. The two are running around town shooting cops and civilians as they search for some hidden money. Eddie Murphy comes into the picture as another convict recruited for 48 hours to help Nolte.

Murphy is excellent in this his motion picture debut. With sleepy eyes and a wise-ass smile he brings a sense of urgency to the character. Paramount is pushing for a supporting actor nomination for the young comedian.

In other roles, Nolte is good, but looks terminal; Annette O'Toole is beautiful, but wasted in a small, thankless role and David Patrick Kelly, the lunatic leader of the Rogues in The Warriors, again plays a punk with a screw loose.

& doves of the winter season

Laura (Mary Beth Hurt) and Charles (John Heard) exchange pillowtalk in a scene from Chilly Scenes of Winter.

CHILLY SCENES OF WINTER

The sleeper hit of the year. This film was originally released in 1979 under the title Head Over Heels but received a fate which has plagued many fine films: when release time approached, the distributor (in this case United Artists) got nervous and pulled out its advertising dollars. Conversely the film died a quick death at the box office.

What finally happened to this film is the same thing that saved such films as Cutter's Way, The Stuntman and Inside Moves; UA Classics, a recently formed subsidiary of United Artists, rescued the film and gave it a second chance. The picture was re-edited, re-titled and re-released at small, selective markets.

The resulting film has been titled Chilly Scenes of Winter, after the Ann Beattie novel on which it is based. The story tells of Charles (John Heard) and his doomed obsessive love for Laura (Mary Beth Hurt). Charles' plight is funny and sad and easy to relate to.

Head Over Heels was a good movie but Chilly Scenes is far superior. It is tighter, funnier and more effective. There are less scenes with Charles' kooky mom (Gloria Grahame) and more with he and Laura; their relationship takes more of a front seat in this version. The film is also more conclusive, with a really nifty tracking shot tacked on at the end.

Director Joan Micklin Silver, who also wrote the screenplay, has done an excellent job. Like her Hester Street and Between the Lines, a number of characters are introduced and well sustained by respectful direction, pacing and acting.

Heard and Hurt are charming in the leads, as are Peter Riegert as Heard's shiftless housemate, Tarah Nutter as his sister and Kenneth McMillan as his devoted stepfather. All the performers work well as an ensemble. The characters all seem to really like and care about one another; this is something often lacking in Hollywood films.

As an interesting side note, the film was produced by three actors — Amy Robinson, Griffin Dunne (American Werewolf in London) and Mark Metcalf (Animal House) — who got tired of waiting for movies to come along and decided to make one themselves. The three, who also appear in the film, will next move on to Baby, It's You, which they are producing for John Sayles.

Eddie Murphy (left) stars as an off-beat convict recruited by detective Nick Nolte (right) to help capture a cop-killing punk in 48 Hours.

E.T. — beauty or the beast

con

By JOHN F. HUDSON

Andy, you sentimental wimp. It's really sad, yet typical, that you would fall for this trite, overblown, self-indulgent movie. It's not enough that you have the originality of an "I Love Lucy" rerun in praising this movie along with every other bimbo critic in the world. No, you also have to push this simplistic opinion on our unsuspecting readers — score another one for the Rex Reed of the Collegian. Next stop, the Boston Herald perhaps?

Many criticis claim, including my dubious colleague, that E.T. is the story of a lost alien and his "touching" friendship with a small boy. Wake up Gordon! The creature, like youself, is pudgy ,lifeless, and worthless. If your idea of a good movie is one in which a four-foot tall foam rubber creature lusts after a sickly sweet spoiled brat, I imagine you also enjoy cold oatmeal, Silhouette Romances, and one-night stands. Do you know what shallow, one-dimensional and sleazy mean? Sure, I knew you did.

Supposedly the movie borrows from such childhood classics as The Wizard of Oz and Alice in Wonderland. Like most of your previous newspaper articles Gordon, director Steve Spielberg has also chosen to plagarize original material. In your case this really doesn't surprise me considering the words private property are not to be found in your somewhat limited vocabulary. While on the subject of ripoffs, do you think I could borrow your E.T. t-shirt or toilet paper, lunch box, notebook, soap, or stuffed dolly? (A note to the readers — be forewarned! Andy has really taken this E.T. thing quite too seriously. He wishes to be addressed from now on as Elliot. He gets quite upset if you don't.) Really Andy, its not as if corporate America is trying to manipulate the vulnerable emotions of kids all over America by hocking E.T. items at grossly expensive prices, now is it?

Elliot has been lauded as the epitome of wonder and curiosity in small children. Yet how realistically does this child Elliot represent childhood, universal childhood for that matter. In a typical Hollywood style, the movie neglects to address questions of the conflicts, problems and the maturation process which is the true essence of growing up as a child, as a youngster learning, yet stumbling and falling on occasion. Elliot is merely a homogenized version of children in white, middle class America, an America which Hollywood constantly foists upon unsuspecting moviegoers.

In retrospect, E.T. obviously has, and will continue, to entertain millions of people around the world. Yet if this entertainment threatens the chance for a Diner, a Moonlighting or a Harold and Maude from being made, this "entertainment," has come at a costly price indeed. You take E.T. and Porky's and the millions they made, Andy. I'm sure you'll be in good company.

By ANDREW GORDON

John, you heartless bastard. Who else but you could resist the wonderful magic E.T. has spread from coast to coast and around the globe. But you can't stand the thought of so many deriving so much pleasure. No, you have to be different. Well different is something we've always known about you.

E.T. is a tender, beautiful fantasy story of the relationship between a young boy and the extra-terrestrial creature that becomes stranded on earth. I'm sorry you had to miss a night of bowling and beating your dog, but I'm even sorrier that you can't be touched in the way millions of people were. Oh sure, you're touched in the head, but that's not the same thing.

E.T. typifies escapism as a film form; the ability cinema has to take one away, to forget all the horrible things and people in the world, like you John. It is manipulative, I grant you, but in the way all great cinema is. The music, the visuals; everything combines to become the total experience that is E.T. The feeling created is moving and very positive. But I guess you've been desensitized by seven nights a week at the Majestic Cinema.

There are many literary references in E.T. Careful observers have pointed out correlations with such varied sources as The Bible and The Wizard of Oz. But is that plagiarism? Of course not; what a stupid point, John. I suppose you thought West Side Story was a shameless rip-off of Romeo and Juliet. Or that My Fair Lady should be pulled from release because of its sinful similarity to Pygmalion.

I can't justify the outrageous manufacturing tie-in that accompanied the picture, but the deal wasn't made by Spielberg, or by Elliot, or by the "pudgy, lifeless" creature, so why blame them.

The deal was made by Universal pictures. Okay, granted, I eat more Reese's Pieces than I did before, and millions of people treasure their E.T. dolls, but is there really anything wrong with that? If people want or need a character to emulate, to admire, why not E.T., one that is good and positive? Who are your heroes, Hudson? Scrooge? Captain Blye? The Grinch who stole Christmas?

Like the stupid jerk you are, you chose only to look at the film for what it's not. It was director Steven Spielberg's intention to make a film that would convey the wonder of childhood, much as his idol Francois Truffaut did with Small Change. Spielberg succeeded. E.T. is told, felt, even filmed from the level of Elliot, the little boy. It stirs up universal feelings of growing-up, feelings we can all relate to. Except you John, you probably spent your youth stripping cars and stealing other kids' milk money.

At the crux of the issue I think you're confusing the commercial overkill of E.T. with the film itself. E.T. is not Porkys. It has a heart. Which obviously you don't, you crusty curmudgeon. So keep your pornography and demented heroes, we'll take E.T.

Cool for cats

Sculatti's Catalog of Cool is, like, frigid man!

THE CATALOG OF COOL
Edited by Gene Sculatti
Warner Bros., 216 pp., $6.95

By DOUGLAS MUISE

I've always been a tad suspicious of books that profess to catalog some entity or interest. Visions of those 2000 page planks published by Sears and Roebuck, with everything from socket sets to brassieres represented therein, immediately leap into my head. The principle of the thing seems self-annihilating — you just cannot compile a definitive catalog on a subject without churning out something slipshod at best and always glaringly incomplete.

But now I find Gene Sculatti's The Catalog of Cool buried at the foot of my Christmas stocking. Another "catalog" I snicker. And a catalog of "cool" no less. Just a sec Daddy-O, how could anybody catalog cool? That's like condensing Shakespeare. You kind of lose something in the transition. But that's even to say nothing of the terminology you're up against. How in the hell do you even begin to define something as ineffable as cool? We're certainly not talking Toughskin jeans here.

In another bestselling "catalog" of the year past, The Preppie Handbook, all Lisa B. had to do (clever lady that she is) was commit to paper the finer points of a cultural phenomena most of us are (ugh) already knee deep in knowledge of. After all, preppiness is so easy to discern. When someone's gonzo prep, you can damn well catch the vital signs. But when popular opinion holds someone or thing to be cool, appreciation comes less readily. Moreover, there's no real vantage point from which to judge. So what do you rely on? Personal opinion? The current ravings of pop fad and fashion? Cool is going to mean different things to different people.

Sculatti's certainly got his work cut out for him in The Catalog of Cool, that's a safe enough assumption from the start. And with something like coolness, a shaky enough concept to begin with, you can be sure he's pressured into make a bumper crop of value judgements. But here Sculatti plays it smart. He's enlisted the cool competencies of a number noted hipsters such as Richard Meltzer, Steve. X. Rea, Joe Goldberg, Swamp Dogg, and Sal Zero, and each fills a section on their speciality. And its all here folks: the hip sounds from Elvis to Elvis Costello, the hip sees from Citizen Kane to Eating Raoul, the hip reads from On the Road to the Electric Kool-Aid Acid Test, the hip threads from Campbell Soup paper dress to wood-grain Nehrus, and even a special section on the all-time "gone" TV shows (would you believe The Bullwinkle Show is considered cool?). Sound like fun? You bet.

But first Sculatti strips our conceptions of what cool is all about. He says that cool is neither a fad nor fashion and has nothing whatsoever to do with being "with it" or "in" by present standards. Furthermore, the true state of cool is immutable; it is eternal —

> True cool is nothing more (or less) than the fullest expression of what it is that's different or unique about a person. Someone taps his uniqueness and liberally invests his creations with it. When these creations or expressions achieve maximum input, that's cool. Imagination counts.

The inimit[illegible] ss-over tie; cross-over to a better fi[illegible]

Sculatti is quick to point out that, unlike becoming a preppie, coolness cannot be acquired or shed with the expediency of an Izod and a pair of khakis:

> Learning everything that's between these covers won't make you cook, any more than its made any of us cool (Just look!). You are cool if you go away from here and invent your own version of cool.

I think a lot of people (myself included) conceive of cool as the product of some lost beatnik/hippie aesthetic born in a smoke inebriated cafe in Soho — hipster in nehru and beret reciting stream-of-conscious poetry interjected with hoarse "crazy man's" and accompanied by the soft, steady thumpa thumpa of a bongo drum in the background. This had to be where cool got its start. But not so in actuality, and most jazz affectionados will know what I'm talking about.

"Jazz musicians were probably the first people to use the word cool who weren't talking about the weather," says contributor Joe Goldberg in the book's first chapter. Goldberg attributes the rightful origination of cool to the jazzmen and proto-hipsters of the late '40s. Cool's usage stemmed from a growing revolt in the musical community countering Louis Armstrong and his "Hot Five." "Armstrong and his ensemble had become synonymous with 'hot jazz,' so musicians concerned with overturning Armstrong's primacy couldn't call themselves 'hot' no matter how blazing they were." "Cool jazz," since trivialized by those inane Kool cigarette advertisements, was born in Harlem's Minton's Playhouse and Munroe's Uptown House where bebop got its start back in 1947, according to Goldberg. Cool's nativity was also nurtured by early recordings from the two founders of bebop: Dizzy Gillespie's Cool Breezes and Charlie Parker's Cool Blues. Note the "cool" in each title.

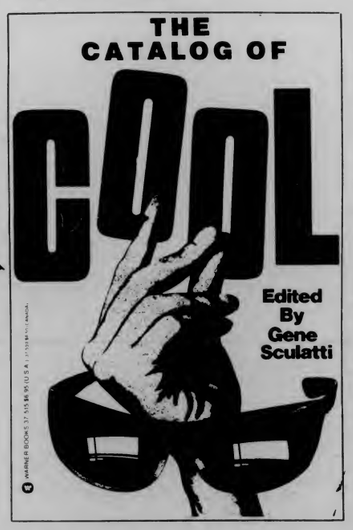
Le zoot suit



Moving from jazz to a more popular front, in "Who's Cool in Music" Sculatti has assembled a compendium of must have albums from half a dozen musical schools. I wholeheartedly agree with artist pix such as Bo Diddly, Bob Dylan ("From '64 to '66, Mr. Maximum Utmost. How did it feel?"), Buddy Holly, Jerry Lee Lewis ("The killer awoke at dawn. He wants a drink."), the Velvet Underground ("New York's punk parents were evil mothers"), and the B-52's. But Sculatti has also seen fit to include such dreadfully un-cool acts such as ABBA, Tom Waits, and Henry Mancini. Sculatti's taste is a bit questionable, but then cool is mostly a matter of opinion anyway, right?

A lot of the flicks listed in "The Fifty Coolest Movies Ever Made" hit the screen way before my time and hence many are unfamiliar. If you're a film freak however, I'm sure a few of the titles will be instantly recognizable — Doctor Strangelove, High School Confidential, The Horror of Party Beach, Mean Streets, Kitten with a Whip, and The Cool Ones among others are praised by Sculatti for their intrin[illegible] neglects to mention such killers (at least in my [illegible]ind anyway) as Blackboard Jungle, Rebel Without a Cause, and On the Waterfront. Brando and Dean uncool? I dunno Gene.

What catalog of cool would be complete without a little something on one of the "wildest, grooviest, hippiest, swingin'est, double-frantic, maddest, most exquisite cats that ever breathed," Richard "Lord" Buckley? A master of black jazz-rap extrapolations, Buckley constructed gloriously insane and elaborate monologues on everything from the life of Christ, in "The Nazz" ("the sweetest far-out cat that ever stomped on this Sweet Green Sphere!") to Marc Antony's oration at Caesar's funeral. Sculatti has even inserted one of Buckley's most celebrated poetic works: "Hipsters, Flipsters, and Finger-Poppin' Daddies." Groove along with one of cool's granddaddies.

In his "Forty Must-Haves, Hiply Writ" book section, Sculatti recommends to us, aside from every scrap of paper Jack Keruac every scribbled on, a massive hodgepodge of detective thrillers, gothic novels, demented autobiographies, Sci Fi scorchers and various other works inundated with punk anti-heroes, Bowery beatniks, and existential post-men. You'll find no Shakespeare here, no Faulkner, no Joyce, nor Milton. The real literary heavies are apparently uncool in Sculatti's mind, although Milton's Satan seems to me a Mr. Ultimate Utmost if there ever was one. The guy takes teenage rebellion to the heights in telling the Old Man himself to shove it. What could be cooler than that I wonder? An apparent oversight.

Frankenstein, The Late Risers, The Long Goodbye, Love in the Ruins, One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest, The Secret Life of Salvador Dali, Nightmare in Pink, Against Nature — quite a lineup and all first rate.

The "Hip Threads" portion of the catalog contains pretty much what I expected — minis, sack dresses, and pop-it beads for the woman; cross-over ties, tab collar shirts, and zoot suits for the guys. There's nothing, however, on leather jacket etiquette, capris pants, or white bucks. Too bad. There is a section by Byron Laursen on customizing your Levis, but I fail to see how shaving the stitching from the back pockets or removing the belt loops will make your jeans look like "a chopped, nosed, and decked 1949 Mercury with frenched headlights," as Laursen puts it.

If you happen to have been born later than 1960, The Catalog of Cool is going to hold very few reminiscences as a nostalgia piece and that's definitely what it is. My folks did get a kick out of it though. Sculatti, it seems, considers 1947-62 to be the country's cool epoch. All cool from that time onward merely dips from this period. Hency, if you want to be cool, you've got to involve yourself in a time warp of sorts. Sculatti includes precious little information on coolness in the '80s, aside from punk. In this sense the book is incomplete.

But overall, The Catalog of Cool definitely swings. If you're like me, a creature fascinated by those marvelous trashy quirks of an American pop culture gone beserk, The Catalog of Cool is going to make you quiver with delight. "Seize the time."

Harry Reasoner takes a look back

BEFORE THE COLORS FADE
By Harry Reasoner
Quill, 206 pp., $5.95

By JOHN F. HUDSON

Within the past few years broadcast journalism has gone from bad to worse to terrible. Electronics have done for television news gathering what Rupert Murdoch is now doing for the Boston Herald. Sensationalism has replaced insightfulness and splashy electronic graphics have usurped the traditional realm of the anchor, his desk and the news. Multiple anchor desks around the world have replaced Walter Cronkite and his ever assuring line, "...and that's that way it is..." Throughout all of this, one man, Harry Reasoner, has witnessed the changes in broadcast journalism and in a light, yet intelligent way, addresses the evolution of the electronic press over the last twenty-seven years.

As Reasoner notes in the opening chapter of Before the Colors Fade, "This, I hope is the story of how things grew. I don't suppose we thought much about what we were doing, how we were forming the habits and the principles and the morals of our craft. It's just as well; the sense of responsibility might have immobilized us." These opening remarks set the tone for the rest of the book, one which happily never stoops to condescension in order to impress the reader. Like a favorite old sweater or comfortable pair of jeans, Mr. Reasoner's writing style surrounds the reader in an unassuming way. Yet for all his warmth and familiarity, Mr. Reasoner also demonstrates an innate ability to capture an event of historical magnitude such as the sending of the National Guard into Little Rock, Arkansas in 1957. This was done to ensure safe desegregation of the public high schools.

In 1954, the Supreme Court ruled in Brown vs. Board of Education, that separate but equal" was unconstitutional and directed the nation's school boards to desegregate with, "all deliberate speed." Little Rock, Arkansas proved to be the proving ground for this constitutional precedent. It was also the first "baptism under fire" for the neophyte broadcast journalist, have just begun work for CBS in 1956. Here Reasoner deftly avoids the trap so many historians and reporters alike fall into when observing emotionally charged issues. Too often, they let the event effect them so heavily, it shows in their supposedly objective book or story. Instead of reporting, they judge. Instead of telling who or what, they venture an opinion as to why. Although many writers damage themselves when falling into this tricky habit, they also confuse and influence the reader even more. Within the realm of the press, both in newspapers and the broadcasting these types of actions are too accepted as "truth." Happily Reasoner avoids this type of journalistic miscue and attempts to see the event for what it was.

"The key to understanding the story (Little Rock)," according to Reasoner,"...is that there are always at least two sides to any story...(On Evil)...Accepting the fact that most people don't think of themselves as wrong or evil, you can then report their behavior with a kind of recognition of dignity which is always deserved at the outset of coverage — let reporting decry the evil, if it is there. You are not on hand to merely fill in the blanks of your own preconceptions."

Throughout the book, Mr. Reasoner attempts to convey his own impressions and ideas on broadcast journalism over the past twenty-seven years, along the way giving us interesting observations and amusing anecdotes which only he could remember and describe in his own inimitable way. The book is far from a literary masterpiece, yet it never really claims to be one. It just comes from a man most Americans have come to know and respect.

As Mr. Reasoner so eloquently points out in his book, "The great thing is to keep this thing in perspective. Remember that just because your voice reaches halfway around the world, you are no wiser than when it reached only to the end of the bar."

Live from University Gallery, it's..!

By DOUGLAS MUISE

The University Gallery, nestled in the rear of the Fine Arts Center, is embarking this semester on what must be one of their more adventuresome and by far, exciting seasons yet. If you've neglected Gallery offerings in the past, you really owe it to yourself to spend some time there this semester. The Gallery has expanded its format to include a series of live and alternative art performances that are simply quite smashing and demand attention. Forget your preconceived notions of what "alternative" art is all about — obliqueness, esoterica, and all that. The series, featuring the works of Jeff Way, Alex Grey, Fab Five Freddy, and Ann Magnunson entitled DO, DID, DONE, will shatter those conceptions forever.

Jeff Way will lead off the series with his "Transformation Performance" at 8 p.m. on February 8th. Through extensive use of costumes and masks, Way makes live performance a visual artistic medium. Snakes, demons, sorcerers, shamans, Indian chiefs, and Picasso heads are among Way's favorite costume motifs. In the process of "Transformation Performance," layer upon layer of painted robes and masks will be removed in the midst of a ritualistic dance as Way transforms himself into his characters and images.

A sampling of Ways' more static works — a series of Elvis and Jesus paintings — as well as the masks, screens, and rattles used in his performance will also be on display.

Alex Grey, a Boston native, along with his wife Allyson, will be the second artist performing in the series. Grey is an artist infatuated with images of death; death as the termination of human life, and death as that possibility which makes our existences all the more precious. His obsession has resulted in works enamored with a horrific morbidity, often bordering on disgust. For Brain Sack, Grey consumed a plate of spaghetti and cut his hair onto the empty plate, placed a human brain on the hair, took the universal antidote, and then vomited onto the brain. In Polar Wandering, he used all of his money to fly and snowmobile to the north magnetic pole where he took off all his clothes to pose for a photograph. In Life, Death and God, Grey is shown hanging upside down by the ankle, tied to the ankle of a hollowed-out corpse. Necrophilia climaxed Grey's obsession, with a painting depicting Grey making love to a dead woman's body. Grey's performance at 8 p.m., February 15 will undoubtedly be of a less extreme nature, but provocative nonetheless. A ritualistic work will be performed by Grey and his wife utilizing a carved Tibetan "Prayer Wheel," and a skeleton in which he will continue his "ongoing meditation on mortality." Also featured will be a fascinating Blakeian series of lifesize figures detailing the human metaphysical anatomy.

Brooklyn native Frederic Brathwaite, known as Fab Five Freddy and the founding member of the now disbanded graffiti squad — the Fabulous Five — is an artist of a more popular complexion. He began his career as a visual artist, before branching his talents to include music and film. Freddy is currently a graffiti artist and has exhibited his work in New York (Mudd Club, Club 57, and the Kitchen), as well as in Rome and Milan. He describes graffiti as "the purest art form, because it's the most pictoral expression of our generation. The graffiti I do ties in with the rapping. It's all part of the same subculture. It comes out of New York which is the most advanced ghetto in the world." As a rap artist, Freddy has performed with the members of Blondie (end result: "Rapture"), Chic, as well as contributing to recent rap crossovers by the Clash, and a track for the British fanzine — Flexipop!

Freddy, who will perform in the University Gallery at 8 p.m. on March 1, will rap to a recorded accompaniment. He will also create one of his graffiti works. It should be an exceedingly interesting night, to be sure.

The final artist performing in the series will be Ann Magnuson, undoubtably the coolest single woman in the States at the moment. Her credentials buzz with unassuming hipness: BFA in Theater and Film from Denison University, a year in London studying the subjects, manager of that den of camp culture on NYC's Lower East Side — Club 57 — from March '79 to September '80, founder and president of the exclusive Ladies' Auxiliary of the Lower East Side, fashion satirist for the Style Section of the Soho Weekly News, publisher of the fashion magazine — Sheep, omnipresent producer and director of some of the more bizarre forms of esoterica to be found in the night clubs of NYC. This woman is on top of it!

Fab Five Freddy

Magnuson specializes in costumed satires and parodies, notably popular culture and its revered cult figures. On March 8 at 8 p.m., Magnuson will transform herself into a series of female characters including a Southern evangelist singer, and the reminiscing housewife. Check it out!

ELLEN McILLWAINE
January, 8, 1983
Passim's, Cambridge

By PETER WISSOKER

Ellen McIllwaine says that her style is a combination of Jimi Hendrix and Richie Havens.

Ellen McIllwaine plays an electric guitar standing alone on stage.

Ellen McIllwaine refuses to play bar chords.

For eight years Ellen McIllwaine has been playing in clubs, sharing the bill with people like Tom Waits and other folkies. While Waits has become a nationwide success, Ellen is still playing the clubs. Why? "I guess I haven't been willing to do the things that one has to do to make it big. Like changing my voice to a high pitched whimper. I've got news for you men," she said, "women don't really talk like that."

So it was at Passim's in Harvard Square. Switching between an acoustic guitar (loudly amplified), a piano, and an electric guitar, McIllwaine (last names are the hip way of referring to musicians) ran through a set of mixed rock and blues, some standards, and some originals. She played a number of songs from her new album, Everybody Needs It, recently released on Blind Pig Records as well.

Apparently for the last year or so, McIllwaine has been touring with a full band. The gig at Passim's was one of the first she's played in a while without anyone else there to amuse the audience. This was really great because she babbled away about just about everything. McIllwaine has an excellent attitude towards life and she's just the type of woman that one imagines the executives at Warner Brothers would despise. She isn't petite, she doesn't speak softly, and she isn't about to sit home crying if her man leaves her. In fact it might be said that she is America's most authentic white blues singer. What's more, she'll admit that she likes ZZ Top.

It's really difficult to praise a musician without sounding condescending or trite but Ellen McIllwaine's playing is both accurate and innovative, particularly her slide playing.

It's typical of today's large record monopolies that the real artists of America get left to play the small clubs, with little financial reward, while talentless pretty boys and girls go and play with themselves for an hour on stage for large amounts of cash. Ellen McIllwaine is great. She deserves success. She deserves your money. Go see her. You deserve to be entertained.

Ellen McIllwaine will be playing at the Iron Horse Feb. 13th.

Regents proposed entrance criteria discussed today

By KEVIN BOWE
Collegian Staff

Heated testimony is expected today at a public hearing concerning the Board of Regents' proposed minimum standards at the four-year public colleges in Massachusetts.

If the preliminary proposal released by the Regents is accepted as the minimum admissions criteria, more than 20 percent of the current graduating class at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst would not have been accepted, according to UMass officials.

Under the Regents proposal, students applying to UMass must have a combined SAT score of 800 and a high school rank in the upper 40th percentile, or a combined SAT score of 850 and a class rank in the upper 60th percentile for acceptance.

If the preliminary proposal released by the Regents is accepted as the minimum admissions criteria, more than 20 percent of the current graduating class at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst would not have been accepted, according to UMass officials.

The proposal allows the institutions to waive a certain amount of students from these regulations. But those students must be accepted into programs designed for educationally disadvantaged students.

The third aspect of the admissions proposal, which is to be phased in over a four-year period, would require high schools to teach college-bound students a minimum number of mathematics, science, foreign languages and social studies courses.

The Regents proposal has come under sharp criticism from students, faculty and administrators at UMass and the Massachusetts Black Legislative Caucus.

Much of the criticism centers around the use of SAT's as a criterion for admissions.

"The fact (is) that minority students' SAT scores fall on the average of 200 points below those of their white counterparts. The indication is that SAT scores are an unreliable measure for determining academic potential; yet it appears that the Regents plan to use them...," wrote UMass student Trustee Jim Murphy in yesterday's Boston Globe.

The use of class rank has not received as much public attention, but is drawing an equal amount of criticism from some of the educational community.

David Taggart, director of admissions, said this policy would not allow the quality of the school to be taken into consideration. For example, a student at a "self selective" high school who scores a combined SAT score more than 1000 but places in the lower 40th percent of her or his graduating class would not be allowed into UMass under the proposal.

"No one is arguing that Massachusetts' four-year institutions should have high standards for admission. However, the application of such standards must necessarily place equity and access as primary objectives in order to maintain the quality of educational experience that high admission standards imply," Murphy stated.

Trustees policy to raise fees despite budgeting, low inflation

By MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Staff

Low inflation and cautious budgeting last year may result in fee increases much smaller than usual for the 1983-84 school year, but a controversial policy now being considered by the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees could result in higher increases.

Budget requests submitted during January indicate that fees could rise just $35 above the $2867 in fees paid by on campus students this year.

According to budget requests prepared over January, Housing Services will increase dorm rates by $30, form an average of $1212 during the current year to $1242 next year. Health Services has requested a $10 increase, from $162 to $172, and the Athletic Fee would be $63 next year, a $4 increase.

Offsetting those increases is an expected $9 decrease in the Campus Center fee. That fee was increased from $79 to $88 this year, and would return to $79 next year, according to Ron Keefe, a chairman of the Campus Center Board of Governors.

If the Trust Fund, Management Policy submitted by UMass President David C. Knapp is approved by the trustees next week, additional fees of $30.36, predicted by Knapp's office would be implemented, but two members of the Board of Trustees have challenged that figure.

The policy under consideration would implement full-costing, which means each trust fund — such as Housing Services or the Campus Center — must pay its share of control costs, including the accounting services provided by the University.

A task force was established more than a year ago to study the problem and an earlier version of the policy was rejected by the Trustee's Budget and Financial Affairs Committee in November. At that time, budget guidelines were issued to trust fund managers instructing them to prepare budgets without reflecting full-costing.

A new version of the policy was issued by the UMass President's Office Jan. 18, including the estimate of the fee's impact.

The Trustees' Budget and Financial Affairs Committee tabled the policy Jan. 26 because a number of questions regarding the fee impact were not answered, but the policy will be considered at a committee meeting and then by the full Board of Trustees Feb. 9.

Because the policy might be passed, Acting Vice-Chancellor for Administration and Finance John L. DeNyse has told some trust fund managers to recalculate budgets to reflect the full-costing policy.

Jim Weaver, financial manager of Food Services, said that students using the Dining Commons would pay an additional $24, $26 or $28 because of full-costing next year, depending on the meal plan chosen.

"We had planned on no fee increase," Weaver said, "but Monday were told to include 2.4 percent for full-costing and we recalculated the budget."

Each trust fund would set aside 2.4 percent of it's total budget to pay for the central services it uses, under the plan proposed by Knapp.

The fee review held each year by the Student Government Association's Rents and Fees Committee will probably be delayed because of confusion created by the proposed policy, according to committee chairman Mitch Gaslin.

Teen moms give 10% of Mass. births

BOSTON (AP) — About 10 percent of all births in Massachusetts in 1981 were to teenage mothers, the state Department of Social Services reported yesterday.

The agency, announcing a "new effort to comprehensively address the reality of teen pregnancy," also said that half of all welfare payments go to mothers who had their first child in their teens, and two-thirds of the teen mothers don't finish high school.

The department announced contracts with agencies in Boston, Northampton, Peabody, Lowell, Cambridge, Marlboro, Attleboro, New Bedford and Hull to provide "a diverse range of services which will help pregnant and parenting adolescents finish high school, find jobs and become responsible parents."

Department of Social Services Commissioner Mary Jane England said the services "will work to ensure teen mother access to good medical care and will give them the help they need to finish high school, something to which every young person has the right."

The department said that 7,500 teenagers gave birth in Massachusetts in 1981. It said the number of teen births has been declining in the last decade, but "the ratio of unmarried teens giving birth compared to total resident births has risen by 40 percent."

Reagan offers ban to nuclear missiles

BERLIN (AP) — In an open letter to the people of Europe, President Reagan yesterday offered to sign an agreement with the Soviets "banning U.S. and Soviet intermediate-range land-based nuclear missile weapons from the face of the earth."

The letter was announced by Vice President George Bush, who was visiting Berlin during the second day of a European tour.

Reagan said he is willing to meet Soviet Communist Party leader Yuri V. Andropov "wherever and whenever he wants" in order to sign such a pact.

"I make this offer out of a conviction that such an agreement would serve the interest of both sides and, most importantly, that the people of Europe want nothing more. I urge Mr. Andropov to accept it," Reagan said in the letter.

"Just as our allies can count on the United States to defend Europe at all costs, you can count on us to spare no effort to reach a fair and meaningful agreement that will reduce the Soviet nuclear threat," Reagan's letter said.

Bush read the letter at the end of a speech in Berlin.

Defense proposes $7.2B for missiles

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Department of Defense yesterday proposed spending about $7.2 billion in the next fiscal year for aircraft engines and missile systems produced in Massachusetts.

The sum was approximately the same as that requested by the Reagan administration for fiscal 1983 for Massachusetts-made weapons systems, but it included more Patriot, Hawk and Sparrow missiles.

The total requested for the fiscal year starting Oct. 1, 1983 does not include Navy contracts that may be awarded to the Fore River Shipyard, Quincy Shipbuilding Division of General Dynamics Corp. in Quincy, Mass.

The firms that could benefit the most are the General Electric Co. of Lynn, the Raytheon Corp. of West Andover, Lowell and Bedford, and GTE Sylvania of Needham Heights.

Of the $7.2 billion, $5.1 billion would be spent for aircraft for which GE builds the engines: the F-18 Hornet airplane, the AH-64 attack helicopter, the Seahawk LAMPS helicopter, the CH-53E Super Stallion helicopter and the A-10 A-B Thunderbold II airplane.

Drunk driving crackdown results in more arrests and convictions

BOSTON — Efforts to crack down on drunken driving in Massachusetts have produced more arrests and may have made judges more willing to find first offenders guilty, according to a legislative report issued yesterday.

"We cannot be more encouraged at this point," said Sen. Louis P. Bertonazzi, chairman of the Committee on Post Audit and Oversight. "More people have been arrested and fewer people have been dying."

Massachusetts has lagged behind the national average in drunken driving arrests for several years, and state officials have tried a variety of means to improve enforcement.

A new state law increasing penalties for drunken driving went into effect last Sept. 1, partly in response to several tragic highway crashes involving drunken driving during the 1981 Christmas season. First offenders now face a minimum 30-day license suspension, and repeat offenders face an automatic one-week jail term or a two-week stay at an alcohol treatment center.

Statistics were not yet available on arrests during the first several months of the new law, said Bertonazzi, D-Milford.

But the legislator said he was encouraged by the trend that saw arrests for drunken driving in Massachusetts jump from 1,128 in fiscal year 1978 to 3,564 in fiscal year 1982, which ended last June. The Bay State arrests are now slightly above the national average.

Boston Edison officials recant, Cape evacuation no problem

BOSTON — Red-faced Boston Edison officials said yesterday they goofed when they said Cape Cod residents and vacationers would be marooned in the event of a major accident at the Pilgrim nuclear plant.

William Houye, radiation instructor at the nuclear plant in Plymouth, shocked several Cape officials Saturday when he said state police would blockade the peninsula's two bridges in the event of a local evacuation.

"It seems that this is not the case," Robert Tis, a spokesman for the plant, said yesterday after checking with state civil defense officials. "About a year ago the state plan was changed so that the Bourne Bridge would stay open and the Sagamore bridge would close."

School of Business Administration, now officially renamed the School of Management.

New name on the block: School of Management

By MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Staff

The School of Business has been renamed the School of Management, effective today, following approval by the Faculty Senate last December.

The change was made to better reflect the school's many activities and plans and will not involve any change in curriculum.

The term "business" was not completely applicable because the education provided is as applicable to non-profit organizations as to businesses.

"Management seems to be a broad enough term to cover any organization," said Stephen Michael, head of the school's department of management.

"We cover a wide spectrum: computers, personnel management, production management, formal organization, policy and strategy. We believe that what we say applies to most organizations most of the time," he said.

The change will not affect the degrees issued, since all School of Management graduates will continue to receive a Bachelor of Science degree in Business Administration.

The department of management, one of four departments in the school, decided not change its name, although some confusion is expected, according to Michael. He said he was not aware of any complaints from other departments about the name change.

The department of accounting, also within the School Management, is currently working to change its name to the department of accounting and information systems, but that change is not expected soon.

"It is a kind of redefinition of the mission of the place with respect to the fact that we are more than business," said Harry Allan, dean of the school.

"The profession of management includes public management and not-for-profit management, which are reflected in our program. Our mission will broaden to meet that general definition of management as we look ahead," he said.

"The school's efforts to stimulate growth in Massachusetts have brought leaders from government and industry together and helped to create hundreds of jobs in the state," Allan said.

Baritz to name new Humanities Division dean

By JIM FINKLE
Collegian Staff

Provost Loren Baritz is expected to announce the appointment of a new dean of humanities and fine arts this week.

Professor Charles L. Bestor, chairman of the search committee for the dean of humanities and fine arts at the University of Massachusetts, said yesterday he expects Baritz to announce the appointment of a new dean within the next week.

Over intersession the search committee presented Baritz with the names of the three candidates who were best qualified for the position, Bestor said.

The committee chose the three from a field of more than 250 candidates who applied for the position. Last semester, six semi-finalists visited the campus for interviews.

Bestor said the search produced highly qualified candidates for the position.

"We had a very, very strong field," Bestor said.

The search began when current dean Jeremiah M. Allen announced he would take a leave and return to an assignment in the UMass administration, Bestor said.

Allen had planned to go on leave before the 1982-1983 academic year began, but because UMass was without a permanent chancellor over the summer, the search was extended.

"We felt we couldn't run an effective search without the candidates knowing who the chancellor and provost would be," Bestor said.

Because a new dean was not in place at the beginning of this school year, Allen agreed to continue his duties as dean until a new dean was hired.

Bestor said he expects the new dean to be working on campus by the beginning of the 1983-1984 academic year.

The dean of humanities and fine arts supervises the departments of Afro-American studies, art, Asian studies, classics, comparative literature, English, French and Italian, and Germanic languages and literature.

History, journalistic studies, linguistics, music and dance, Slavic languages and literatures, theatre, Spanish and Portuguese are also under that position's jurisdiction.

Traditional beginning-of-the-semester lines form at the Bursar's Office in Whitmore Administration Building.

Lines, lines everywhere and no end in sight . . .

By JAMES AYRES
Collegian Correspondent

The traditional long lines associated with the opening of school at the University of Massachusetts formed yesterday morning and many students blamed them on the administration, while administration officials put the blame on students.

Every February and September sees long winding lines on campus as well as off campus, registration lines, Add/Drop lines, bank lines and many others.

Lines in the early morning were substantially long, often stretching the whole length of the corridor as in the Whitmore Administration Building, according to officials at the Registrar's Office.

Sandy Watkins, the supervisor of records at Whitmore, has worked 15 years for the University and has seen 30 registration periods come and go. Watkins said that yesterday's lines were moving pretty fast. She said many difficulties arise when students do not read the signs that are posted. Besides the usual problems of students standing in the wrong lines, Watkins said everything was moving along efficiently. But Whitmore wasn't the only place to experience long lines.

Hour-long waits were experience by many students in the lobby of Bartlett Hall, where Rhetoric courses could be added and dropped.

While standing in line, many students complained about the troublesome Rhetoric program. Many complained about the lines, claiming that they hadn't moved since they arrived there. When queried by a reporter, many words not to fit to print were expressed. But almost all students agreed that the lines weren't as bad as they were in previous semesters.

The Textbook Annex, reknowned for long lines, was the place to be if one wished to avoid long lines yesterday.

Abbye Klayman, 21, a cashier at the Annex, said she expects the lines to reach their usual lengths around noon tomorrow.

For many days to come students will be wading through lines. Some short, but many long.

And while there was disagreement as to the cause of the long lines, all agreed that the lines would continue.

Love Canal activist Lois Gibbs addresses an audience at Amherst College Thursday night.

Love Canal resident says government ignored facts

By TAMI BORTON
Collegian Staff

The federal and state governments ignored and covered up problems directly caused by hazardous waste in New York's Love Canal, according to Lois Gibbs, who spoke on hazardous wastes Thursday at Amherst College.

Gibbs, the author of Love Canal: My Story and founder of both the Citizen's Clearing House for Hazardous Waste and the Love Canal Homeowners Association, initiated action against health and environmental problems caused by a chemical waste dump abandoned by Hooker Chemical Company.

She said she became concerned when her children began developing rare diseases such as asthma and epilepsy.

In 1978 she learned of Hooker Chemical's waste dump, and found out that the community elementary school was built on the dump's periphery.

"When I read the list of health problems caused by such chemicals, I could check off every one of my children's diseases," Gibbs said.

"When I presented proof of the danger to the local board of education asking to transfer my son, they said that if the school was unsafe for my son, it was unsafe for everybody, and they wouldn't close the school," she said.

After useless attempts to seek help from the New York state health department, Love Canal residents, at a press conference they staged, pressured Governor Hugh Carey, who was running for re-election at the time.

"We used political pressure and asked him if he was going to let our children die," Gibbs said. Gov. Carey agreed to an evacuation, but cited the reason as being the proximity to the clean up, not the health risk, she said.

A community survey among remaining residents convinced the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) to issue a health order in 1979.

"We were told not to get pregnant, don't go in the basement or yard. Two schools were closed and 56 percent of the children born over a four year period had birth defects, but we were assured we were safe," Gibbs said.

"Our residents had all they could take and finally retaliated. We held two EPA officials hostage and told the national news stations that President Carter was killing our babies," Gibbs said.

As a result, the federal government evacuated the area, but because of the mental anguish of its residents, not because of the dump.

"The bottom line is, no one has said Love Canal is a health risk, she said.

Now the houses in Love Canal are back on the market, Gibbs said.

"The lease states that Hooker Chemical, the state or the federal government are not responsible for any problems incurred by the chemicals. The same thing could happen again," she said.

Gibbs continued by citing other examples of contamination across the country.

"In Warren, Massachusetts, landfills which are known to leak are trying to be built when 90 percent of the waste can be disposed of safely," she said.

"Our crops and dairy products are being contaminated due to PCBs, and farmers are selling their goods because they cannot take the loss," she said.

"There is a lot of contamination out there and if more citizens become involved, we might have a safer place to live," she said.

Citizen's Clearinghouse, located in Arlington, Virginia, is a non-profit organization established to provide groups, individuals and small municipalities with the information needed to understand and resolve chemical waste problems, according to Gibbs.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Where has our language gone?

Steven P. Barrett

What used to be called buildings, bridges, roads, and railroads are now balled up into one word — infrastructure. That's nice, isn't it? We no longer work hard at our jobs. We're employed in "labor intensive positions." Whatever happened to good, plain, old-fashioned conversational English? The computer is an easy excuse. Sure, the computer age has brought about a new kind of terminology — but can't we leave our use of "out-puts, inputs and feedbacks" back in the terminal room?

One main reason that this kind of computer and other technological verbosity has crept into our daily conversations is that we have been too lazy to stop it. Let's stop and think about it. If someone asks you a question, you don't really want to transmit feedback — do you? An answer will be good enough. Before you begin to answer the question, do you conceptualize what the questioner wants to hear; or do you try to find some idea of how to give him a good answer?

When you get up in the morning — do you prioritize your plans? Or do you stumble out of the bed without the foggiest idea of what your day is going to be like?

Let's say you finally make it to work, and the first thing your boss wants to do is, "prioritize objectives and the upcoming agenda for today's schedule." Most normal people find a nice warm cup of coffee to help them start the day without verbal pollution as their priority A-1.

But don't ever ask the boss what he or she means by "prioritizing the day's agenda and objectives" lest you be viewed as a total ignoramus, an imbecile and "a totally out of focus-person." Just a nod and a silent prayer will do until you leave the boss' presence. Most bosses aren't like that. But there are enough people who occupy high and mighty positions who go out of their way to let you know it. But the people in the high and mighty places can get away with it — to a degree.

Let's take the technocrat-politician. He's forever forging new coalitions: rebuilding the infrastructure; seeking new input and feed-back to increase his state's or nation's output; and he's always seeking to develop a meaningful relationship with the voters, and/or educate them about the issues at hand.

In the good old days, politicians were constantly building alliances so they could grab the biggest vote on election day. There wasn't any big ballyhoo over the cost of "rebuilding the infrastructure." Old-fashioned but highly effective politicians like Silvio Conte still send out questionnaires so they can find out how their constituents feel about the issues. See it's more human — no feed-back. If Rep. Conte or Sen. Kennedy wanted to have a "meaningful relationship" with their constituents, all they would have to do is ask for their vote and meet with the people they represent in the flesh. Smart politicians don't play as educators either.

So who's fooling who? Why do we need all this extra baggage on top of a beautiful language? Plain English was good enough for men like Harry S. Truman, why can't it be used again? If the politicians want to re-pave our aging roads, and put people back to work — let'em say so instead of clouding their vocabulary with gobbledygook like infrastructure. One person innocently asked this hopelessly old-fashioned writer with an 18th century mind, "What else do you call roads and bridges besides infrastructrue?" Bridges and roads seemed good enough.

One atrocious example of how this new kind of nomenclature has polluted our ability to communicate and discuss things in a more civilized manner is the term "human capital." Just think of it, and what it implies. We are no longer people in the eyes of a bureaucrat or accountant — we're just objects. The term "human capital" also implies that we have a price tag on our heads. No longer can we as human beings consider ourselves to priceless and individualistic rational beings. That's over now. "Human capital" would've been a nice crisp term the plantation owners would've used over a hundred years ago. The Yankee taskmasters and mill owners thought the immigrants made excellent "human capital" too. That is until unions came along, and the mill owners said good bye to their "human capital" here in the North for cheaper "human capital" in the South.

There's one other little gem called "interface." But what's the use of ripping into every new buzz word? Unfortunately, there are too many to attack and dissect in one setting. Don't you think by now that you've seen enough gobbledygook and butchery of the English language? Hmm, we could all use a break and a "viable alternative" to our useless, meaningless and sometimes dishonest applications of the new nomenclature of communication.

Letters

C. C. shadow just a coward

(Editor's note: This letter is addressed to the person[s] who have been harassing Third World women in the Campus Center Garage)

To the Editor:

I am among the African American women whom you seek to harass by putting obscene racist, sexist messages on the windshields of our cars in the Campus Center Garage as we have gone about our own and the University's affairs. Normally, I would not take time from my busy schedule to respond to such cowardice. However, since you sought to offend me with an unsolicited, racist, sexist epithet, I thought that your very infantile need for attention should be answered just this once.

I found it curious, that with your self described virility, and your stated attraction to black women, that you would want the cloak of anonymity until I thought seriously about you and the kind of illness that an obsession can cause to one of weak ego, poor self-esteem and an inoperative sense of respect for others. I seek here only to point out to you that yours is at best and at worst, a serious manifestation of the kind of cowardice that drives small minds mad. It is a clear indication of your own sense of unworthiness. I urge you to seek psychological help for your own sake. As for me at least — I am not at all afraid of you.

With a deep and human concern for a person who is bordering on mental disorder.

Bonds make banks happy

Mark J. Welch

At the end of last semester, the Student Government Association spent $320 on what could turn out to be the most expensive ad they ever bought.

SGA President and Student Trustee Jim Murphy bought an ad in Bond Buyer magazine alerting UMass Building Authority bondholders that they might be able to obtain early repayment of their bonds. This possibility made many bondholders quite interested in what Murphy had to say about the Authority.

Although the attorney for the Authority disagrees, Murphy and his assistant Peter Graham have charged that the Authority violated bond agreements by not returning $1.6 million in excess construction funds after the building projects were completed during the 1960s and 70s. In addition, Murphy and Graham say the accounting system used by Housing services for the past decade was illegal and that a switch to a new system this year was also illegal.

Though I'm not a lawyer, I have to agree that Murphy and Graham have a point. A number of violations seem to have occurred, and a bondholder would clearly have a good case in court.

But who stands to gain from the controversy? The bondholders are holding some $80 million in bonds, due between now and 2007. The bonds were issued at interest rates of three to five percent, tax-free; current interest rates are closer to fourteen percent.

Naturally, there isn't much of a market for three percent bonds — if you want to get rid of one, you have to sell it at a discount, and some bondholders have probably done that. In any event, whoever holds the bonds would probably prefer to get paid for them and invest the money elsewhere for better profit; at the same time, the University would prefer to pay only three to five percent, which is obviously less expensive than fourteen percent.

If the charges are true, and if a controversy erupts in court, the UMass Building Authority could conceivably be forced to repay all $80 million worth of bonds, and refinance that amount at current interest rates. That could cost each student $100 per year or more.

Someone is going to be unhappy here. The bondholders have had that position ever since interest rates started rising; now it may be our turn.

Bill Searson, attorney for the UMass President's office, suggested to Murphy at a Trustees meeting that it was quite unusual for a student trustee to "wave a flag for capitalism" and defend the bondholders' rights.

Murphy and Graham defend their actions — which could benefit banks and institutions but hurt students — by pointing out that what is being done now is illegal; they want the University to set things right now, before it is too late. They tried to avoid bad publicity by asking UMass President David Knapp to investigate, but they say they got no reaction.

So, in the name of truth and justice and students, they went public by making their charges in front of the student senate and by running an ad in Bond Buyer. They hope the attention they get will cause the University to look closely at the charges they have made and make changes, but the University has repeatedly denied that anything is illegal.

Only time will tell what effect the controversy will have on the University. Most likely, nothing will change: no one will sue the University, and the same practices — legal or not — will continue unchanged.

But the risk seems foolish, even stupid, especially when the University defends its practices as intended to help students. The students have everything to lose and very little to gain, and the bondholders have nothing to lose and everything to gain.

International journalist to teach at UMass

By GUS MARTINS
Collegian Staff

For the next 16 weeks students from the department of Afro-American studies and the journalism department will get a rare opportunity to work with an international journalist of the highest order.

David Graham DuBois, step-son of the late 20th century intellectual Dr. William Edward Burghart DuBois and the natural son of Shirley Graham DuBois, an author and champion of the Third World struggle worldwide, will be giving his services in an attempt to improve the perception that the Western world has of Third World nations.

"My experience in the struggle for Human Rights has been valuable and I want to share and utilize it to broaden the vision of the Third World in particular, students, and the American people in general," DuBois said.

Prior to coming here DuBois has held many titles in foreign news service. In his most recent appointment he worked as the Foreign Affairs Editor for the Pacific News Service in San Francisco.

He has worked there for the last three years and the agency serves as a features news service that does interpretives and analysis of major news events. This service is picked up by 150 papers across the country.

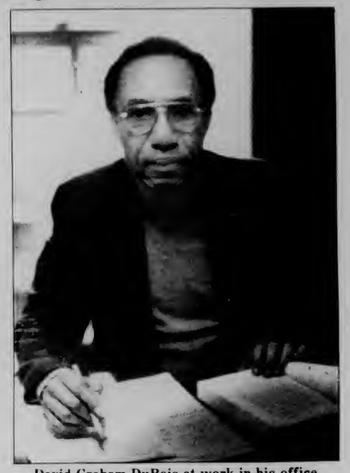
DuBois has lived in Cairo since 1961 with the exception of a brief stay in 1972. While in Egypt he taught at Cairo University in the English Department. He also was the News Editor of the Egyptian Gazette, a daily English language paper.

In 1965-66 he did some public relations work in Egypt for the then Ghanain leader Kwame Nkrumah, and has served as the Feature and News Editor for the privately owned news agency, Middle East Features Service. The list goes on.

As the step-son of the late great W.E.B. DuBois and the son of Shirley Graham DuBois, he has been left with many great memories of his parents.

"Dr. DuBois has always been a figure of great adulation in my family," DuBois said.

"I grew up learning of him in my home and while as a student at Hunter College in New York City, I was so very much encouraged by he and by my mother's example that it made me an activist throughout my six years of higher education."



David Graham DuBois at work in his office.

"My personal and ongoing contact with him (Dr. DuBois) was very important instilling in me a devotion to scholarship and a commitment to black people, and liberation in particular," admits DuBois.

"My mother as a particular influence was ongoing," said DuBois.

"She was a 24 hour a day worker for liberation. She had a wide range of interests and abilities and spent her waking hours in pursuit of those interests to an exhausting degree."

"It's hard to separate the two influences of my mom and Dr. DuBois, both were hard working individuals and committed to the liberation of oppressed people everywhere," DuBois said.

Working in the Middle East and Africa has given DuBois a particular view of how the Western news services are able to dominate the flow of information that reaches the United States and is fed to American public.

"One of the most appalling experiences I had when coming back to the states in 1972 was the realization of how little Americans knew of the Middle East and Africa," DuBois said.

"This was a direct reflection of the failure of the American media to provide Americans with accurate or complete news and analyses of what had been going on in Africa."

Although DuBois was not in the United States during the turbulent decade of the sixties, he was very aware of the social transformations that occurred. He also said that the Arab peoples there shared a direct affinity with the American people that were struggling then.

"The Civil Rights Movement received as wide a coverage as possible throughout Africa and the Middle East," said DuBois. However the majority of the news was still reported by the Western agencies, AP and UPI."

"Unfortunately most of the black news publications were not responsive to the appeals made by the local news services in Cairo that wanted more information as to what was really happening in America at the time," DuBois said.

"The sentiment among the native Egyptians was that the stuff that was happening was unbelievabe, the whole concept of black Americans struggling for basic human rights was hard for the Egyptians to comprehend, the democracy that America preaches about made it hard for them to believe that those kinds of atrocities were possible."

"Many whom I know wanted to help in any way possible," said DuBois.

"Support was automatic, a bond, a tie, a struggle, a brotherhood that was automatic."

This semester DuBois will be playing a very significant role here and said, "I want to bring to Amherst an important aspect of today's world that is not understood in America."

ABC — it's alphabetical

By DOUGLAS MUISE
Collegian Staff

If Martin Fry had his way, life would be nothing more than one over-wrought romantic scenerio after another: all men would abide by a "Code of Gentlemen," wear gold lame' suits, and effuse charm as only a well-bred English lad can; the woman, well, the woman would haunt about mysteriously in clingy silk gowns and lament airily "Martin, maybe one day you'll find true love."

Welcome to the splendiferous world of ABC where love is — ahem — alphabetical. And welcome to the first installment in the illustrious Lexicon of Love — a romantic vision choreographed and directed by vocalist Martin Fry and exercised collectively by the group ABC.

You might think of ABC as just another syntho-pop band bubbling in on the latest surge of British fizz. And you'd be partially right, but ABC music seeks to set itself apart from the mass of techno-clone rhythms on the charts at the moment. ABC plays disco, yes, but disco that's shrewd — energetic, but not sweaty; sensual, but not sexual; funky but not forceful. It's melodrama with an honest edge, romantic escapism that pokes fun at itself — it's classy stuff.

The band started with three top-notch singles — "The Look of Love," "Poison Arrow," "Tears Are Not Enough" — and then tapped the wizardry of producer Trevor Horn (an ex-Buggle) to create the Lexicon of Love, ABC's first LP and a record that is quite possibly one of the finer pop products of 1982.

Horn's production work is so damned elegant. There's a steady base thump for the dance groove, onto which is saddled the rhythms of piano, guitar, and synthesizer. But what makes the ABC sound so outstanding is that saxophone, harp, xylophone, and strings (yes, strings) are then added for detail, texture, and of course, melodrama. Cap this dense, sumptuous gush of melody with Fry's exquisitely mannered vocals and there you have it: easily one of the most gaudy, but at the same time intensely danceable party records of the year.

Fry presents himself as a master of witty froth. He's especially deft at matching romantic sentiment with the cliched lyric. And some of the lines he flips us are choice:

"Still looking for a custom fit in an off-the-rack world?"

"Stuck a marriage proposal in the waste disposal. If that's the trash aesthetic, then I suggest we forget it." Or how about:

"I'm for the girl that meets supply with demand." Sure. Go ahead and try that one out at the Pub next Friday night.

ABC's monomania is romantic love: love lost, love gained, love forsaken, love taken, the joy of love past, the joy of love yet to be, ad nauseum. You think you've got it bad when it comes to relationships, Fry's litany of love lost will bring tears of imagined empathy to your eyes.

Unlike Martin Fry, most of us do not fall in love more than four times a day, and it would be unrealistic (but humorous) to think that we should. But ABC music transcends realism and that's what Lexicon of Love is all about — romantic fantasy for people that could use a breath of sophistication and intrigue in their lives while keeping their feet on the ground. It's good, clean, well-groomed fun.

Nationally known trombonist David Sporny will make his first area appearance on Tuesday, February 8 at 8:00 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall. Sporny will perform a program chosen to highlight the trombone in a wide variety of styles. For further information about this free concert, call the Department of Music and Dance at 545-2227.

Automatic bank teller machines installed in Newman center

By RAY BEAUCHEMIN
Collegian Staff

Students wishing to use the automatic bank tellers at either BayBank or Heritage Bank in Amherst will no longer have to go into town to do so. Both banks have installed automatic teller machines (ATM) in the Newman Center cafeteria at the University of Massachusetts.

Bay Bank will officially begin operation of its ATM this morning after a ribbon cutting ceremony at 11:30.

Although the official opening of the BayBank machine is today, both machines have been in operation for about a week, said Rev. Joseph Quigley, director of the Newman Center.

Rev. Quigley said that Heritage Bank has no intention of conducting an opening ceremony for its machine.

Bob Barker, a UMass graduate student who worked on an internship at BayBank during January, said work has been done on the Newman Center project since before Christmas, when the actual installation process began.

"The idea in setting up here is it's a profitable business venture for them," Rev. Quigley said.

"The machines are in the cafeteria which seats around 450 people, so its gets a lot of play. Around 1500 people go through the cafeteria in a day," said Rev. Quigley.

Rev. Quigley said the banks will be paying the rent for the space they are using.

"It's a trial run for us and for them. We have a one year contract," Rev. Quigley said.

The ATMs will be open during regular Newman Center hours, 7 a.m. to 11 p.m. unlike the 24-hour ATMs that are in operation in Amherst.

According to Barker, BayBank dignitaries who will participate in the ribbon-cutting ceremony include Steven Root, BayBank vice-president, Josephine Mulligan, marketing officer and Georgia Barufaldi, customer service officer of the local BayBank.

Machine usage will be demonstrated at the ceremony, he said.

CC Coffee Shop litter bugs to be reminded: clean up area

University of Massachusetts students frequenting the Campus Center Coffee Shop will soon be confronted with posters reading "Please keep this area clean." The posters, which make their debut today, are part of a campaign by the Campus Center Human Relations Committee to reduce littering in the Coffee Shop.

According to the Campus Center Board of Governors (B.O.G.) more people have been hired recently to deal with the problem of increased littering in the Coffee Shop, which in turn has increased costs. The posters, along with small printed cards that will be distributed by cashiers, will seek to remedy the litter problem, according to the B.O.G.

UMass drops pair in Pennsylvania

Lose to Penn St. 59-57

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

Those UMass men's basketball fans who are on top of their team's schedule probably realize that yesterday's Back-to-School wrapup of the intersession covered everything you needed to know about the Minutemen and the way things went since Christmas.

Yes, that's right. Everything that a Minuteman fan wanted to hear, every shot, every rebound, every key turnover, in short, every item that was ever entered into the logbook of this intersession past, was included.

Wrong, double dribble breath.

"Each game is a different game and I believe in these kids."

Because of the stringent deadlines set up in order to bring you, the fan (you know who you are), that landmark sports extravaganza, the two final games past were omitted. But, through the wonder of modern journalism, here they are.

On the 23rd day of January, the Minuteman entourage travelled to Pennsylvania for two Atlantic Ten games. The first game would be held on Wednesday night, January 26, in the Palestra, home of the nationally ranked Villanova Wildcats, the opponents, however, were the Hawks of St. Joseph's University.

The game, the first ever between these two schools, was two games in one, divided evenly between periods.

"In the first half," said head coach Tom McLaughlin, "they just jumped out on us."

Jumped out indeed. By the end of the period, the Hawk's pistols had smoke oozing from their barrels as the pseudo-hosts shot 57.8 percent from the floor (22 of 28) and 90.9 percent from the charity stripe (10 of 11) enroute to an 18 point margin at 54-36.

To the UMass hoopsters credit, they did not roll over and die. The team rebounded slightly and managed to "win" the second half by a score of 50-44.

Unfortunately, winning a half of basketball does not constitute a victory in the record books and UMass ended up on the losing end of the final tally, 98-86.

High scorers for the Minutemen were John Hempel and Horace Neysmith who netted 22 and 21 points respectively.

Three days later, the wayward warriors of Amherst shuttled across the state to University Park, Pennsylvania to do battle with the Nittany Lions of Penn State.

Penn State, a team that defeated West Virginia earlier this season, most probably thought that the Minutemen would be a pushover, having only won four games on the year.

Such was not the case, however, as UMass turned in one of their best team efforts of the year only to fall short once again, 59-57.

"We had a shot in the last 12 seconds," said McLaughlin, "Donald Russell had a drive and Horace (Neysmith) got a tap, but the ball just didn't go in."

McLaughlin feels that, while the team may not be as enthusiastic as they were at the outset of the season, the Minutemen are still ready to play with anyone.

"You can't be 4-12 and stay overly enthusiastic, but I think the Penn State game showed that these are tough kids," said McLaughlin. "Each game is a different game and I believe in these kids."

Penn State will be here on Wednesday.

Now, you know everything you ever wanted to know about intersession ball, or do you?

Horace Neysmith had 21 points and 10 rebounds in the Minutemen's 98-86 loss to St. Joseph's.

LaFond and Jackson set back by Breakers

By BILLY SHEA
Collegian Staff

Talk about getting nipped in the bud.

The call came last Wednesday to Scott LaFond and Wilbur Jackson's agent.

"Sorry," the voice told the agent. "We've been evaluating our situation and we do not require the services of your clients at this time, but we will retain their rights until the next draft. Thank you very much. Bye."

One call. That's all it took to put two football players who've been laboring in the weightroon and the gym since the conclusion of the UMass football season, on temporary hold.

The disturbing fact about the call was that neither Jackson nor LaFond really expected the call.

"I guess they're on a tight budget and they have free agents that have been working out since the summer," said Jackson, who was ready to leave school and attend the Boston Breakers tryout camp that opened Monday at the University of Central Florida. "They just said that they weren't interested right now."

LaFond is another story. He went to the mini-camp at Medford High three days before he heard that the Breakers released him; looking, evaluating the competition, seeing if he thought a pro football career was within his capabilities before forfeiting the final semester of his football scholarship and delaying his graduation date.

He went down to the mini camp, which consisted of speed and agility drills, and made his decision.

"I honestly thought I did really well," said LaFond. "I was confident I did well and I thought I had a chance to make the team and I was set to go. I was starting to make arrangements to get down there."

All set to withdraw from school, postpone his graduation date, and go head first into the world of profes.ional football. That's how confident Scott LaFond was that he could make the Breaker's squad.

"They said they were interested and that we'd get a long look," said LaFond. "But, I'm not sure we did."

For LaFond, the call seems to be an omen of sorts. LaFond struggled with the question of whether or not to leave school, finally decided to leave, and later found out that there was actually no decision to make.

"I don't know. I'm glad I went down there to the camp. It was good experience," said LaFond. "Now I can come back and finish up on time."

Jackson is also back at school to finish his education, but he hasn't eliminated the United States Football League as a future employer.

"It gives me a year to get ready rather than a few weeks," said Wilbur, who has spent just the month of January working on his speed and quickness. "I'll wait and see what happens."

LaFond hasn't exhausted all his possibilities to play professional football, either.

"I'll see what happens with the NFL and I also might have a shot at the Canadian Football League, so I'll wait around and see," he said.

Maybe next time they won't be disqualified before they get out of the starting gate.

NCAA elibigility subject of heated national debate

By ELLIOTT KALB
Collegian Staff

There were plenty of important stories in the world of sports over the month of January, and I'm sure you readers couldn't wait to read what I have to say on all the sports happenings. This way, if you're at a bar or a party, you'll be sure to have an intelligent opinion on it.

The only Bears I ever loved were named Yogi and Boo Boo.

ITEM: ALABAMA FOOTBALL COACH PAUL "BEAR" BRYANT DIES.

I'm sorry. Too much has been written about his good old boy already. Don't shed too many tears, though. What can you say about someone so richly loved and eulogized by Alabama Governor George Wallace, President Reagan, and Woody Hayes?

The only Bears I ever loved were named Yogi and Boo Boo.

ITEM: NCAA TO TIGHTEN ACADEMIC STANDARDS FOR ATHLETES.

Beginning in 1986, the NCAA new ruling will require high school seniors to achieve a combined score of 700 on the SAT tests before they are eligible for intercollegiate athletics.

This is a step many coaches, including the coach of the national football champion Penn St. Nittany Lions, Joe Paterno, feel is necessary and long past due.

Predominantly black universities are protesting that standardized tests are culturally biased.

Paterno and others argue that the competitive nature of the minority athletes he has encountered along with a stipulation keeping an athlete on scholarship for one year to raise his scores make this NCAA ruling as fair as possible, while taking a step in the right direction.

It seems obvious that the SAT's are culturally biased. It also seems obvious that there is a problem in college athletics that must be addressed soon.

Most college athletes do not make it at the professional level. The colleges that use these athletes for four years should prepare their hired guns for something else after their athletic careers.

Hopefully, critics and proponents can work together on a solution that doesn't take the opportunity away for many undereducated minority students to attend college and play ball.

The worst possible scenario that could come about from this ruling: The 1987 NCAA Final Four in college basketball is made up of real student athletes, and the quality of play is much lower than we've come to expect.

ITEM: PBS SPECIAL LINKS GAMBLING AND MAFIA TO NFL.

After a year filled with drug abuse problems, a 57 day player's strike, and lawsuits involving the Raider's move to Los Angeles, a recent PBS special inferred that 12 games were fixed during a three year period over 10 years ago with the compliance of a head coach, a quarterback and a defensive captain.

The special also suggested that certain owners are connected with organized crime.

INONEEAR

In your December 1982 issue of Ampersand, Chris Morris does a great disservice to both your magazine and working people all over America. In his section of the "Style" article, the part on party albums, Mr. Morris makes the comment "If your friends are chronic cough syrup drinkers, Detroit auto workers, or are similarly brain-damaged . . ." Now I realize that the intent was humorous, but that does not excuse the inference that auto workers are mentally inferior to the rest of the American population. In any circumstances such a blatant generalization of a large segment of blue-collar America would be distasteful, but in the current economic times the remark is positively inexcusable. No, I am not an auto worker — I am a graduate student at the University of Virginia. Still, I cannot let such an attack on a group of solid Americans pass unanswered.

Perhaps Mr. Morris is upset that the auto workers do not conform to his style of dress or his musical taste, or maybe Mr. Morris just did not consider blue-collar workers as part of the intellectual culture of this country, thereby justifying his disparaging remarks. No matter. Detroit auto workers are to a great extent responsible for making this country great — witness the huge effect on the economy of the automobile industry. In today's computer-controlled industrial world, Mr. Morris, even auto workers have to know more than how to use a wrench. If auto workers are brain-damaged, and Mr. Morris is not, why, then, bring on the lobotomies! He probably drives a Honda anyway.

Robert Mayer
Charlottesville, VA

It's interesting that no auto workers or their relatives wrote to us. Maybe they just have a better sense of humor than graduate students" (please note, that's a little joke). Surely you do not sincerely believe that Mr. Morris meant to condemn all auto workers as brain-damaged? It was a humorous remark, exaggerated for effect.

The editors, by the way, would like to go on record as stating that they would not have taken offense had Mr. Morris written "magazine editors." Or, better yet, "magazine publishers."

May we hear from fry cooks and fashion models, cowboys and Indians? Have we left anyone out? We aim to offend everyone. That's democracy.

While I slaved away this summer on my literary studies at school, you took the summer off. Nonetheless I was pleased to see the October Back to School issue. I look forward to each month's comedy, reviews and features.

Of particular note in the October issue was the article on the author John Keeble by free-lance writer Allan Routh. Having read Yellowfish myself and one other Keeble work, I found the article very informative. I gained some new insight into the man and his books through this excellent article.

Please keep up the well-written literary pieces and of course, the laughs.

I enjoyed your write-up on Monkeemania . . . (Ampersand, November, 1982). I have been a long time Trekkie, and was thrilled when the conventions started up in the early Seventies. How nice to hear that Monkee fans have done the same. I have been a closet Monkee follower for years, and would appreciate it if you could put me in touch with these conventions. Please let me know where I can write for more information.

Diane Roe
Long Beach, CA

Write to the promoter of the conventions, Charles Rosenay, at 397 Edgewood Avenue, New Haven, CT 06511.

I've never heard of François Perrin, but the star of the original The Toy and of The Tall Blond Man with One Black Shoe was Pierre Richard, the most famous comic actor in France. (In reference to your Holiday Movie Guide by Judith Sims, December issue.)

Christine Winston
University of the Pacific
Stockton, Calif

Editor Sims, with face all red, admits her error. François Perrin was the name of the character played by Pierre Richard in Tall Blond Man.

Send us your comments, complaints, compliments (especially your compliments), your philosophy of life or even your SAT scores. We like to get mail — any mail. Send the goodies to In One Ear, 1680 North Vine, Suite 900, Hollywood, CA 90028.

Of Apes & Space

FOURTEEN YEARS after 2001: A Space Odyssey hit theaters and soared to cult status among movie buffs, author Arthur C. Clarke has written another sci-fier the film community covets, 2010: Odyssey Two, just published by Ballantine Books, has attracted massive interest among motion picture executives — so much so that Clarke has already been seen lunching with his attorney and top brass at MGM (makers of part one) about a movie version. Rights to a sequel to 2001 actually belong to MGM and director Stanley Kubrick, so insiders think that 2010 (not exactly a sequel) is a likely candidate for the studio. While that's being decided Clarke has returned to his home on the island of Sri Lanka — the same place Bo and John Derek shot their Tarzan, The Ape Man last year. The island, we hear, is an equal opportunity employer.

AND SPEAKING OF TARZAN, his exploits continue onscreen, this time in the form of a new $20,000,000-plus picture, Greystoke: The Creation of Tarzan and his Epic Adventures, now shooting in Cameroon, Equatorial West Africa (there is such a place). The director is Hugh Hudson, who presides over his first film since Chariots of Fire, with a script based on Edgar Rice Burrough's Tarzan of the Apes. The story focuses on the early life of Tarzan — before he met Jane, Cheetah or anyone in Hollywood.

Working Out

JOHN TRAVOLTA has spent the last few months in an intensive weight and exercise program with his new director Sylvester Stallone to get into shape for Staying Alive, the sequel to Saturday Night Fever. Travolta, who loves to eat, had gotten a little soft in the middle between film roles, but his reps swear that with Sly's help he now has "a body any dancer would envy." That's good, since he plays opposite real-life dancer Finola Hughes, who as a hitch Broadway star lures Travolta's character into a shoddy one-night stand.

Well All Right!!

BACK IN THE DUSTY CORNERS of an MCA warehouse, untouched for nearly 27 years, inside a box marked "Do Not Use," the tapes of Buddy Holly's 1956 recordings have been found. These are the sessions cut after he rebelled at Nashville's attempts to countrify his sound; these are the tapes as they existed before producer Norman Petty "improved" them by filling up the raw Lubbock, Texas rockabilly sound with extra instruments. Buddy Holly — For the First Time Anywhere, due in the stores immediately from MCA Records, ought to come as a happy jolt to the current rockabilly scene (Stray Cats, Blasters, et. al.) and to all those moviegoers who loved The Buddy Holly Story. The LP will include a discography and some recently discovered Holly photographs.

E.T. Forever . . . and Ever. . .

YES, STEVEN SPIELBERG has agreed (in theory) to an E.T. sequel (did you ever doubt it?). The operative date for it to reach theaters is mid-1984, though film company Universal Pictures will only say they are in negotiation. Spielberg, meanwhile, is said to be more immediately interested in doing a film or musical of Little Shop of Horrors, now a hit on Broadway (based on Roger Corman's Fifties horror flick starring then-unknown Jack Nicholson). But even more immediate than that is the director's interest in E.T. kiddie star Drew Barrymore. Spielberg is so protective of the little tyke that he flew to N.Y. when she was hosting Saturday Night Live just to PIONEER SPEAKER OWNERS: PLEASE KEEP YOUR CAR WINDOWS ROLLED UP.

Kablowee. Blam. Bam. Boom.

It's not World War III, ladies and gentlemen.

Merely the introduction of our new Maxxial™ 6x9 car speakers. An introduction that doesn't exactly lend itself to peace and quiet.

Because these are the most awesome sounding speakers yet. With greater power handling capacity.

Great enough, in fact, to handle up to 100 watts of Max Music Power—a method of measurement comparable to the one used to rate the power capacity of our home speakers.

Our newly designed voice coil uses a slightly larger wire. It won't break down because of overheating. And it can withstand (you guessed it) greater power.

So you can imagine what kind of meltdown our speakers will put the old eardrums through when you actually roll those car windows up and listen to them in the intimate confines of your car's interior.

But sorry, all you power-hungry people. The story here isn't power alone.

We use a Strontium Magnet. It's more efficient, giving you greater sound per watt.

And to produce an even better separation of highs, midranges and lows, our Maxxial 3 and 4-way speakers contain an extra driver.

Pure and accurate tonal quality. High efficiency and wide frequency response. These are qualities you've come to expect from a speaker made by Pioneer.

Which is exactly why we still make the components for them ourselves. That way we can meet our standards of quality. And yours.

Speaking of which, our quality control tests virtually drive our speakers to the edge. So while they produce sound that seems like it'll destroy everything within a 12-block radius, the speakers themselves are virtually indestructible.

Now for the most thunderous announcement yet. All this improvement in our speakers, at a price that's designed to get you to gravitate toward power. Not away from it.

make sure the folks would treat her okay. E.T. would say, "Ouch."

MEANWHILE UNIVERSAL has spent $1,000,000 building an E.T. Earth Center on its studio lot — a place where the kiddies can buy more than 500 licensed E.T. items. Aside from browsing their way through E.T. T-shirts, masks, jewelry, bicycles and pajamas, real lucky kids can even get their pictures taken with the little green guy. Only it's not exactly a flesh and blood replica. They get snapped riding a bicycle with a picture of E.T. in the basket. Big deal.

Tube Fodder

HEAVEN'S GATE, THE BIGGEST financial disaster in the history of the film business, has been purchased by the pay cable service, Z Channel, for $1,000,000 (almost more than it sold in theater tickets). Z exec's planned an exclusive L.A. showing of the original 219-minute version of the $42,000,000 film before gunning Christmas eve with distributor United Artists hoping this will inspire other services to purchase the picture for their cities.

REMEMBER THE SPIES from the old TV series Man From U.N.C.L.E.? No, they're not dead. Robert Vaughn and David McCallum are shooting a new movie of the week entitled Return of the Man from U.N.C.L.E. (it will go out as a feature film in other countries).

THE KENNEDYS OF MASSACHUSETTS, an eight hour miniseries for ABC-TV, will trace four generations of the Boston political clan. Spanning over 100 years, the series will be written by Doris Kearns Goodwin, biographer and former special assistant to the late president Lyndon Johnson.

Ronstadt Redux

THE LONG-PLANNED Linda Ronstadt album of standards will probably be finished by the time you read this. Elektra/Asylum, her label, says that the project took extra time due to Pirates of Penzance and pop album commitments. While it's true that the foundering label was desperate for Get Closer, a guaranteed gold-seller, to hit the stands, the standards album was finished more than a year ago. Problem was, it stunk. The decision to hold it from release came after the album covers had already been printed. According to an inside source, the torpedoed LP had a few good moments, but very few. The current waxing, produced by Peter Asher and arranged by Nelson Riddle (of Frank Sinatra fame), represents starting over from square One.

Just Plain Redux

GOOD NEWS FOR OLDIE record buyers: Warner/Elektra/Atlantic has lowered the suggested retail list price of its catalog albums to $6.98 from $8.98. That means, if the record store owners pass the savings on to us, it'll be two bucks cheaper to buy WEA LPs more than a year old.

Video Strategies

YOU MAY HAVE NOTED an eldritch new TV show — at press time it was to be called Wizards and Warlords — wherein some vaguely medieval types walk around stone castles in tights and tunics, hacking now and then at baddies and monsters with fat swords. According to rumors circulating around the Burbank Studios production facilities, where "Lizards and Lawyers" (as some of the crew call the show) is being shot, the producers don't much care if it's a hit. Their rumored strategy is for the series to draw just enough attention to survive because it has lots of strange costumery (a rarity in series TV). Then they can license a video game — any sort of good vs. evil battle will do — based on the series. The advantage is that such a game would be pre-sold by at least seven weeks worth of prime-time television exposure.

SO BULLISH IS 20TH CENTURY-FOX Films on video games that it has decided its video division will use a few of the company's films for the basis of some of its new offerings so while Atari gives us E.T. and Paramount supplies Star Trek games, Fox is offering us the world of Megaforce, Tantastic Voyage and Alien. Can't wait.

Barfing

OLIGOD. Don't make fun of it, 'cause, ya know, people who know about those things tell us that Frank Zappa and daughter Moon Unit have hit upon a potential $100,000,000 licensing goldmine with their "Valley Girl" hit record. Really! With all the really far out deals they've made, we little people will soon be able to buy Valley Girl dolls, leg warmers (for sure), blue jeans and even lunch boxes. Lunch boxes? Guy, barf me out.

YOU THINK HOLLYWOOD PARTIES are fun? Well, not always. Witness the post-screening festivities for 48 Hrs., the new Nick Nolte-Eddie Murphy Dirty Harry-type movie. The guest list included such not-in-demand persons as James and Holly Keach, Joan Hackett and her niece, and Ursula Andress and Harry Hamlin. The site was a delicatessen in West L.A. whose sandwiches include gourmet treats like "Ike and Tina Tuna." The big event: when Nick Nolte's wife Sharon (he didn't show) knelt down in the middle of a group of people and spit out a rumaki she had just eaten. Seems she didn't like the combo of liver and bacon. What a town.

Sequels, Remakes & Copycats

THE CONCRETE JUNGLE, a trashy woman's prison picture earlier this year starring Jill St. John, Nita Talbot and a host of other actresses, went on to such success that its producers have already firmed plans for The Concrete Jungle II (yet another story of a sweet young thing who turns into a tough prison tootsie). Already chained to this opus are Stella Stevens, Linda (is there life after The Exorcist?) Blair, Sybil Danning, the perennial Hollywood vamp Edy Williams (the ex-Mrs. Russ Meyer) and Stuart Whitman. (Stuart Whitman?) No, Ida Lupino is not the prison guard. Or Shelly Winters. Or

THE 3-D CRAZE has hit the good ole porno film. Opening this month at theaters near you is Sexcalibur, a new hardcore entry billed as the latest in 3-D lords and ladies wreaking havoc on each other. Need we say it's in the sword and sorcery genre? O.K., we won't.

THERE WAS Halloween, Halloween II and Halloween III. So now there's going to be Halloween IV — in 3-D. It's true. After the smash opening of Numero Tres, Italian movie mogul Dino DeLaurentiis approached Universal Pictures with the idea of a follow-up. At this point no one is quite sure what the fourth dimension will be. How about greed?

NASTASSIA KINSKI AND DUDLEY MOORE will star in Unfaithfully Yours, a remake of the Preston Sturges classic that originally featured Rex Harrison and Linda Darnell. Howard Zieff (Private Benjamin) directs 'em.

What Are Friends For?

TUESDAY WELD AND JESSICA LANGE, once best friends, are now in a heavy duty feud thanks to Tuesday's comments about Lange's performance as B-movie star Frances Farmer in the new film, Frances. Tuesday reportedly called up Jessica and trashed her acting, telling her that not only was she awful but that the director "should be shot." As if that weren't enough, Tuesday has also reportedly taken up with the ever-agile Mikhail Baryshnikov — Jessica's former beau and the daddy of her child. It's a friendly town.

And on the subject of Frances Farmer, there is also a TV-movie on the actress being rushed onto the tube in hopes of beating out the feature. Susan Blakely plays the title role on TV, with Lee Grant as the demented mother who keeps putting Frances back into a mental institution for shock treatments (Kim Stanley plays mom on the big screen). The rivalry between the two projects recalls a similar star biopic a few years back based on the life of Jean Harlow. Carroll Baker was Harlow in the movie, while Carol Lynley was Harlow, the TV program.

Workingman's Punk

KEEPING TO A STRICT nothing-sacred policy, a New Jersey band called Pop'O'Pies, now based in Frisco, has released a punk version of the Grateful Dead anthem, "Truckin'."

Sacrilege, you say — but things get worse! Side two of the 415 Records EP contains the rap version of the same song. And the cover snatches Garcia & Co.'s familiar skull-and-roses motif, only to juxtapose the sacred symbology with a tabletop of mushed-up chicken pot pies. In fact, the skull has a dribble of gravy on its chin.

"The guys in the Dead love the punk version and they play it before rehearsals," claims Howie Klein, Frisco alternative music maven. Maybe the zombie rockers will even go so far as to cover a Pop'O'Pies original — like, perhaps, "The Catholics Are Attacking" or "Fascists Eat Donuts."

Odd Bits

WOULD YOU BELIEVE a Broadway musical based on Brian DePalma's prom shocker, Carrie? Yep. Screenwriter Larry Cohen is bringing his script to the stage with the help of songwriters Michael Gore and Dean Pitchford (Fame).

AFTER THREE YEARS of preparation, filming will begin this month in Mexico on Dune, the classic Frank Herbert novel set in a world of sand. David Lynch (Eraserhead, Elephant Man) is the director. So serious is Hollywood about this one that they're planning to spend at least $30,000,000 to make it — more than any studio has budgeted for any film in two years.

WHAT DOES PAUL NEWMAN do with his time aside from speaking out against nuclear weapons, racing cars, talking to Joanne Woodward and starring in new movies (The Verdict)? He becomes a food king. Already on the market is Paul's renowned Paul Newman's Salad Dressing and soon to come is Paul Newman's Old-Fashioned Popcorn. Really.

Hungry Hearts (& Empty Heads)

ONCE A YEAR, the staff of the UCLA Daily Bruin puts out a parody version of the crosstown rivals USC Daily Trojan at about the same time that the USC student journalists are busy producing a parody of their foes' publication. But the Trojan student body seems always to be caught with their parody detectors down. The most recent bit: Daily Trojan carried a headline proclaiming a free Bruce Springsteen concert, advising students to hurry and call for tickets. Number given was that of the Daily Trojan's real editor. Dozens of eager Boss fans called for ducats, oblivious to the quotes attributed to the rock star in the body of the article. "His songs are all about aimless drifters who are pretty stupid and have no direction in life," said the imaginary Springsteen, so I think it's very appropriate I sing them to USC students."

UNSURE HOW TO MAKE the most of your educational experience? How to College wants to rescue you. Wresting college from its hackneyed role as a noun, authors Bill Jeakle, Eugene Reardon and Ed Wyatt verbalize the college process with sections on the essentials. Like caffeine, cheating, real testimony from a guy who procrastinates, fake IDs, Ten Rules of Tanning and how to tell the difference between a get-together, a gathering, a party and a coup d'etat. Subtitled "A Humorous Guide to the Four Years," the tome even advises on how to make the Greek scene. "Joining a frat is a little more difficult than joining a record of the month club," counsels page 95. "... avoid racist and ethnic jokes, stick with sexist." If the tome is unavailable in your local bookstore, copies may be ordered from Primer Press, Box 3710, Palo Alto, CA 94305 for $4.95 each.

MEL GIBSON

An American from Kangarooland Hops to the Top

BY DAVIN SEAY

Mel Gibson's skin is on too tight. Maybe it's the circumstances — the first in what promises to be an endless series of interviews to promote his latest film, the U.S./Australian coproduction of Peter Weir's The Year of Living Dangerously — or maybe this is just the way he's put together, all wires and sinews and short bursts of forced laughter. Whatever the case, the 26-year-old expatriate American actor seems on the verge of an acute nervous meltdown.

The plush leather sofa, into whose inviting recesses he's sunk, is unable to hold him still for long. For one thing, his clothes are giving him trouble: the double-knit pants riding up, revealing the zippered tops of some vintage Beatle boots. He's long since tossed off his sports coat, and the way he's squirming you'd think the beige silk shirt he's wearing was made of horse hair. One of the most sought-after rising stars on the international film scene — the matinee idol of Mad Max and Road Warrior, the riveting screen presence of Gallipoli — Gibson is behaving like a summer stock hopeful auditioning for a bit part in Kismet.

If it wasn't for all this fidgeting, distracted pacing and chain smoking, Mel Gibson's unfamiliarity with the standard Hollywood tap dance might be disarming, even refreshing. As it is, I have the feeling that Gibson expected each question, no matter how innocent, to hold a barb, ready to sink into all the personal and private parts of his psyche and drag them out for everyone to see. This isn't an interview, it's a grilling, and one that reveals an often painful vulnerability.

"I love all this," he says gesturing vaguely to the bright sky and the busy entertainment enterprise grinding on outside his publicist's Beverly Hills window. "But I don't think I'm equipped to handle it."

All this" is Hollywood, a town whose glitzy ambience gives pause to an actor who made his reputation in the outback Australian film industry. "I've been asked to come here and make movies, but I think it would be too much too soon. It's a frightening prospect, really."

Frightened or not, Gibson may soon find himself having to deal with success on its own terms. Born in Peekskill, New York, in January of 1956, Gibson was one of eleven children in a family that emigrated to Australia in 1968. Initially interested in a career as a journalist, Gibson considered his early attraction to acting nothing more than a pleasant diversion from reality. Nevertheless, after graduating from high school, he applied to the National Institute of Dramatic Arts in Sydney. To his shock, he was accepted.

"The day after I graduated," he recalls, the broad vowel sounds of his Aussie accent obliterating any trace of his American roots, "I went out and auditioned for Mad Max. I didn't know what the hell I was doing, I just stepped into it and my head started to reel."

With good reason, as it turned out. Filmed on a budget of around $400,000, Mad Max — a hyperkinetic end-of-the-world romp — has grossed over $100 million to date, making it the most successful film in Australian movie history and the feature credited with opening up global markets to Down Under product. "It was a rough trot," quips Gibson in what has to be an indigenous turn of phrase. "I'd never been in front of a camera before. It all seemed crazy to me, an absolutely insane business."

Gibson, undoubtedly caught up in the mythic proportions of the Mad Max success story, is spinning a bit of legend here himself. The fact is, he was cast in a feature film called Summer City while still a student at the Institute of Dramatic Arts, on-screen experience that had to come in handy when playing the grief-crazed highway patrolman Max in the galvanic role that catapulted him into worldwide attention. Summer City, just to set the record straight, is one of seven films in the Gibson portfolio, which includes the tearjerker Tim, in which he stars as a retarded youth enamored of Piper Laurie; something called Z Men; and a couple of oriental potboilers made in Taiwan. "I've done some really awful things," Gibson admits, pulling at his trousers and reaching for another Chesterfield. "But all things considered, I've been quite lucky. Being way down there away from everything . . . away from the public eye, has given me a chance to grow and develop. I think if I'd have done some of those films here I would have been stopped cold." His laugh is high-pitched, emanating from some reserve of anxiety that's causing him now to take tremendous drags off his cigarette and convulsively gulp black coffee.

Road Warrior, last year's block-buster sequel to Mad Max (originally titled Mad Max II) is a work of which even the self-effacing Gibson is proud. "Mad Max was really a technical feat," he confesses, "a triumph of editing. There was nothing I did that was that extraordinary. But by the time we did Road Warrior, I was more knowledgable about film in general. I had learned how to use the camera, to work in that inescapable style of George's."

George is George Miller who, along with Peter Weir, Fred Schepsi, Bruce Beresford and a handful of others, is a founding member of Australia's new wave wunderkind film director's club. Citing what he calls Miller's "amazing ability to see something before he shoots it," Gibson tries to explain how, with a grand total of no more than a dozen lines as the road warrior, he was able to fashion with looks and presence such formidable menace and potent anger within the context of Miller's breakneck apocalyptic parable.

"I was in damn near every frame," he concedes, "so it became a question of accelerating to a weird, whippet speed of the film. It's what I call Heavy Metal acting, doing less and making more of it."

Questions of yet another Mad Max epic are left hanging. "When we finished the first installment, we all swore we'd never pick up on that theme again. What George may do next, I have no idea. I wouldn't presume to scope his psyche."

Psyche-scoping isn't something Gibson himself will sit still for, either. Tentative probes into his personal life are met with more twitches and embarrassed pauses. He's been married for three years and has a two-year-old daughter. "My wife likes to stay out of my career as much as possible," he says, "and prefers that I don't discuss her either. She thinks it's rude, and I'm of the same opinion." The Gibsons make their home in Sydney, a locale he refers to as "delicious." One gets the feeling he'd like to be back right about now.

Meanwhile, he's run out of smokes. There's not even a butt in the ashtray, thanks to his disconcerting habit of reducing each cigarette to a nub of glowing coal, abandoning it only after singeing his lips. A secretary is hurriedly summoned, she offers her own pack of Vantages. Gibson takes the American brand, but transforms them into "lung busters" by ripping off their filtered heads. The grilling resumes.

Gallipoli was the birth of a nation," he says, as the subject turns to yet another of his meritorious starring roles — that of the naive farm boy fed into the First World War meat grinder in Peter Weir's anti-militarist screed, Gallipoli. The disastrous battle, fought interminably on the shore of Turkey, provided some incendiary subject matter for a film that, in the end, seemed rather tame and delicate. Gibson, however, shone in his sympathetic rendering of a young man marching willingly to death for a cause not worth the cost. "It was the shattering of a dream for Australia," he remarks. "They had handed together to fight the Hun and died by the thousands in a dirty little trench war." For Gibson, however, there was something fine and true in the ideals and aspirations of that era. "Most people would call it a dark time," he muses. "I don't agree. There was real sanity then. Men knew what they believed in . . . one God, honor and country. They were good men, fighting for something that was real to them."

Gallipoli, filmed for $2.5 million — a hefty budget by Australian standards — did much to earn Gibson a reputation as a "serious," versatile actor. It also elevated the continent's film industry into the big leagues, with heavy international promotion and distribution. Despite its flaws, Gallipoli did much to convince the world that the Aussies were in the running for Hollywood-sized stakes.

"The first movie picture ever made was filmed in Australia," explains Gibson. "It was ten years before the Yanks got into it and they really had a booming little industry there for awhile. The problem was, there was no population to support it and, with Hollywood outclassing them, they just faded away. For all intents and purposes, it was asleep until the early Seventies and even with all their success, they still lack the money and technology to be really competitive. There's been a lot of experimentation, not all of it good, and much of it concerned with examining themselves through their art."

Gibson retains American citizenship, but considers himself essentially Australian. He sees the young nation's famous identity crisis in a unique light.

"Aussies have what you might call 'the cringe,'" he asserts. "They're a little raw and feel a little inferior. By having a prod at their history through movies they're trying to find out who they are, to tap a source of pride. I think it's beginning to happen. I've been there fourteen years and have seen immense changes. They have found what they think is an identity and it's becoming identifiable to the rest of the world as well."

Part of that identity is tightly bound up in the nation's movie exports.

As a face and movie persona, Mel Gibson stands at the center of his adopted country's emerging identity. Despite his real life twinges and twitters, the on-screen Gibson exudes a rock steady, unpretentious self-consciousness, a powerful sense of presence and an instinctual grasp of the moment. "I don't worry about success," he says. "If it doesn't work out I can always go grow corn." Coming from him, it's a believable alternative.

As reluctant a star as he may be, Gibson's destiny seems determined to keep him out of the corn field. The Year of Living Dangerously is by far the most ambitious Australian film undertaking to date — a sprawling epic that holds at its core a fleeting love affair between characters played by Gibson and American actress Sigourney Weaver (of Alien and Eyewitness fame). Bankrolled by MGM to the tune of $6 million, the film is set against the final days of Sukarno's corrupt Indonesian regime.

"It's taken from a novel by a very fine Australian writer, Christopher Koch," Gibson explains. "It's the story of how politics catches up with people. It's funny, but 1965, the year the film takes place, Sukarno deemed 'the year of living dangerously.' He sure proved it. A coup attempt by Communist factions in the government, backed by Peking, failed and in the reprisals, hundreds of thousands died. Our story deals with the period just after the coup and revolves around a collection of foreign correspondents."

The Year of Living Dangerously received lots of valuable pre-release publicity. First, permits to film in Jakarta, Indonesia, were denied. Then radical Moslems, assuming the movie in progress was going to be anti-Islamic, disrupted the subsequently chosen Philippine location with death threats and other acts of intimidation.

Alarming stories of narrow escape from angry mobs surfaced in the Los Angeles and New York Times, People and elsewhere. Thanks to some fundamentalist firebrands, The Year of Living Dangerously had made a splash before a single frame was shown.

"It wasn't really that bad," says Gibson. "We got a lot of death threats to be sure, but I just assumed that when there are so many, it must mean nothing is really going to happen. I mean, if they meant to kill us, why send a note?" Still, the third world sojourn did provoke some unnerving encounters. "One call I kept getting was this guy asking me if I was brave and courageous. That's all he'd ask. It was scary enough."

With The Year of Living Dangerously at last in the can and set for early 1983 release, Gibson is a bit at loose ends. "I'm looking for a challenging role," he says, as he lights the last of his de-filtered cigarettes and heaves a deep, ragged sigh. "Something different from anything I've done. It's hard. I'm the kind of person who can't do anything unless I enjoy it."

NEW ELECTRONICS

THE INCREDIBLE SHRINKING RECORD

BY WINN L. ROSCH

Machines that make the phonograph obsolete have a revered spot in the Patent Office files right behind perpetual motion machines, inventors claiming such contraptions are spoken to softly by folks dressed in white and cagily clasping butterfly nets.

When a major corporation announces a new product with the claim that it replaces Edison's talking machines, my mind switches to thoughts of selling them some swampland I have in Florida for new corporate offices. Crazy, misguided and naive are among the kindest words to describe those who believe they can upset the phonograph's 100-year hegemony over home music reproduction.

Naturally I was astounded when Sony Corporation not only made that claim but on October first of 1982 introduced their Compact Disc system in Japan.

It quickly became obvious that Sony, too, has misjudged public reaction to the new product. They sold out of it almost immediately, and now they have a waiting list 45 days long.

Within the next few months Sony and a host of other companies will introduce that same product, the Compact Disc system of digital audio discs, in the United States. Public acceptance here may be just as unpredictable as in Japan.

Although news of digital discs might not be earth-shaking to you if you've already seen "digital" records in stores for years, one look at the Compact Disc itself will tell you it's of a different ilk. About the only thing it has in common with today's records is that it's round.

Those so-called "digital" records you may be familiar with are ordinary black vinyl records made from digital master tapes and played on ordinary turntables. The Compact Disc is little more than 4-1/2 inches in diameter, shiny silver on one side and all label on the other, and has no grooves. It requires, as you may have guessed, an entirely new piece of hi-fi equipment to play it.

A few of the things it doesn't have — like noise, distortion, pops, clicks, flutter and wow — should make the Compact Disc interesting to anyone who has a stereo system.

If numbers mean anything to you, its frequency response is absolutely flat from 20 Hz to 20,000 Hz, its signal-to-noise ratio is about 90 dB, and distortion generally is under 0.01 per cent. That means the sound quality the Compact Disc system can put in your living room is as good as digital studio master tapes. Comparing Compact Discs to ordinary albums is like comparing FM radio to AM — only the difference between discs is literally 100 times greater!

Yet that super quality is virtually indestructible. Because the Compact Disc is played by a laser instead of a needle, it won't wear out, nor will dust, fingerprints and the usual minor scratches affect its sound.

The secret is that the music is recorded in digital data bits instead of as a soundwave in a record groove. Roughly 6-1/4 billion bits per disc allow up to 74 minutes of uninterrupted playing time.

Although breathtaking and long-lasting sound are the most eye-catching qualities of the Compact Disc, other reasons also make its creators believe it has a chance of sending the LP the way of 78 RPM records.

The same silver disc will play in a future line of portable stereos — like today's Walkpeople — and in car stereo players as well. In fact one Sony spokesman believes that Compact Discs will help solve what the music industry calls "the home taping problem" by being an all-purpose medium. Because there will be no need to tape a disc to make its music portable and because Sony believes most people are naturally too lazy to tape if they don't have to, few will bother to push the record button down.

The computer stuffed inside the Compact Disc player also makes the discs easier to use than either today's records or cassette tapes.

On Sony's introductory machine, the CDP-101, pushbuttons let you choose exactly what cut you want without hunting for the place to drop the needle, repeat any album cut or part of a track, however long, as often as you like, or scan the disc forward or backward. When you scan, the music whizzes by at a breakneck pace but the pitch does not change! Future models may even have an electronic readout of the album name and title of the cut being played for folks who cannot identify songs by melody alone.

The most important implication for the future is standardization. The Compact Disc system was developed by the joint efforts of Sony in Japan and Philips in Europe, and it has now been adopted as the standard digital home playback system by over three dozen other manufacturers.

Even the packaging of Compact Disc albums has been standardized. Each will come in a clear plastic box hinged like a cassette box but shaped roughly five inches square and a quarter inch thick. Cover art and a removable booklet for album notes will be enclosed with each disc.

When the Compact Disc player is introduced here, Sony promises that over 100 discs will be available for it. Although only the handful of albums that have been digitally mastered can take full advantage of the ultimate sonic capabilities of the Compact Disc, Sony expects that public acceptance, the convenience and the freedom from deterioration of the Compact Disc medium will lead to many older albums being remastered in the new format.

Expectedly, the price of the new technology is high. Sony has pegged the CDP-101 Compact Disc player in the $1000 range. The discs themselves will cost about $15-20, the same spread as most current audiophile albums.

Other makers will have other units at various prices. Even Sony admits readying a second model at about half the CDP-101's tag, to be released late this year (1983).

Even if the Compact Disc does sound as good as its specifications say it should (it does, by the way, I heard it, and now I want one. Sony please take note), there's no guarantee of when or if conventional albums will be obsolete.

Asked to predict the future, Sony is as noncommittal as a politician running for re-election. But in this age of one technical triumph after another, even the Compact Disc may be obsolete in ten years.

Great sound, great styling and great savings on our Realistic® STA-111 Digital Synthesized Receiver, regularly $359.95, now just $219.95 until February 21, 1983.

There's no dial to turn. Just touch the tuning search button and the digital circuit scans from each station to the next, tuning it in with precision quartz-locked accuracy. The exact frequency is displayed on a big, easy-to-read fluorescent digital readout. You can enter the frequencies of your 12 favorite stations, six FM and six AM, into the microprocessor memory for instant, one-button recall.

You get an ample 30 watts per channel, minimum rms into 8 ohms from 20-20,000 Hz, with no more than 0.02% total harmonic distortion. And a special equalization switch shapes the amplifier output for enhanced bass from our Minimus-series and other mini-speakers so you'll get good vibrations over the entire audio spectrum.

Other features include bass, treble and midrange controls so you can customize the sound to suit your own taste and room acoustics. Seven-segment LED AM/FM tuning meter indicates signal strength at a glance. And built-in protective circuitry helps prevent damage due to shorts or thermal problems. Covered by Radio Shack's two-year limited warranty*, of course.

The sleek champagne-silver case is only 3¼"-high × 17⅝" wide and 14¼" deep. Handsomely styled to blend in with and complement any decor. Fits easily in den, dorm or bedroom.

The listening's fine! Get into your Little Duece Coupe and come in to Radio Shack for a hands-on demonstration today.

for Technophobia: businessmen and students who cannot adjust to the coming age will be left far behind.

Luckily, technology and competition have driven prices incredibly low: two decades ago, it would have cost hundreds of thousands of dollars to buy what is presently available for under a thousand.

But computer showrooms can be a lot like used-car dealerships, and the best way to get a deal is to know exactly what you want, and then do some comparison shopping.

Do you want to organize information (data-base management)? Write letters or term papers (word processing)? Statistical analysis of the stock market? If you really want to keep up with the Dow-Joneses, you need the right machine with the right software. Don't let the salesman decide for you.

For first-timers, where you buy your machine is vitally important. Can they supply you with the instruction, supplies and repair that you will need? Although you can always shave off a few dollars (and sometimes a few hundred dollars) by purchasing through the mail, in exchange, you have little or no user-support. The first-time buyer may find this disastrous.

Barring the availability of a helpful dealership, a few knowledgeable friends might suffice. Any large college should have a computer-users group, but if it doesn't, organize one.

Is a wide range of software available for your computer? This is no longer as much of a problem as it used to be. There is big money to be made in providing programs, in cassette tape or "floppy disk" form, for other people's computers. This also goes for peripheral products: CRT's (viewscreens), Modems, printers, etc. The idea now is for your product to be compatible with as many different units as possible. This is heaven for the buyer. If you purchase any major brand, you are extremely unlikely to get stuck with an "Orphan."

There are so many companies putting out so many products right now, that a comprehensive or even truly representative sampling could easily take 20,000 words. What we will try to do, then, is to examine a few of the most available models, those that have enough units on the market for the company's integrity and quality to be known factors.

1) The Timex/Sinclair ZX 1000

The low-end favorite. This machine, which retails for $99.95, is amazing. It has a "membrane" keyboard, which basically means that its keys don't move. Touch typists might be offended, but otherwise the little machine is marvelous. It possesses a full range of mathematical and scientific functions accurate to nine and a half decimal places, moderate graph and animated display faculties, 2K RAM (two thousand bits of Random Access memory, the programmable internal workings) expandable to 16K with the optional accessory RAM module. In addition, Memotech brand "memopaks" are available, offering everything from increased memory and a printer interface to high-resolution graphics. Expansions average around $100.00. Dilithium Press at P.O. Box 606, Beaverton, Oregon 97075 and ARCsoft Publishers at P.O. Box 132 G, Woodsboro, Maryland 21798 both have a growing catalog of programs and programming hints. With them, you can add on simple word processing capacity, financial applications and educational programs. A terrific first computer for someone with a limited budget and an unlimited thirst for knowledge.

2) Atari 800

About $650.00, available for less. Although most famed for their gaming capacity, those high-resolution graphics can be used for charts of all kinds. The Atari is available everywhere, with a wide range of accessories, and everyhody in the world seems to be making Atari-compatible cartridges. A very "light" system, but one which is capahle of doing work when playtime is over. Software includes Microsoft BASIC (Beginner's All-purpose Symbolic Instruction Code, a simple computer language), Macro Assemhler and Pascal (more complex languages). PILOT, an easy key to the creation of complex graphics, is also available.

3) Epson HX-20

Cost: under $800.00. Small enough to fit into a suitcase, the Epson comes with 16K RAM, optionally expandable to 32K, and 32K ROM (Read Only Memory, the fixed-content internal "works" of the computer), a full-sized keyboard, and an internal power supply which lasts for 50 hours. It interfaces easily with the superb series of Epson MX printers. A built-in 24-column dot matrix impact microprinter produces hard copy at 42 lines per minute. While too recent an addition to the marketplace to establish its reliability, Epson is so solid a company that new products should be greeted with enthusiasm.

4) Apple II

Cost: $1530.00. Although the Apple has taken a lot of heat for heing over-priced and under-featured, it is still a good machine for those who want a little play with their business. The Apple has, arguahly, the finest range of software to be found, and a good network of service centers. You'll never end up with an Orphan.

The Apple II is restricted to upper-case characters, which will increase difficulty in word-processing, but some of the software manufacturers seem to have worked around that problem, so it is worth looking into. It has a very good business graphics system, which makes it especially interesting.

5) TRS-80 model III

As with the Apple, you are likely to be laughed out of the company of serious computer fanatics if you confess to owning a "Trash-80." Don't let that stop you from looking at the system, however. Radio Shack, the marketer, probably has the best chain of service and training facilities in the nation. The units are service-

Pat Metheny

BY ZAN STEWART

In his standard onstage (and offstage as well, for that matter) costume of faded jeans and long-sleeved tee-shirt, smiling a toothy grin, his long hair flowing rhythmically, Pat Metheny might make one think: "Now that boy's smoked too many of those funny cigarettes." But as soon as his guitar-led jazz group breaks into action, it's clear that Metheny can't be judged by appearance.

Emanating from that casually dressed lad's Gibson ES-175, and a few other instruments we'll tell you about, are some of the sweetest and hottest sounds played by any musician anywhere, jazz, rock, classics, you name it. His fellow artists concur: polls in Musician, Player and Listener revealed that many musicians felt Metheny would be the most influential artist of the Eighties.

It isn't surprising, then, to find out that the 28-year-old's life fairly revolves around music, with room for little else. Eight to ten months a year, he's on the road purveying his distinctive blend of mellow jazz/rock, fomenting free jazz tunes and electronic mood works. The rest of the time he's in the studio, or playing a guest spot with someone else, or maybe listening. "I feel real lucky to be doing it," was the understatement Metheny offered recently, acknowledging that "there are a lot of cats who love playing as much as I do who haven't had the opportunities."

But Metheny was ready when opportunity knocked. He'd done his homework, practicing eight hours a day since he took up the guitar in 1968, at the age of 14. Born in rural Lee's Summit, Missouri, he was influenced musically by his father and his older brother, Mike, both brass players. They were aware of the jazz spectrum and particularly its melodic elements, as evidenced by such artists as Miles Davis, Bill Evans and Ornette Coleman, and today the guitarist in turn reflects that melodicism.

"Jim Hall, Wes Montgomery, Lester Young, Keith Jarrett, these players and others have meant the most to me," he observes, "and they all have had marvelous melodic conceptions. I try to incorporate melody into all my playing."

Besides hearing jazz from his brother and father, Pat Metheny was hearing rock, and some country music (could that be avoided in Missouri?) on the radio, establishing a broad range of sources in the young player. "The rock music that I heard, like the Yardbirds, the Beatles, the Kinks, the Who, I liked that music and I still do. It's certainly part of me, whereas I don't really feel that bebop is. I douht if I'll ever be into playing just behop. It's something that I love but it's not the real me. I mean, I didn't grow up in Harlem or Detroit, I grew up in Lee's Summit, which is a totally different feeling."

But the allure of bebop, with its fleeting lines and lightning fast tempos, was potent enough to draw Metheny, still in high school, to jam sessions 30 miles south in Kansas City, where he played with such artists as organist Charles Kynard and trumpeter Gary Sivils. Metheny remembers, "Gary had a great sound, soft and sweet like Miles or Chet Baker." And though Metheny scuffled on the complicated bop numbers, he learned a great deal about harmony and playing in general at the sessions.

He took that experience to Florida, when he attended the University of Miami on a scholarship in 1972. Instead of becoming a student ("I couldn't stand classes," he said), he became a teacher.

Metheny had only been in Florida a few months when the University began offering an electric guitar music major, resulting in a sudden rush of new students. As the Missourian had taught a little in high school and showed promise as a player, he was placed on the faculty. During the Florida sojourn, the guitarist also encountered bassist Jaco Pastorius (of Weather Report fame), who remains a cohort to this day.

After awhile, Metheny had had enough of balmy Miami and went back to Lee's Summit. One eventful weekend, he traveled to a jazz festival in Wichita, Kansas, where Gary Burton was playing, and asked the vibist if he could sit in.

Burton clearly recalls the day. "Pat was hanging around backstage. He introduced himself, said he knew most of the group's music and wanted to sit in. My reaction was 'Is he kidding?' He looked about 14, was all smile, teeth everywhere ... there in the middle of Kansas. When he proceeded to say how some of my records had influenced him to take up guitar, it was a great compliment, hut I was getting more skeptical by the minute. But I let him play and after I heard him, I had to admit he played pretty well. An incredible blend of Missouri, hip, chops and all those teeth."

In return, Metheny's got some pretty fair words to say about Burton. The vibist hired him shortly after the Wichita meeting, when the guitarist was again a combination student/teacher, this time at the noted Berklee School of Music in Boston. The three years spent with Burton taught Metheny not only about music, but also the music business. "I never could have had a better sideman job," he says. "If I had to do it all over again, Gary's hand would still be my number one choice for getting myself established if I were a new guitarist."

But Metheny didn't like the idea of taking orders, or advice, from even a mentor such as Burton. After three years with the vibist, he formed his Group in 1976. Today the Pat Metheny Group consists of original member Lyle Mays on keyboards, bassist Steve Rodby and drummer Dan Gottlieb.

"Lyle has a very logical way of putting things together," Metheny relates, "while I'm more or less spontaneous. The mixing of those approaches sometimes produces very exciting results. Of course, I dig him very much simply because he's a fantastic jazz player."

The two also share a common love and curiosity for the electronic marvels that seem to be appearing daily in the contemporary musical product market. Though Metheny still plays on his 1958 Gibson eighty-five percent of the time (he uses seven guitars in the course of a show), he runs that guitar through a digital delay, which splits the sound and delays it for a few milliseconds, and then amplifiers present that sound in stereo to the audience, creating an electronic warmth of a sort. This process, called "phasing," is the source of inspiration for "Phase Dance," a tune that's opened the Group up to three-hour live shows — "We've become the Grateful Dead of jazz," Metheny laughingly adds — for four years.

The youthful plectrist also plays a Roland GR 30 guitar synthesizer that creates some of the unusual tones, like the almost violin sound Metheny gets; lately he's been plugged into a system that really proves the future is here: it's the Oncor digital guitar synthesizer that is run through the able and unspectacular, like all Radio Shack products. If no other computer stores are available in your area, check them out. For $1795.00 you get a single disk drive, a 12-inch high-resolution monitor, a typewriter-style keyboard with 12-key datapad, and a parallel printer interface.

(6) Osborne 1

Price of this top end favorite is $1795.00. The only innovation in the Osborne One is the packaging. Adam Osborne has taken 64K of RAM, dual floppy disk drives, a 5-inch viewing screen and a full-sized keyboard and packaged them all in something that looks like a sewing machine case. Along with this he has included approximately $1500.00 worth of free programs. WordStar/Mailmerge (which many consider to be the best word processing package on the market), SuperCalc (an electronic spreadsheet ideal for accounting purposes), two BASIC programs and the CP/M operating system. Peripherals and accessories are mounting at an incredible rate, and so are limitations. Osborne stands behind his products to the bitter end. At present he is offering the best combination of hardware, software and service on the market, at an unbeatable price. Do yourself a favor and look into it. It may not be what you want, but it's a darn good reference point.

WHATEVER FITS THE HOLE

BY WINN L. ROSCH

Just because it's bolted to your car's dashboard doesn't mean your car stereo is a permanent installation. If your mobile music system is more than a couple years old and especially if it came with your car, consider updating it. You're not satisfied with only four watts and no Dolby at home — why punish your ears when a traffic jam punishes your patience?

For the last two or three years the car stereo industry has been the only part of hi-fi to have a sales boom. Sales took off because home stereo component quality was finally packaged for mobile mounting — and it didn't take a specifications-crazed audiophile to hear the difference. Dolby and extended frequency response were finally built into car cassette players, and amplifiers that would run on car power were designed with low distortion and reasonable output. Tough competition in the rapidly growing industry has blessed consumers by forcing quality up in reasonably priced units.

Today, a car stereo is truly a component system, with your choice of cassette receivers, amplifiers, equalizers and speakers.

Your first concern in finding the best possible sound is what will fit into your car. Most dealers have a list of which receiver fits into which dashboard and what speakers can be shoehorned in where.

In general, bigger speakers are better. The best place to put them is in the rear deck (if your car has one). Dolby is a must in a cassette player, and an equalizer is almost mandatory in most cars.

If you have a big enough budget, the sky's the limit. Some automobile sound systems cost more than the car that surrounds them. Your mobile stereo could cost more than the system you have at home.

And why not? You can always adjourn to the garage when you want to hear your favorite tape on a top-quality stereo system.

DECKED OUT WITH THE LATEST

BY WINN L. ROSCH

Stereo cassette recorders were first made for saving the brand-new-quality sound of virginal LPs. Your favorite music on tape wards off the effects of uncaring or careless handling and the grind of too many plays. You can preserve your music collection forever yet still enjoy it at parties so rough that the police run for cover.

Every year cassette recorders are afflicted by one minor technical revolution or another that is supposed to help them make better copies of records and — just incidentally — make all older machines obsolete.

One such feature you'll find on the latest recorders is an extra pushbutton labeled "Dolby C."

Like its sibling, the long familiar Dolby B that is found on any cassette machine with pretenses of being high fidelity, C is a noise reduction system. According to its inventor, C does its older brother one better and eliminates the last trace of hiss from the tapes that you make.

That's good, but the sorry quality of most mass-produced albums doesn't even tax the capabilities of the older Dolby B. C, then, is overkill.

If you expect record quality in general to improve (which is about as likely as album prices coming down) or if you plan to make recordings of audiophile albums or live performances, Dolby C will help you get the best quality on tape. On the other hand, some of the best bargains for the casual recordist are the leftover older machines without the newer Dolby.

You should be aware that tapes made with one Dolby are not compatible with tapes made with the other. The old B system is still required to play back most prerecorded tapes properly; if you want C, you'll need them both.

(Besides the Dolbies, you may encounter other noise reduction systems like ANRS and dbx [sic]. Although most work as claimed, none of them is completely compatible with Dolby-ized prerecorded cassettes.)

Although cassettes first won the hearts of stereophiles in living and party rooms, for the last couple of years their most explosive growth has been on the go. Most new models of tape machines are either Walkman-clones (for joggers and other antisocial types), boom boxes (for sonic sadists) or cassette car stereos.

Technically these portables lag about three paces behind the home component units, and only slowly will such advances as Dolby C invade their ranks. As time marches on, the most notable changes will be the small units getting smaller and the big ones bigger.

Picking out a portable cassette unit is, therefore, quite easy. You choose a Walkperson by what fits your pocket, an auto cassette by what fits the hole in your car's instrument panel where someone stole your last one, and the boom box by weight: the bigger you can lift.

Picking a component cassette recorder is more difficult because nearly any one of the hundreds you can buy will give acceptable performance, and new models have made top quality tantalizingly affordable.

Most of these new machines appear designed to appease the typical American's yearning to command his own starship by offering more special features than most people can use, let alone figure out.

Certainly you need tape selectors that determine bias and equalization and adapt the recorder to most of the brands and varieties of tape available (ice cream should come in so many flavors). Most of the rest of the controls, however, affect convenience and status more than they do sound.

Deciding which ones you abso-

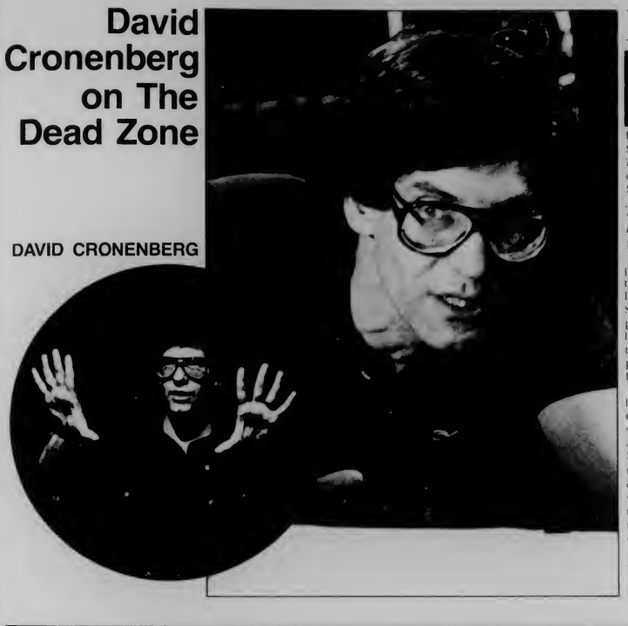
David Cronenberg on The Dead Zone



DAVID CRONENBERG

BY JAMES H. BURNS

Last Fall, in the midst of post-production on Videodrome, David (The Brood, Scanners) Cronenberg announced that he had signed to direct the film version of fantasy master Stephen King's best-selling novel, The Dead Zone. The picture was originally going to be handled by Stanley (Singing in the Rain, Saturn 3) Donen, but will now be supervised by line producer Debra (the Halloween saga) Hill and executive producer Dino De Laurentiis.

The Dead Zone follows what happens when a concussion unleashes the telepathic powers of a young high school teacher named Johnny Smith. Smith's ability enables him to peer into people's futures and pasts by either touching them or an object that they've possessed. Smith's telepathy is both sporadic and painful for him to use.

"The Dead Zone is proving not to be the easiest book to adapt," says Cronenberg, "because it has two full stories — a mass murder of women and the career of a present-day McCarthy-like politician — that intertwine with Johnny Smith's. Obviously, we're going to have to make some structural changes. At the moment, we plan to have the film definitely just follow Johnny. The other characters and story elements will be included but only as they impinge on Johnny's life."

At press time, The Dead Zone was set to commence shooting in January. But even before that start date grew near, horror and science fiction fans were already enthusiastic about the talent fusion of Stephen (Different Seasons, Salem's Lot) King and Cronenberg, two of the genres' finest practitioners. One source of consternation, however, concerns executive producer De Laurentiis, who has been blamed for the lackluster quality of his fantasy remakes, King Kong and Flash Gordon.

"I've heard a lot of stories, both good and bad, about Dino," Cronenberg comments. "So far on this film, everything's gone smoothly. In fact, I was surprised that Dino gave us carte blanche for casting. All that he's asking is that the actors we choose be good."

Some fantasy mavens are also wary of whether or not Cronenberg can handle The Dead Zone, since it marks the first time he's directed someone else's work (with the exception of the racing car picture Fast Company, which Cronenberg extensively rewrote). Cronenberg isn't even writing The Dead Zone's script, which is being penned by Jeffrey Boam, who began working on the screenplay under Donen.

"What's nice about working on The Dead Zone with Jeffrey and Debra Hill," Cronenberg finishes, "is that I certainly have more objectivity on the material than on something that I might have just finished writing from scratch. I've begun to feel that I'm going to be able to distill the essence of what's really good in Stephen King's novel into a concentrated form. We'll see when the film's finished, if that's an illusion.

lutely need involves carefully weighing your checkbook against your intrinsic patience and sloth. For instance, I have my doubts whether I will ever use "automatic program search" — I'm just too lazy to push the button that starts the search — but I've found a "minutes and seconds" display is much handier than an old-fashioned tape counter when recording.

Automatic reversing is great for those occasions when you're too involved in whatever you're doing to flip the tape, but that little convenience can sport a substantial price.

Double transports apparently are designed to help you start a new career in music piracy by allowing you to copy tapes at high speed. Certainly they work as advertised, but if you're just going to make cassette copies for a friend, why should you invest in a more expensive machine? Why not just borrow his?

Discussions of whether meters or bar graph displays are better lead to arguments more quickly than insulting someone's mother. The more expensive machines have bar graphs mostly because they look more modern and sexier. In truth most people, including many professionals, have but a vague idea of what the meter or graph should be reading, so the choice doesn't make much difference.

As you climb up a manufacturer's model line and prices shoot skyward, little extras are added to justify the increasing expense; extras like heads, motors and capstans. Dual capstans and a separate motor for them can mean smoother drive. A three-head system has a monitoring advantage over two heads — you can listen to the tape as it is being recorded, just like with professional recorders.

But don't be misled into thinking professional-like features make a professional machine. Should you consider recording the album that will change the direction of rock and roll, for posterity's sake look beyond buying a cassette recorder. When you walk into a mastering lab to have a disc cut from a cassette, the engineers might not stop laughing long enough to consider transferring your first million-seller. Bruce Springsteen and Nebraska (which was mastered on cassette) notwithstanding, pros have little regard for miniature tape formats. (It even took the Boss some searching to get a disc made from his cassettes!)

All told, however, a modern cassette recorder is capable of sounding nearly as good as a professional open-reel machine and is a much better bargain.

The sound of the cassette recorder, rather than a list of specifications, is your best guide in buying one. The perfect cassette recorder for you is the one with the features you want that makes copies your ears cannot distinguish from the originals.

Royal Treatment Winners Unveiled!!

You didn't make it easy. Seldom have the offices of* Ampersand seen such hard thinking. The high quality and high volume of entries for our Royal Treatment Audiophile Record Contest *threw the whole crew into Concentration City.

The contest, as announced in our September '82 issue, dealt with audiophile records—those costlier versions of favorite LPs, re-mastered and placed on highest quality vinyl for the ultimate in clean sound reproduction. Contestants were to make a case for a record they believed merited such lavish re-working. Prizes were supplied by Sweet Thunder, Mobile Fidelity Sound Labs and Nautilus Recordings, three leaders in this relatively new recording field.

Nearly every entry was smart, convincing and even eloquent. But only five could win. It's a subjective universe, after all. Hats are off to everyone who gave it a try, but records go out only to the following:

FIRST PRIZE: The Beatles/The Collection from Mobile Fidelity: 13 albums on 14 discs.

Astral Weeks*, Van Morrison (Warner Brothers 1760)

Music performance, production and recording matured swiftly and amazingly in the 1960s. By 1969, progressive music was a familiar term and people began to discover the real beauty of stereo separation through the use of headphones. Astral Weeks was undoubtedly textured with this in mind (ah . . . if only Walkman addicts could hear this one . . .). This song cycle (often called one of the essential works of all time) effervesces and sparkles while repeatedly transporting the listener to warm and beautiful places.

Sadly, in comparing recent pressings to the old WB green labels of the early 1970's, one finds the final fading moments of "Madame George" fading even earlier than before and the crispness of the little glistening bells that move from left to right channels at the beginning of "Sweet Thing" mired in a sound sludge that reminds me of the guru joke wherein too many disciples are pressed from the same Master (heh-heh . . .). To make matters worse, it has been years since I have been able to purchase a copy that was completely untrammeled by surface noise and crackles. Surely any audiophile worth his or her stylus would love to get both hands on a state-of-the-art edition of this gem no matter what the cost. Clearly a Master to be mastered for the masses if ever there was one.

2-3-4-5TH PRIZES: One album of the winner's choice from Nautilus and one from Sweet Thunder.

What with prizes being equal, Ampersand's vinyl decision is to declare the rest of the winners as co-runners-up. Here they are, in alphabetical order:

Beethoven, Symphony #7 George Szell, The Cleveland Symphony Orchestra

It has been nearly 200 years since Ludwig van Beethoven discovered that music is rhythm. Although completed in 1812, the 7th was never really finished until the early 1960's when George Szell horse-whipped the Cleveland Orchestra through a performance that would scare the weak-of-heart right out of their silk slippers.

After a rather pleasant introduction, the French horns come crashing down like a clap of thunder in what must be one of the most exciting moments in recording history, and from there on the intensity never wanes. The entire orchestra plays in a manner that surpasses mere gusto; it is truly fire rediscovered.

This performance is in no way marred by the clatter of bows against the wood as the cellos dig in, or the occasional creaking chair and rustling page turn. It could, however, benefit from some careful mastering and pressing. I'm sure that Beethoven himself would approve wholeheartedly of Szell, Cleveland and the Royal Treatment.

Mozart Quintet for Clarinet and Strings (K.581) played by Benny Goodman with the Budapest String Quartet — (Victor Records DM 452)

There may be some curiosity as to the musical association of Benny Goodman's clarinet with so austere a group as the Budapest String Quartet. Goodman's fame, in the minds of the public, rests definitely in fields far removed from chamber music; but there cannot be, for anyone who listens to a few bars of this recorded performance, the slightest question of Benny's eligibility. Yet this unique recording has remained imprisoned on a set of ten- and twelve-inch 78's transcribed immediately before World War II. Set them free!

In musicianship, in the technique of his own instrument, Goodman is a virtuoso in his own right, and was warmly welcomed as peer and musical comrade (excuse the pun) by the distinguished gentlemen who constituted this quartet. It may still be true, sadly, that precious few have heard Benny Goodman grace our ears with classical strains. But these rare recordings, assembled in the same era that witnessed Goodman's triumphant and famed 1938 Carnegie Hall concert, fulfill whatever was left unsaid of Benny's gift. Blending perfectly with the precision of the Quartet, his clarinet brilliantly brings to bear the evenness of tone, potent charm, and perfect ease which only Mozart could have created. Remanded to shellac as they are, it is a prize worthy of a quest. But to be remastered would be nirvana. And who in his right mind would say no to nirvana?

Pure Pop for Now People

When Nick Lowe split with British pub-rockers Brinsley Schwarz in 1975, he signed up with Stiff Records (CBS) and rode the "new wave" from England straight into the hearts of American popsters. His first solo release, 1978's Pure Pop for Now People is an eclectic, yet cohesive blend of R&B, soul and pop, topped with a lethal dose of sarcastic wit. The record established Lowe as the "Jesus of Cool" (the actual title of the LP in England) who would lurk constantly behind the scenes of the Anglo/American depoliticized musical sensibility of the late Seventies and early Eighties.

Unfortunately, Lowe (as were many Stiff artists) was a good boy on bad vinyl. Many of the most precious bits of melodic humor aboard this gem are almost hopelessly lost amidst the snap, crackle and wrong kind of "pop."

Lowe's prolific songwriting and production on records by the likes of Costello, the Damned and most recently Paul Carrack, are continuing evidence of his underrated, unnoticed presence as popmeister supreme.

For the many who do know Lowe's work intimately, I plead for a quality repressing of Pure Pop for Now People, a record that has established itself as a catalyst of American new wave.

The Band, The Band (EMI/Capitol)

The late, lamented Robbie Robertson and Co. handcrafted musical masterpieces for the workingclass mass while Bruce Springsteen was still in musical diapers. The Band made joie de vivre an everyday emotion among the under-poverty set and gave the appellation "American music" a rural depth of emotion it had never had and will never forget. This album was their best, each song evoking pastoral images at once beautiful, sad and familiar.

The production values of The Band, perhaps by choice, are below par even for the level of technical standards at the time. This casual lack of sophistication may have enhanced the comfortably jagged feel of the original, yet I'm still waiting for Rick Danko's bass — muddy and distorted at high volumes on the album — to knock me all the way up on Cripple Creek.

GUESS WHO HIRED MORE PEOPLE RIGHT OUT OF COLLEGE LAST YEAR THAN ANYONE ELSE.

Hiring college grads is something the Army has always done. And lately, we've been doing a lot more of it.

In fact, last year alone nearly 7,000 college grads chose to begin their future as Army officers.

Why? Some wanted the opportunity to develop valuable leadership and management skills early in their career.

Others were impressed with the amount of responsibility we give our officers starting out. And still more liked the idea of serving their country around the world.

Interested? Then you can start preparing for the job right now, with Army ROTC.

ROTC is a college program that trains you to become an Army officer. By helping you develop your leadership and management ability.

Enrolling can benefit your immediate future, too. Through scholarships and other financial aid.

So the next time you're thinking about job possibilities, think about the one more recent college grads chose last year than any other.

For more information, contact the Army ROTC Professor of Military Science on your campus. Or write: Army ROTC, Dept. GH, P.O. Box 9000, Clifton, N.J. 07015.

ARMY ROTC. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

Synclavier, a musical computer put out by New England Digital.

"It's hard to describe," Metheny says of the Oncor. "It's shaped like a guitar but it doesn't have strings, it has dummy strings where the strings are usually, and you use a metal pick to hit them with your right hand. Your left hand touches some metal points on the neck and your body becomes the ground which completes the circuit and tells the computer what key the note you pushed down corresponds to on the Synclavier and puts the note out. All this happens in about five milliseconds. It's really wild, man."

If that's not enough, the Synclavier works like a recording studio, storing up to eight tracks of information, and then when you're ready, all the material is transferred to a printer which puts out parts, transposed for the various instruments, with professional copyist quality. As Metheny puts it, "All you have to do is hand out the parts to the cats and you're in business. But don't get me wrong, I'm more and more convinced there are ways to use these technological advances to make better music, which wasn't always true in the past."

Another very pleasant by-product of Metheny's association with Gary Burton was his introduction to Manfred Eicher, head of ECM. That label has been the guitarist's home base throughout his career, starting with the trio date, featuring Pastorius, Bright Size Life, and continuing through many diverse projects, up to the latest Offramp. A very lyrical work, Offramp, sold fabulously and sat atop the Billboard jazz charts for the first half of 1982.

The band's next recording will be a live album, probably in the stores by early March. The Group has been recording at several venues on its latest, back-breaking two-and-a-half month tour — from the deep South to the Pacific Northwest with Manhattan in between.

Metheny splits his off-road time, staying in Boston in a small apartment, because that's where the Group's business is conducted through Ted Kurland and Associates, or up in Woodstock, where his next-door neighbor is drummer Jack DeJohnette, with whom the guitarist recorded on 80/81 and who also was part of a special husman's holiday Metheny took early in 1982.

"Yeah," he announces proudly, "I did a tour with Sonny Rollins. He's always been one of my favorites and he had a few open dates at the same time I did, and so we booked up. It was incredible, what music. Plus I wasn't advertised, so for a minute I was back to being a sideman, which was a relief. Too, having Jack on those dates really made a difference — he's so into playing with Sonny." The guitarist feels a record will result from the spirited collaboration.

Other items moving from the back burner to the front are a series of duos with guitar great Jim Hall, and a Metheny-Mays film score for a major studio.

Author Overtakes Hollywood

BY R. SUE SMITH

S.E. HINTON is one tough cookie, the kind that's solid and a meal in itself and makes you wish your mother would just leave the plateful on the table and feed the roast to the dog. Starting in her teens, the tough 34-year-old author has spun a string of novels so strongly appealing to youth that, eventually, Hollywood couldn't afford to ignore her another minute. Almost overnight, three of Hinton's books, Tex, The Outsiders and Rumble Fish, have been transformed into starring vehicles for Matt Dillon, propelling both actor and author to a higher magnitude of fame.

Poolside at the Universal Sheraton, the Oklahoman author stands out for what would be, Hollywoodwise, all the wrong reasons. Her face shows character, not glamour, with sharp blue eyes as penetrating and memorable as her prose. Comfortable clothing covers a sturdy shape that hints at quick reflexes and muscle built by Western horsemanship.

Professionally, with three films made of her teen-reader novels (and a fourth optioned) in the past year, S.E. Hinton is on top of the world. Personally, she knows her feet are planted somewhere much closer to Tulsa than to Hollywood.

Susie Hinton's rock-steady stability is surprising from one who just participated — from scratch to finish — in the making of three major movies. Hinton didn't just wave her pen when Tex was sold to Disney, or when Francis Coppola bought rights to The Outsiders and Rumble Fish for his own production team. Warned by advisors not to expect much involvement, Hinton instead found more than she had bargained for. Like most everything else these days, the bargain was in her favor.

"Right from the beginning, I was involved with the making of the films," Hinton explains. "Tim Hunter (who directed Tex) visited, and we drove around Tulsa together, scouted locations, did casting. I gave Matt (Dillon) riding lessons on my horse, and had a small part as a typing teacher.

"I was on the set at all times. Watched the dailies. Disney flew me out to see a rough cut of Tex. I couldn't have been more involved. When we sold The Outsiders to Francis Coppola, my agent told me not to expect that kind of involvement to happen again.

"So Francis comes to town. I helped him scout locations. Pushed to see Matt play 'Dallas' (the film's tragic anti-hero), did a lot of writing for the screenplay. When the boys in the cast came to town, I was their 'Greaser Den Mother.'"

The creative trio of Hinton, Coppola and Dillon ignited the right kinds of sparks. Originally set to film only The Outsiders and leave Tulsa behind, Coppola asked Hinton if she had any other stories he could film.

"I thought about it, but didn't show him Rumble Fish," she says. "Then one day he showed up on the set with his own copy. He told me, 'We'll start the screenplay for this on Sunday, take a two-week break when we're done with The Outsiders, then do Rumble Fish.'"

Dillon slid over from his part as Dallas into the lead of Rusty James in Rumble Fish, and Hinton's credit moved from the small-type "based on a novel by" to the much weightier position of co-author with Coppola. The pace of back-to-back filming was brisk, especially for a woman who says she leads a "real quiet life" with her husband in Tulsa. "I walk my dogs (Bowser, leads a 'real quiet life' with her husband in Tulsa. "I walk my dogs (Bowser, Pug and Mop), go to Safeway, sit around and read books. I don't join anything. There I was tossed into this high pressure thing, and I just loved it."

At least in the beginning. Collaborating with a great American director and a hot young star on The Outsiders was watching the fulfillment of a creative project that began in 1964 when 15-year-old Susie sat down to write the short story that became The Outsiders. With the third film, things changed.

"Rumble Fish was getting really bizarre," Hinton recalls. "It was a night shoot, working 20-hour days. I never saw daylight. Started to feel like a vampire. It was like having left the planet, you didn't know what was going on in the world, didn't know anything except the damn movie.

"I'm basically a novelist, and also extremely lazy. While I was on the set with Francis, he'd want a new scene to make a point and four minutes later I'd have it done. I didn't know I could write that fast."

Hinton received noon calls in Tulsa, asking her to hop a jet to Los Angeles two hours later, only to end up from there on a second flight to Coppola's Napa Valley home where they'd work, work, work.

"I'd say, 'Francis, I can't go on, I'm tired, I can't do it,' and he'd pour me another glass of wine, put on loud rock music, and just get me going." Once, Hinton says, Coppola admired some drumwork he heard and demanded that the drummer be found. "And the next week, there's Stuart Copeland of the Police in Tulsa, drumming for Francis."

This high life, however, has not necessarily gone to Hinton's head. "I keep telling myself I can get back to normal life," she says, and there's not a flicker of doubt in her blue eyes.

Hinton's novels have not only changed the concept of what teen-geared books should be, but have also changed their readers. Her hard hitting, realistic stories of contemporary people — who happen to be teenagers — have sold millions worldwide, with translations into seven languages.

"The kids who never read books, read my books," she says with a smile, telling of letters from reformatories as well as from more typical junior high and high school students. "I get letters saying 'This is the first book I ever read all the way through,' and that means a lot to me.

"I've never been someone who thought, well, I'll write this and then it'll be a movie. The Outsiders meant so much to so many kids, that I didn't want to see it messed up, so I turned down a lot of offers before this came along."

What convinced her that the time was right was viewing The Black Stallion, made by Coppola's Zoetrope studio. "I told my husband that that's the way I'd want it if it had been my book.

"Disney called the next week to make an offer on Tex, and I said no. I didn't want Tex Meets the Love Bug, but then we talked more and I got a better sense of the plans.

"I'm pretty tough, but I'm naive. I know I've wandered through this minefield around here, and I'm really stupid about business. I do it because I like someone, not because I could give a list of ten good business reasons why. That's worked for me before in my life, and I don't want to have to deal with it in any other way."

Given the state of things, Susie Hinton won't have to compromise. She's working on a fifth novel, which she aspires to make "unfilmable." She won't tell the title or the plot,"but does say that it will be about people, not issues.

"To me, a character is everything. I don't think I've got a message. I'm not a teacher, a professor, or a preacher. If I have a message, it's that ultimately you have to take responsibility for your own actions."

This may be the Tough Cookie Ethic, and Hinton's reaction to editors shows how the code of honor works.

"I write for myself, and I figure if I don't like it, nobody else will, either. But you have to be objective, and you have to get someone else's opinion, too. Give in on the small points, but fight for the big things. If it's something you can live with, why not make someone else happy? They'll remember it later when you won't give in on something else."

Hot debate continues over admissions criteria

By KEVIN BOWE
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — The educational community in Massachusetts appears deeply split over the specific criteria which should be used in creating a minimum admission standard for the state's four year public colleges and universities.

There is little disagreement however, that some kind of standard must be set and the state's high schools must improve their curriculum, based on a five-hour hearing the Board of Regents held on the matter.

The Board of Regents has proposed a minimum combined Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) score of 800 and a high school rank in the upper 40th percent or a combined 850 SAT score and a class rank in the top 60 percent. Students would also be required to have four years of high school English, three years of math, two years each of a natural science, a social science and a foreign language.

The plan allows for a certain exemption to be set by the individual schools for students who don't meet the requirements. These students will fall into three categories, older students, "educationally disadvantaged" students and students with "special talents". The requirements are to be phased in over a four year period.

These factors, SAT score, class rank and the type of subjects taken, are the most widely used criteria for accepting students to a four year institution, according to a College Board survey, said John Duff, Chancellor of Higher Education.

"We've heard a great deal of misinformation. This proposal looks to achieve the twin goals of access and quality," Duff said.

Regents, and others, especially endorsed the need to improve the high school curriculum.

"One of the best aspects of the plan is the trickle down effect (to the primary and secondary schools)," said Regent Francis Nicholson. Members of the Boston delegation to the Massachusetts Legislature and other city politicians voiced opposition to the plan.

"No one is against the concept of admission standards," said Rep. Thomas Valley, D-Boston.

"We want some trickle up. Let's make sure our lower schools give the students the skills first. The gap between where we are and where you want us in four years is too wide to meet. We need more time," Valley said.

"I want you to look at me," Boston School Committee member John O'Bryant said.

"Because if those standards were in place when I got out of high school, I would not have been able to attend a public college," O'Bryant, who is Vice President for Student Affairs at Northeastern University, said.

Concern was expressed that the special exemption for minority students would "stigmatize" them into believing a college education was out of their abilities.

"You are sending a signal to thousands of people — that we don't want you. And all the flexibilities in the world will not have those people applying for college," O'Bryant said.

University of Massachusetts President David C. Knapp opposed the use of minimum SAT scores and a weighted class rank as criteria but said "the University strongly supports (admission standards) . . . as a crucial way to improve the quality of public education at all levels in the Commonwealth."

The Regents Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs, Roger Schiness, emphasized that the proposed admission plan "will be improved in the future."

"People are taking the two objective criteria (SATs and class rank) to be inelastic. If this were true, their concerns would be justified," Schiness said later.

The Regents will be discussing the admission standards at a two-day conference at UMass next week. Noted educator Clark Kerr is expected to address the Regents during this period.

UMass may repair buildings if Dukakis' jobs bill passes

By KEN BAZINET
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts may receive $750,000 for building repairs if an "Emergency Jobs Bill" prepared and filed Monday by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis wins the approval of the state legislature.

Dukakis' proposal would have $92 million in state funds allocated to a variety of projects which could create more than 2700 construction jobs for unemployed Massachusetts laborers, according to Sarah Parsons, a Dukakis press secretary.

Should the Dukakis proposal get the approval of the House and Senate, the state Division of Capital Planning and Outlay will determine which UMass buildings are to receive maintenance.

John L. DeNyse, acting vice chancellor for administration and finance, Monday told the Springfield Morning Union he would prefer the monies to go toward renovating some of the campus' severely deteriorated academic buildings. While the UMass administration is pleased with the possibility of receiving unscheduled funds, the $750,000 figure is well below the estimated $32 million needed for a complete renovation of the campus' academic buildings.

Other schools which are in line for funding are Springfield Technical Community College ($1.2 million for building repairs) and Bristol Community College ($5.1 million for a new business/technology building).

The emergency jobs legislation is a strategic repackaging of pending state projects by the Dukakis administration. Many of the proposed projects were a part of the capital outlay budget which the legislature failed to approve in late December.

Dukakis has included projects which are located in the House and Senate leaders' districts. Among those are a $10 million housing project in Senate President William M. Bulger's district and a portion of $8.7 million for urban heritage parks for Lynn, Speaker Thomas W. McGee's district.

The Boston Globe last week reported that Bulger predicts a speedy passage for the Dukakis bill, but also reported that McGee may be reluctant to support the bill due to the firing of Louis Nickinello from his Massachusetts Port Authority (MassPort) director's job. McGee was a leading supporter of Nickinello for the MassPort job. But, Dukakis may have captured the Speaker's support following a report that Nickinello is in line for another position in the Dukakis administration.

SAT minimum requirement labeled racist, discriminatory

By KEVIN BOWE
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — The proposed use of the Scholastic Aptitude Test as criteria for admission to four year public colleges and universities has been labeled as racist and discriminatory by prominent members from the Third World community in Massachusetts.

Most of the five hours of testimony at a Board of Regents hearing yesterday was dominated with criticisms of the SAT's by Third World educators, politicians and community leaders.

"These tests imperfectly measure verbal and mathematical aptitude and are not measures of achievement. There predictability is limited to that of first year performance and...that 70 percent of the first year performance in a college or university is due to factors other than aptitude," said Harvard University Professor Charles V. Willie, a noted expert on educational issues.

"First year performance is not an appropriate basis on which to predict second, third, and fourth year performance of minority students who sometimes do less well the first year and better the fourth year than majority students," he said.

In 1977 the University of California proposed a new admissions standard that increasingly relied on SAT's. A study conducted by the university revealed that eight to 10 percent of hispanic and black students, but only two percent of the white students would have been eliminated, Willie said.

Black political leaders charged that the 15 member Board of Regents, which has no minority members and one woman, cannot represent the concerns of the Third World community.

"I don't feel an all white male board can do my bidding for the future of my children," said state Rep. Sandra Graham, D-Roxbury.

"You...(don't) have my best interests in mind," she said.

The two black members of the Boston School Committee, John O'Bryant and Jean McGuire, said the Regents use of SAT's is an example of institutional racism.

"You're (the Regents) part of a system that perpetuates this system (racism). What you are about to do is to set up a lot of roadblocks for thousands of students," O'Bryant said.

"You don't know who we are and your books do not reflect our past," McGuire said.

Chancellor John Duff said the goal of the Regents is to increase minority access. He said ample exemptions would be made for minority students and all colleges and universities will be required to submit to the Regents a detailed affirmative action recruitment plan.

Truck strike brings violent outbursts

Snipers ambushed dozens of trucks with gunfire and rocks yesterday as violence spread in a nationwide strike by independent truckers that has left one driver dead and 11 people injured, two seriously.

Police were investigating reports of attacks on at least 50 rigs in 22 states, including the slaying Monday night of a trucker who was shot in the neck while driving through North Carolina and the serious wounding of another trucker in Utah earlier in the day. A teenager in Pennsylvania suffered a fractured skull when a brick bounced off a truck into the family car.

The dead driver was a member of the Teamster Union, which opposes the strike.

In the second day of the strike called at 12:01 a.m. Monday by the Independent Truckers Association, some more local truckers organizations joined the shutdown, notably in Ohio and Massachusetts, to protest scheduled increases in the gasoline tax and highway use fees.

No shortages of goods were reported in the nation's markets. In Washington, Department of Transportation officials said that while fewer truckers appeared to be running at night, there did not appear to be a "serious disruption" of interstate commerce.

In Chicago, Teamsters Union President Roy Lee Williams, who was recently convicted of bribery-conspiracy charges, called on federal and state governments to "provide protection for drivers and the motoring public."

George Franklin Capps, 33, of Clayton, N.C., was killed by a sniper about 11:30 p.m. Monday on U.S. 701 just outside Newton Grove, N.C. Six other trucks were hit by gunfire in the state yesterday morning, and two truckers were injured.

Mike Parkhurst, president of the Independent Truckers Association, estimated Monday that as many as 70,000 of the nation's 100,000 independent owner-operators had parked their rigs. Government officials said it was probably more like 20,000.

No-first-use policy for nukes advocated

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former defense leaders of the United States, Great Britain and West Germany called yesterday for the Western Alliance to build up conventional forces and then renounce the first use of nuclear weapons.

They argued that a $100 billion strengthening of non-nuclear power in Europe over six years would keep the Soviets from launching an attack, and thus allow a U.S. president to make the no-first-use pledge.

The idea, endorsed by 41 American winners of the Nobel Prize, was rejected immediately by the Reagan administration.

Alan Romberg, spokesman at the State Department, said the administration doubts that a simple pledge would restrain the Soviet bloc during times of crisis.

"Indeed, we believe that a nuclear no-first-strike pledge would undermine deterrence and increase the risk of Soviet conventional aggression against our European allies," Romberg said.

The Soviets have made such pledges for 25 years, but the United States has refused, contending that the threat of nuclear retaliation is necessary to stave off a Soviet thrust across Europe too powerful for conventional forces.

The former defense leaders said unless the superpowers jointly foreswear first use of nuclear weapons, nuclear war ultimately is likely.

Their statement was based on an eight-month study sponsored by the Union of Concerned Scientists, a non-profit group which often undertakes research into military issues.

"It is inconceivable that we can deal with the Soviets for a long period without confrontations and crises," said retired Vice Adm. John Marshall Lee, who served in NATO, the United Nations, the Pentagon and the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency during a 38- year military career. He directed the study.

Book ban ends after seven year legal battle

ISLAND TREES, N.Y. — After a seven-year legal battle over book banning, the Island Trees Board of Education has decided to allow students unrestricted access to nine books once barred from its libraries.

The board voted 4-3 last Wednesday to drop all restrictions on the books, which were denounced by the board in 1976 as "anti-Semitic, anti-American, anti-Christian and just plain filthy." The books included Bernard Malamud's "The Fixer," winner of the 1967 Pulitzer Prize, Desmond Morris' "The Naked Ape," and works by black and Hispanic writers.

The books were put back on library shelves after the U.S. Supreme Court agreed to hear the case.

Salvadoran troops try to quell rebel forces

BERLIN, El Salvador — About 1,500 government troops were reported advancing yesterday to try to roll back the biggest rebel victory so far in the 39-month-old civil war.

About 500 guerrillas of the leftist Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front took over Berlin, an agricultural center of 30,000 people in southeast El Salvador, Monday evening after rebel snipers prevented reinforcements reaching less than 100 national guardsmen, national police and local militiamen defending the town.

Forty civilians were reported killed by air force bombing runs and rebel bazooka and mortar attacks. Seven square blocks including the town market were burned to the ground, and many other buildings were set afire.

The government force made its last stand Monday afternoon in the national police headquarters in the center of the town. After those inside rejected repeated calls to surrender, the rebels fired a barrage of bazookas and rocket-propelled grenades that set the building on fire.

Berlin, 70 miles east of San Salvador, is the biggest town taken by the rebels, but the local commander indicated they might not try to hold it.

"It will be the decision of the FMLN Command whether we stay in Berlin," Ernesto Martinez told a rally of some 1,500 people Tuesday morning.

Andropov rejects ban on nuclear missiles

MOSCOW — Yuri V. Andropov yesterday rejected President Reagan's proposal for a summit meeting to sign a ban on medium-range nuclear missiles, calling the offer "patently unacceptable" to the Soviet Union.

Replying one day after Reagan made the proposal in an "open letter to the people of Europe," Andropov said he would never agree to a plan that he claimed would disarm the Soviet Union while permitting the United States and its NATO allies "to retain all their nuclear weapons of this category."

"First of all, I must say quite definitely that there is nothing new in president R. Reagan's proposal. What it is all about ... is the same 'zero option.' That it is patently unacceptable to the Soviet Union now is already recognized," Andropov declared in an interview distributed by the official news agency Tass.

Actor Redford opposes development of farm

CANTON — Actor Robert Redford has joined a citizens' fight to prevent the site of the historic Prowse Farm from being developed as an industrial park.

"If we don't have places where we can go to reflect on and celebrate the human spirit, then we will have none," said Redford in a letter released Monday by the citizens' group.

Tax surcharge wanted in plan to curb deficit

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration has settled on a 5 percent surcharge on personal and corporate income taxes as part of a standby tax package proposed in the president's new budget, Treasury officials said yesterday.

The officials, who spoke only on condition that their names not be used, said the administration has rejected an alternative plan for a 1 percent surcharge on taxable income because it would impose an unfair burden on lower-income taxpayers.

The 5 percent surcharge, together with an oil excise tax equal to $5 per barrel of domestic and imported crude, would take effect from fiscal 1986 through fiscal 1988 only if needed to keep future deficits from exceeding $150 billion a year.

President Reagan has said he personally does not think the taxes will be needed, but is supporting them as an insurance policy against high deficits that could block a healthy economic recovery.

Groundhog holds key to the end of winter

PUNXSUTAWNEY, Pa. — As Groundhog Day dawns Wednesday, Punxsutawney's famed woodchuck will be lifted from his electrically heated burrow on Gobbler's Knob to predict, most likely, six more weeks of winter.

Never mind that his prediction is secretly decided well in advance and that the animal, who would rather be sleeping, is borrowed from the town zoo for the few hours of prediction-making and picture taking.

Public hearing scheduled on cable company's decision to eliminate three channels

By NANCY GONTER
Collegian Staff

A public hearing to air complaints about Pioneer Valley Cablevision's decision to drop three channels without a rebate has been scheduled by the Amherst Board of Selectmen for Feb. 15.

The three channels were dropped without warning because of a mid-November ruling by the Federal Copyright Royalty Tribunal. The ruling would increase copyright fees paid for distant signal broadcast stations.

The Selectmen have asked Pioneer Valley to give its subscribers a rebate for dropped channels, which are not scheduled for replacement until March 15. The Amherst Cablevision Committee suggested that the Selectmen take the company to court if it fails to pay rebates.

The hearing will also allow subscribers to review the cable company's proposal to bring in three substitute channels, if the company has made a decision on replacements by the specified date.

August LaVelli, general manager of the station said he "presumes" such a presentation will be ready. LaVelli and Richard Young, the regional Vice-President of the Times-Mirror Cable Television, which owns Pioneer Valley, will represent the company at that meeting.

The Board also received official notification Monday that the company will increase its basic monthly charge from $6.50 to $7.25 on March 1.

In a memo to the Board, LaVelli said that the rate increase was necessary because there had been no rate hike since May of 1981. Since then the company has rebuilt its cable system and added new services.

Under the license contract that Pioneer holds with the Selectmen, the company can raise its rates without consultation or approval of the Board.

Student Senators to discuss allocation of SATF funds and revision of constitution

By MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate has scheduled its first meeting of the semester tonight, but no major issues are on the agenda, according to Student Government Association (SGA) officials.

The senate will consider the actions of its coordinating committee, which considers urgent senate business during intersession. Technically, the senate must approve all of the committee's actions.

During intersession, the coordinating committee approved the purchase of two button-making machines and supplies at a cost of $1530. The machine is expected to pay for itself through button sales, according to finance committee chair Siobhan Powers.

The committee also allocated $192 to send senate speaker Sharon Davies and State Student Association organizer Michael Ferrigno to meet with United States Student Association officials in Washington, D.C. in January.

Three students — including SGA President Jim Murphy — will attend the Conference of Student Government Associations at Texas A & M University on Feb. 5 to Feb. 8, following an allocation of $804 by the Coordinating Committee.

A potential deficit of $5,000 by the Commuter Area Government was averted when the Coordinating Committee agreed to grant that amount to cover the Commuters' funding commitment for University Child Care.

In addition, the senate will consider motions to replace two chapters in the SGA Constitution dealing with the Arts Council and the Residential Committee, according to Governmental Affairs Committee Chair Tom Ahern.

Ahern said a chapter concerning an alcohol policy will be removed if the senate approves a motion to that effect. Ahern said the chapter "seemingly serves little purpose." The motions to change the constitution will be presented tonight but cannot be voted upon until next week.

Ahern also said he will ask the senate to allow Mindy Ordway to run the SGA spring elections, which will be held March 7-8. Ordway ran the elections last year when Jim Murphy, then chair of the Governmental Affairs Committee, ran for president.

Nomination papers for the offices of SGA President, Campus Center Board of Governors, and Residential Committee will be available next Tuesday and are due February 22.

UVC to add television outlets and develop a message center

By RAY BEAUCHEMIN
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts groups that wish to send messages to their members will have their work load eased beginning this week when the Union Video Center (UVC) adds new television outlets and develops a message center.

"The message center of the UVC is the information component of the existing cable system;" said Denis Martin, production coordinator for UVC.

Two new outlets have been added to the already existing cable system, one at the bottom of the escalator in the Campus Center and the second on the wall near the Blue Wall in the Campus Center concourse.

"The bulk of messages this week will concern registration information, Add/Drop dates, registration dates. After this week, the message center will focus on announcing student events, RSO groups meetings, just about everything on campus," said Martin.

"The message center is open to all campus groups, free of charge. The only requirement is that groups fill out the appropriate forms," Martin said.

Forms can be picked up and returned at the UVC office.

UVC operates two other outlets in the Campus Center: one near the Hatch and the other by the Student Union Ballroom.

The messages will run 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. on the two new outlets while regular programming, including a live newscast which will begin Monday at noon, will be presented on the other two cable televisions.

After two p.m., all four outlets will air messages.

Women's day organizers face lack of personnel and funds

By CRIS SCHUSTER
Collegian Staff

Lack of people and money are a few of the stumbling blocks organizers of a two-day event at the University of Massachusetts celebrating International Women's Day are trying to overcome.

The event, scheduled for March 7 and 8, will have the theme of "Women and Work." Films, workshops, lectures and tables on the Campus Center concourse will be presented.

The annual event is held "to let people know March 8 is International Women's Day," said Jane Zbyszynski, a member of the Women's Issues team involved in the planning of the events. "But things haven't been finalized yet."

Eileen Stewart, member of the Mediation Project, said a "time lag in communication" has been responsible for problems organizers are experiencing. Different groups on campus have been contacted for help and contributions, she said. However, Intersession slowed the planning down.

A film series, which will be shown on March 7, will "address the concerns of women from different ethnic groups and cross-cultural perspectives," she said.

"The Campus Center concourse will be devoted to women's things. We are inviting any group who wants to speak on a specific issue concerning women," she said. "We are actively seeking groups who have something to say."

Stewart said she expects more women from campus will attend the event than off-campus women, but everyone is invited.

Anyone interested in organizing the two-day event should attend a planning meeting tomorrow at 7 p.m. in Campus Center room 802.

Help is now available for student alcoholics

Student Opportunity Program, (STOP), is a new Alcohol Education Program offered this semester by the University Health Services. The goal of the program is to assist students whose alcohol related behavior is causing problems.

STOP consists of five group sessions which are held at the Health Center. Participants will learn about alcohol, explore their own drinking problems, and formulate individual plans to make desired changes in their drinking patterns.

Participation in STOP is voluntary and confidential. Interested students may call Carlene Riccelli, Coordinator of the Alcohol Education Program at 549-2671.

CASIAC credit for signing?

(Editor's Note: The following column was originally addressed to a CASIAC academic dean, and was forwarded to the Collegian by the author. We feel that this column addresses a critical flaw in CASIAC's implementation of the foreign language requirement.

I am writing in reference to the CASIAC language requirement. I am a Psychology major at UMass and have fulfilled all of my requirements except my language requirement. The reason for this is the fact that when I transfered into the Psychology department I was advised that Psychology majors were not required to take a foreign language. I certainly would not have put this off, had I known, however I have had an ongoing concern with this requirement since I was informed of it. I do not wish to complete my foreign language requirement as it is stated. I wish to take an intermediate sign language course (ASL), which is a foreign language by definition as well as by course description in the UMass catalog. I realize that this is not acceptable as a foreign language, however I strongly disagree with this policy. I feel that ASL is an extremely important language and its acquisition by non-handicapped members of society has been neglected for too long.

The University's concern with teaching its students to communicate with and to learn about the cultures of foreigners and not handicapped people is an act of discrimination against the handicapped population. If one looks into the problems of deaf students at UMass alone, it is clear that the lack of sign language amongst the non-handicapped student body is a major cause of segregation of handicapped students on campus. Common beliefs that ASL is not as difficult to learn as other foreign languages and that handicapped people do not have any culture is simply not true. These were the reasons that my advisor gave me for not accepting ASL as a foreign language. ASL is not only a symbolic representation of spoken language, it is a language in itself. It has its own grammatical rules and structures as any other foreign language does. Courses in ASL also examine the culture and history of the handicapped population. One in ten people born in this world are born handicapped. Such a great number certainly deserves attention as a population.

I am presently employed as a Residential Manager for three community residences for handicapped persons. For the past ten years and for the rest of my life, I plan to devote my efforts to the education of these people. Throughout my years in the field I have always been frustrated with the influx of fellow workers that were not familiar with sign language and needed to be trained to communicate with their clients/students. Now I am in a position that requires hiring of staff to work with handicapped people as well as training these staff members once they have been hired. I am extremely disturbed with the number of college graduates that apply for jobs in human services that have no familiarity with sign language. Most of these people have degrees in Psychology and yet they cannot communicate with the population with which they choose to work. Because communication is the most important aspect of working with people I have found it difficult to find qualified people to work with my clients.

Sign language (all dialects, including ASL) can be understood by signers all over the world. Knowing sign can make learning about other societies easier by being able to communicate with people of all countries who know sign language. I don't disagree that a language such as Spanish can be very valuable in human services. All I am requesting is that when you come across a student like myself and many others who plan to work with the non-verbal populations, you give them the opportunity to pursue studies in the foreign language most applicable to their perspective field.

Defense cuts misleading?

In the wake of worsening reports of record-breaking deficits for the coming fiscal years, the administration is now contemplating what was once deemed impossible...cutting the defense budget. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger says he will reduce his fiscal 1984 budget request by 11.3 million dollars. It looks like a grand compromise, until you take a closer look at what is actually being cut.

The original request for the coming fiscal year was $273 billion. The $11 billion that is being cut is mostly coming from a freeze in pay raises for the military, cutting back on money for training, putting off new military construction projects, and reduced assumptions about inflation and fuel costs. The measures seem good in themselves, but the real meat of the defense budget, the billions of dollars being spent on new weapons systems, most especially strategic nuclear weapons is being left untouched. No money is scheduled to be cut for new weapons like the MX missile and the B-1 bomber, though the actual money to be outlayed for these and other new weapons is going to be deferred, so that the cost can be spread out over a long period of time. This will save money in the short-term, but in the long run will only serve to run up the already exorbitant costs of these weapons even higher.

Under the guise of an imagined Soviet Threat, the US is going ahead of the largest peacetime buildup of its military in its history. The cost is expected to be $1.8 trillion over the next five years. If the Reagan Administration goes ahead with this increase at its present rate, the result will be an astronomical deficit that this nation can not afford to have.

The things that Caspar Weinberger are cutting are some of the more important parts of the defense budget. The Armed Services have more than fulfilled their recruiting quotas, thanks to the highest unemployment rates since the Depression. In order to keep qualified people in our military, pay has to remain competitive with civilian industry. The payraises the military received in 1981 helped to rectify the problem of low pay in the military, but the people in the armed forces should not have to bear the brunt of the cuts, not when there are more blatant areas of waste in the defense budget. Nor should construction be overlooked. There are a lot of soldiers who are living in barracks that were built in World War II just for the duration, but ended up still housing soldiers forty years later. They have gotten about as much use as they could out of these buildings, now these constitute a hazard to the troops who have to live in them. Money for training should not be overlooked either. In order to maintain a minimum amount of readiness, training exercises need to be held. The military is just getting by now in this department, to slash this further would hamper the armed services capacity of readiness.

They used to call Weinberger "Cap the Knife" when he worked for them — Governor Reagan in California, for his ability to cut government spending. Since he became Secretary of Defense, he has lost his cutting edge, instead becoming "Cap the Ladle" for all the money being poured into the Pentagon. Even with the modest cuts he is proposing, fiscal '84's defense budget will be the largest peacetime budget in our history. With record deficits looming on the horizon, we have to take a hard look at the proposed defense buildup and ask ourselves if we really can afford it. More can and should be cut from the Pentagon's budget, and it can be done without compromising our nation's security. If the B-1 and the MX are scrapped, the government would save an immediate $60 billion, and that is only the tip of the iceberg.

Can we afford to spend $1.8 trillion for defense? Not right now, not in this recession. It is time that we got our priorities straight.

Letters

SGA is not Student Senate

To the Editor:

The content of several of the letters to the editor I have read have shown a certain amount of ignorance concerning the nature of the Student Government Association (SGA). Frequently, the Student Senate is confused with the SGA and I would like to identify and explain the difference between the two organizations. The SGA consists of every currently registered undergraduate student, including Continuing Education students, who has paid the Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF) fee.

The Student Senate, which meets every Wednesday evening at 7 p.m. while school is in regular session, is comprised of members of the SGA who have been elected by their constituents or who have been appointed by the appropriate body to represent a constituency. The senate contains a Third World Caucus and a Women's Caucus so that the special needs and interests of these groups may be dealt with more effectively.

Each spring, a campus-wide election is held to elect the President of the SGA. Within a few weeks of this election, the Student Senate elects a new Treasurer and a new Speaker of the Senate. These officers make many important decisions which can range from allocating money for a rally to endorsing a political candidate to inviting a famous speaker to this campus. Although only officers and senators may vote on an issue, anyone may speak, and every student is urged to become active participants in the many important functions of the SGA.

Fall out from "After The Fall"

To the Editor:

In response to R. Miller's "comic strip," After the Fall, I would like to express my utmost anger. The University of Massachusetts is a venerated institution of higher education for many men and women throughout the world. If you feel you are "above" the other 25,000 students who attend this school, then I suggest you try your hardest to find a university that will meet your credentials. Unfortunately, it is pitiful souls like yourself who perpetuate the "ZooMass" image and unjustly slander this University for the many others who attend.

Scott Slarsky

[R. Miller replies: "The author of the above letter has obviously mistaken me for a character in my strip. Actually, my hair is much shorter."]

Assistant Chancellor hopes to improve communications

By JIM FINKLE
Collegian Staff

Assistant Chancellor Deirdre A. Ling hopes her recent appointment to the College Board will aid the University of Massachusetts in improving communications with the state's secondary schools, she said in an interview yesterday.

Ling was elected to the 25-member board of directors of the College Board last month. The board oversees the activities of an association of more than 2,500 secondary schools, colleges, universities, education systems and associations.

As a member of the board, Ling will serve on the Council on Academic Affairs. She said she is looking forward to serving on that council because one of their major efforts, Project Equality, is working to establish a forum for dialog between higher education institutions and secondary schools in every state.

UMass President David C. Knapp had announced plans to establish strong communications between UMass and the state's secondary schools to improve the quality of UMass students.

"This is timely and helpful because we are looking into that issue in our state," Ling said of her appointment. "I can be useful to our University and the College Board."

"By being a member I am able to filter ideas (about improving communications with secondary schools) baek to the campus," Ling said. She said the "two-way communication" will serve to improve both the work of President Knapp and Project Equality.

The UMass School of Education has already begun an outreach program in the Boston public schools in which 10 UMass faculty members spend one day each week working in Boston schools.

Ling has served as director of freshman admissions, director of admissions, dean of academic support services, and acting assistant chancellor at UMass. She was named assistant chancellor in October.

She has been a member of the college board since 1978 when she came to UMass. She is also a member of the American Association of Collegiate Registrars and Admissions Officers.

Welcome back! In this weekly column, I will give you a preview of UMass, Five-College area and Springfield theatre productions, workshops and special programs.

You don't have to be a "Big Spender" to have a good time. This weekend and next, The Amherst Masquers will present Joe Masteroff's Cabaret, a bitter evocation of life in Berlin just before the Nazi takeover. This story is about an English nightclub singer and her doomed romance with an American writer. Tickets are $2.50 for the general public and $1.50 for senior citizens. The Kirby Theatre curtain rises at 8 p.m. Friday, Saturday and Sunday. For reservations call 542-2277.

Mark your calendars. A week from tomorrow from 9 p.m.-12 a.m., there will be a Comedy Hour in the Hampden Snack Bar featuring local and Boston comedians. For further information call 545-2803 or 545-0239.

Won't you be mime? Plan to be in line February 11, if you're a Marcel Marceau fan. Marceau will perform at the FAC at 8 p.m.

Shades of Broadway will be presented by the Shades of Expression Performing Co. tomorrow, Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m. in Chapin Auditorium, Mt. Holyoke College.

Suzanne Baxtresser, who recently starred in the Present Stage production of Calamity Jane, will be teaching a 10 week workshop in Beginning Acting in Northampton. According to the course description, "The class will explore the ways an actor uses the body and voice to discover emotional sources and impulses which can reveal the many different characters that are inside us all." For more information call 586-5886.

If you're willing to travel, The Belle of Amherst based on the life of Emily Dickenson will be performed at Stage West in Hartford through Saturday. For curtain times call 1-781-2340.

Michele Beasley and Jim Lamb star in theAmherst Masquers production of CABARET performed at 8 p.m. on February 4, 5, 6, 9, 10, 11, 12.

Flatter Tummies flatters dummies

By LISA MOSLEY
Collegian Staff

If you're like most of us, you probably spent a few too many nights at the Blue Wall last semester chugging frosty drafts. Well, if all those brewskies have caused a noticeable thickening of your midsection, take heart. Nancy Burstein and Roy Mathews, the fitness folks at Bantam Books are going to cure your case of the tummy tubbies forever with 30 Days To a Flatter Stomach (separate editions for men and women, natch).

These new body-beautiful guides will probably revolutionize exercise as we have come to know it, with such never before heard of waist whittlers as "stationary jogging" and "the sit up." (I'm not going to explain these new exercises in detail; far be it from me to diminish sales of these fabulous books by reprinting the techniques here.) Why, each book even contains a section devoted exclusively to exercises for two, because as Burstein tells us, "There's nothing like exercising with your number-one man to keep you committed to your program." And if the perfectly coiffed, heavily made-up model in the illustrations is any indication, these tummy-toners are so effortless you won't even risk sweating all over your expensive designer aerobic dance-wear.

These handy books not only illustrate the latest in exercise techniques, but also reveal shape-up secrets like "If you have not exercised recently, you may feel some soreness after...workouts" and offer invaluable tips like "Don't forget to breathe while exercising." The guides are even specifically gender-tailored! Men, for instance, are advised to exercise in an area that offers them privacy (C'mon guys, do you really want to be seen doing tushie lifts?) while women are encouraged to decorate their exercise areas with pictures of their favorite fashion models for inspiration.

If this isn't enough to convince you that these books will help bring out that slimmer trimmer you, wait until you see the miracle diets included in the fat fighters' bibles. The "Love Handles Diet" (for men) and the "Waist-Away Diet" (for women) offer such unusual Lo-Cal fare as low-fat cottage cheese, lettuce and tomato salad, and grapefruit.

After reading these two paperbacks I got so motivated and excited that I've decided to start my shape up program right away. There's only one problem: my copy didn't come with any order forms for handsome muscular men. How am I ever supposed to do the his & her exercises...

NOVEMBER GROUP
(Modern Method)
November Group

By DOUGLAS MUISE
Collegian Staff

November Group is currently being touted by a number of critics as "the next big band from Boston." And although praise of such magnitude seems to crop up with recurrent regularity for many bands on the Boston club circuit, precious few are the groups that actually make good on such claims.

But, frankly I think November Group (its name from the 1918 Brecht-Weill art collective) is going to constitute an exception. The ensemble — Ann Prim (vocals, guitars), Kearney Kirby (synthesizer, vocals), Alvan Long (percussion), and Don Foote (bass) — is definitely just about the most thrilling bunch to hit the pavement of Bean Town in quite a while.

Based on what is etched upon their recently released EP (well, maybe not recently), the band has got as good a shot as any at the big-time — if not on Billboard, then at least the new music charts.

Kirby's synthesizer musings preside over the November Group sound along with Prim's curt, neo-Alavic vocal stylings to fashion a techno-dance minimalism that raves infection. This stuff you can really move to!

Featured on the EP is a remix of the underground hit, "We Dance," released as a single in late '81. The single's fuzzy, synthetic bleeps have been hammered down this time around to a more tensely tethered, imminently engineered primal electronic rhythm (it's amazing what a good production can do.) The vocals here have been highlighted as well — they're right up front now and much more direct. Lyrics such as "One body/One mind/One thought," when coupled with others such as "A picture of life, young hearts of grandeur/ We dance" elevates the song's thrust above its initial sex act metaphor to the level of some bizzare socialist anthem.

"Pictures of the Homeland" continues along the same line, as Prim's accentuated Czech histionics — "Peak-chores ov ze 'omeland" — segue in nicely with the song's brisk synthesizer bounds. By herself, Ann Prim seems quite the creature. Her hairstyle a variation of the Hitler-across-the-eye swathe. I can imagine Prim's wardrobe to be an odd collection of Prussian army-issue, collar-less shirts and androgynous wool trousers. Socialist chic.

Julian Olevsky, Estela Olevsky, and Leopold Teraspuslky are featured in the American Music Festival.

American Music Festival, a series of three major concerts of twentieth century American music, has been undertaken by the University of Massachusetts. The first concert in the series will take place on Thursday, February 3, at 8:00 p.m. at Bezanson Recital Hall in the Fine Arts Center.

On the program are six noted composers and works: Aaron Copland's "Danzon Cubano," Alvin Etler's Quintet No. 1 for Wind, Charles Ives' Piano Trio, "Holland Waltzes" by Boston's Daniel Pinkham, Virgin Thomson's Synthetic Waltzes, plus songs by Northampton composer John Duke.

Artists are drawn primarily from the music faculty at the university. They include Nigel Coxe, piano; Jon Humphrey, tenor; Laura Klock, horn; Charles Lehrer, oboe; Frank Morelli, bassoon; Estela Olevsky, piano; Julian Olevsky, violin; Nadine Shank, piano; Joanne Tanner, flute; and Leopold Teraspuslky, cello. Guest artist is Michael Sussman, clarinet, from Smith College.

American Music Festival will continue on Tuesday, March 8, with a chamber jazz program and on Tuesday, April 12 with the final chamber music program. All three concerts are free of charge.

Women's ski team is tops in New England field

By MATT LUCZCOW
Collegian Correspondent

FRANCONIA, N.H. The University of Massachusetts Women's Ski Team have won their first four races of the season in the Women's Inter-Collegiate Ski Conference.

At Cannon Mountain the weekend of Jan. 22-23, the women captured both the slalom race on Saturday and the giant slalom on Sunday.

Finishing in the top 10 (out of 60 women racers) for the Minutewomen on Saturday were Sue White, who took 4th place in 107.17 and co-captain Theresa Collins, who took 6th with a 109.10. Also finishing for UMass were co-captain Kim Loftus (12th) and Lisa Luczkow (15th).

The women's combined time of 338.54 seconds (best 3 out of 5) put them well ahead of second place Plymouth State College (352.29), and third place Boston College (354.62). Individually, Laurie Hourahan from BC won the race, Sue Shumway from Brown Univ. took 2nd and Julie Canaday from Smith College placed third.

On the World Cup slope at Waterville Valley this past weekend, under perfect racing conditions, the women skiers took both races to stay on top of the WISC league.

In the slalom, UMass kept their big margin over Plymouth State, BC and the other colleges with a team time of 343.50. Second place was Plymouth with a 361.25, while BC was clocked at 361.87 for third place.

Sue White won the race for UMass, while Theresa Collins, Leslie Dale and Diana Swain all remained in the top 10, taking 5th, 7th and 10th places, respectively. Also finishing for UMass were Laurie Webber (13th), Sue Levy (16th) and Kim Loftus (21th). Sue Shumway (Brown) took second and Laurie Hourahan (BC) took third.

The Minutewomen continued to ski strong on Sunday and pulled out their second giant slalom win of the season.

Team results for the Waterville Valley meet were: UMass (257.60); BC (264.91) and Plymouth State (270.68). White won her third race of the season with a time 84.28, while teammate Collins followed a close second at 84.45. Also finishing for UMass were Leslie Dale (10), Lisa Luczkow (11), Diana Swain (14), Sue Levy (22) and Kim Loftus (37).

After two weekends of competition, the UMass women's ski team holds first place in the WISC league.

Providence topples UM women

Chomentowski, Collins shine for Minutewomen

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

The struggling University of Massachusetts women's basketball team couldn't get themselves into gear Tuesday night and picked up a 83-59 loss, courtesy of Providence College, in the Cage.

The Minutewomen just could not consistently play with the Lady Friars, who improve to 15-4 (5-1 in the Big East).

"We got beat by a lot better team tonight," said head coach Mary Ann Ozdarski. "We were very inconsistent."

Kelly Collins, who was the hoopsters leading scorer with 15 points, and Maria Chomentowski were bright spots in an otherwise dismal night for UMass.

"Kelly Collins played an outstanding game as did Maria Chomentowski. It was their best games yet," said Ozdarski.

But, led by the outstanding shooting of Providence's Kathy Finn and the fine overall play of the entire Friar team, PC quickly erased the only lead UM had (at 2-0 off of a Wendy Ward hoop) and gradually established themselves.

Providence established a ten point lead early in the first half but UMass hung close. But after numerous travels and turnovers, the impatient Minutewomen offense fell farther and farther behind the Lady Friars.

Finn, mostly on outside shots, led Providence in the first half while freshmen Chomentowski and Collins led UMass.

In the second half, UMass closed to within 12 after being down 41-27 at the half and thanks to some PC turnovers and some fine offensive play, UM had the momentum for a comeback.

But as will happen with a young team, the comeback faltered under the defensive pressure of PC and due to UMass' own mistakes. PC then proceeded to outscore the Minutewomen 36-19 down the stretch to ice the victory. It gave UMass their 16th loss in twenty games.

"We have to go out and play the game and play hard for 40 minutes," said Ozdarski.

"I was disappointed that we gave them all sorts of rebounds and disappointed in out shooting."

UMass shot 44.8 for the night and committed 31 turnovers compared to Providence's 20.

Everything is not all bad and gloomy for the lady hoopsters, however. They did do some things right, but they just couldn't be consistent in their play.

Karen Damminger, who scored eleven points on the night, did a good job of passing the ball and had some nice feeds to Colling in the lane. Nadine Jackson also did a good job, in only her sixth game of the year.

Unfortunately, the road does not get any smoother for UMass. Saturday, they travel to Boston to take on a tough Northeastern team.

Call up McLaughlin before Penn State rematch

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

Are you one of those self professed basketball experts who has sat in the stands of the Curry Hicks Cage and told everyone what should be done in order for the University of Massachusetts Minutemen to start winning games consistently?

Would you, in your infinite wisdom, like to share your insights with coach Tom McLaughlin? Or, would you just like to say hello to the second year head coach of the Minutemen?

Why are these seemingly stupid questions being asked of the average reader today?

The Minutemen play host to the Nittany Lions of Penn State tonight at 7:30 p.m. but prior to that, Tom McLaughlin will appear as a guest on WMUA's sports talk show, Sports Cafe. While he's there, the telephone lines will be open and students, supporters, critics, fans, literally anyone with a dime in their possession will be able to converse with the coach.

Hopefully, this should stir further interest in the struggling UMass squad which is now 4-12.

And there should be at least some interest. With no homework due for a couple of weeks (at least for non-engineering majors) there is little or no reason not to have a packed house in the Cage.

The game will be a double Homecoming special as both the Minutemen, who have played their last three games on the road, and the UMass community, who have either slaved to earn tuition money, hung out and goofed off, or (and don't you hate this group) basked in the sun in some exotic paradise, return to the Amherst area and to the Cage.

It will mark the second time in a row that the Minutemen have played the Nittany Lions. The last game, on January 29, saw a 5 point Minutemen advantage disintegrate in the waning moments of the contest as Penn State prevailed, 59-57.

"It will be a big lift to have the fans behind us," said sophomore forward Bobby Braun as he walked through Boyden Gymnasium yesterday. "We're going to win this time."

"We have to get a consistent 40 minutes," said McLaughlin, "not 30 or 35, but 40.

"Penn State will anticipate a game from us now," McLaughlin continued, "so they'll come in ready to play."

Real fans will be there regardless of the team's record. They just want to root for their squad. Basketball haters will stay home, citing the poor record. For those of you who are on the border, maybe what you should do is listen in between 6-7 p.m. tonight (91.1 FM). Hear what the coach has to say. Hear what people want to ask him. You can even call up and ask a question yourself.

If nothing else, you can hear yourself on the radio.

Navy sinks gymnasts; Johnson disappointed

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

If you've ever had a day when absolutely nothing went right then you'll know how the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team felt as it missed even its routine skills on its way to a 258.85-244.65 defeat at the hands of Navy.

Despite the 14 point spread, the team's confidence is not shaken. Coach Roy Johnson, who said the team can't have a worse meet, feels that the men can still improve enough to get 260 points. So for this season, the closest UMass has come to 260 was its first match against Army in which UM scored 254.60. Still, Johnson said there was no excuse for the loss.

"The team had a great attitude going into the meet," Johnson said. "All the signs were there to beat Navy. They were working with the same equipment (at Boyden gym) but they got out there (Maryland) and things were different.

After Navy jumped off to a quick three point lead in the floor exercises, they never looked back. John Macurdy's performance in the floor exercises was the highlight for UMass as he performed a double back somersault and scored a 9.25 taking second place.

It was downhill for the Minutemen from then on as they lost the pommel horse event by four points. Navy's scores were not much better but the best the Minutemen could do was a tie for third place with an 8.35 put on the board by Bert Mathieson.

Rings were the closest event between the two teams but Navy still prevailed and won the event by a point and a half. Co-captain John McGonagle put in a strong performance, scoring a 9.4 while taking first for UM. But because things were not going right, the other UMass scores didn't come through and the team was trailing by eight points at the half way mark of the match.

"I think what it had to do with may be the inexperience of competing away," Johnson said. "The things they missed were ridiculous. It's hard to understand why the skills were missed."

The vaulting scores were good but Navy's were better. Macurdy scored a 9.4 with his vault but only placed third. Tony Sbarra had a good vault which scored a 9.2 and Peter Lucchini scored a 9.1 for UM.

The Minutemen lost more ground in the parallel bars event which they lost by three points. The best the team could do was a fourth place finish by Mathieson with an 8.3.

Adding to the frustrations of the day, the high bar, which is usually a strong event for UMass, didn't do much for the team Sbarra got the high score for the team with an 8.75 that gave him a tie for third place.

So it's onward, and upward in the eyes of the team, as it travels to meet East Stroudsburg on Saturday. According to Johnson, the meet is going to be a close one but it shouldn't be a bad one.

"It's an away meet but they should perform well," Johnson said. "They have to make up their minds and do it. Some of them did."

And some of them didn't. Possibly on Saturday the team will get everything they've worked on over intersession together and have a good day.

Pat's Johnson a Breaker?

BOSTON (AP) — New England running back Andy Johnson came close to practicing Tuesday with Boston's new United States Football League team, but not close enough to suit Breakers' Coach Dick Coury.

The Breakers and New Jersey Generals worked out on adjacent fields, about 20 yards apart, in Orlando, Fla. Boston has been trying to sign Johnson as a player, but he was helping New Jersey Coach Chuck Fairbanks, his former Patriots' mentor, run the Generals' training camp practice.

Johnson's contract with the Patriots was to expire at midnight Tuesday, making him a free agent.

The Breakers, who have exclusive USFL negotiating rights to the 30-year-old Johnson, reportedly were close to an agreement with him last week. Coury said Tuesday he couldn't wait much longer.

"I'd like to have him but I think he's a young man who has to make up his mind in a hurry on whether he wants to play anymore or coach," Coury said.

Good time for all at UMass basketball game

By KEN BAZINET
Collegian Staff

There are people at UMass who say the basketball team will never be the power it was during the early part of the last decade. These same people lie.

They also sit around their dorm room and drink beer until their hips hang out of their Levis, while a few students who believe in UMass basketball attend the games.

Last night a few students attended the game. About 4,200 to be more precise.

Some of those in attendance were the faithful, others were taking advantage of the light work load that comes only during the first week of classes. In both cases, they had a good time.

And why not? UMass, 4-12 overall going into last night's game; UMass, 0-5 against Atlantic 10 foes; UMass, the underdog; UMass the victor? Yes! In a big way. An 86-64 romp over Penn State.

"Hey, I'm a psychology major and I'm here to get UMass psyched-up," said Mike Rosenthal, a sophomore trumpet player who has played with the pep band at each of the home games. "I knew this was worth it when I joined the band."

There were plenty of students who shared Rosenthal's opinion last night, and they showed it after each Minuteman basket or blocked shot or forced turnover. They were loud and Coach Tom McLaughlin said it made the difference.

"I came early," McLaughlin said after the game, "saw that crowd and figured with that many people the team would have to be up for the game."

Sophomore guard Don Russell who was last night's high scorer for Umass agreed with his coach.

"The crowd was beautiful tonight," he said, adding that it was good to be past the monotony of the intersession's empty stands. "We need the fans. They sound good and they keep us going."

Both Russell and McLaughlin agreed that it will be just as important to draw a big crowd for Saturday's game against Rutgers.

Jeff Tyma, a member of the 40-minute club, said he and his friends are ready for Rutgers and will be louder than ever.

Mary-Jeanne Gosselin, a sophomore, saw the game this way: "I can't see very well (she was stuck in the back row) it's too hot, and it smells like B.O., but other than that I like the crowd and it's exciting."

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey yesterday announced the appointment of John L. DeNyse as permanent vice chancellor for administration and finance at the University of Massachusetts.

In a written statement released yesterday, Duffey commented on DeNyse's appointment.

"Mr. DeNyse has served in the administration of the campus for over 30 years," he said. "John brings to his responsibilities a proven record of dedication to the instituion and competent professional service."

In addition to the appointment, Duffey said he will begin a process of assessment of the campus' budget and administrative organization.

During the assessment, which Duffey said will continue through next December, Duffey will hire consultants specializing in management, budget procedures and the operation of major university research programs.

"In the meantime, I will be announcing several minor reorganizations in the administration and finance areas," Duffey stated.

DeNyse said he has been hesitant to make major changes in his area while serving in an acting capacity because he was not sure how long he would work in that position.

"It has been a long and difficult period (his 21 months as acting vice chancellor)," DeNyse said. "We are going to go forward and start to do a lot of things that need to be done on campus."

DeNyse, a graduate of the UMass business program, said he plans to consult with various groups on campus, make a list of what needs to be done, and set priorities for those needs.

He said he has had a series of discussions with the chancellor about what needs to be done in his area and said, "we are in complete agreement."

DeNyse, 57, began his employment at UMass as a cashier in South College, the former administration headquarters. A native of Amherst, he also worked on campus as a state auditor, an assistant purchasing officer and an internal auditor.

He was made acting Vice chancellor for administration and finance in 1981 when former vice chancellor George Beatty resigned to seek work in private industry.

Jobless get chance for free education

By RAY BEAUCHEMIN
Collegian Staff

The jobless will have the doors of academia opened to them at the Universtiy of Massachusetts now that money has been allocated that will allow state colleges and universities to provide free classes to unemployed heads of households.

The program, sponsored by the Board of Regents and involving $1 million goes by several names. At Greenfield Community College, where the program was initiated and at Umass, it is called "Project Future." At Berkshire Community College, the program was dubbed OPEN, Opportunity for Education Now. Whatever the name of the program, it has proved successful at both community colleges.

At UMass, however, according to the Daily Hampshire Gazette, only a few inquiries about enrollment have been made.

Art Clifford, Director of the office of Public Information at UMass said, "because the program was announced so late, as far as the beginning of the semester goes, we were not able to really take advantage of publicizing to the large amount of people who might qualify. But if people who did qualify wanted to take a course, we would let them in."

Clifford said he believed few people would be registering for the program at UMass and few would be able to get into courses because "a good many courses have already been filled up and you know how it is to try to get into a course that's filled."

Greenfield Community College had earmarked spots for 40 heads of households two weeks ago and asked the Board of Regents to reimburse it for the tuition lost in the program. An overwhelming 140 people applied for the spots. On the day after GCC announced the program, the Regents approved a statewide program, granting $1 million to cover the cost of tuition and other expenses.

The program would continue, until the $1 million runs out which would depend on how many people apply for courses and what kind of courses are taken, said Estelle Shanley, Public Information Director for the Board of Regents.

Clifford said he was not aware of how the money would be distributed but said, "the program has not cost us anything and given the constraints of the program, it is not going to cost us anything. It does not cost anything to fill a seat that would otherwise remain open. If there is a seat open in a class it is better to have someone who is out of a job fill it than have it remain open."

Shanley said the money would be allocated to the colleges participating in the program on a need basis. For example, if a college accepts 20 unemployed people into courses under this project, the cost of those 20 students would be reimbursed by the institution from the allocated $1 million.

Any unemployed household head wishing to participate in the program is asked to contact the admissions department of the particular college or university he or she is interested in attending. Any open or unfilled courses in the curriculum are open to qualified persons, although for the most part, courses that offer skill advancement, such as business, office administration, drafting and electronics, are the type of courses that have had the highest registrations in the Berkshire and Greenfield college programs.

Salvadoran army set for attack

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — A government battalion was reported moving into positions on the slopes of Cimarron Hill yesterday preparing for a counterattack to retake the guerrilla-held city of Berlin atop the hill.

Civilians at the Cuscatlan bridge, 10 miles west of Berlin, said they saw six air force helicopters fly more troops into the area 70 miles east of San Salvador. They said an air force attack plane bombed suspected guerrilla positions north of Berlin.

Berlin, a town of 30,000 in Usulutan province and a farming center overlooking the Lempa River, is the biggest town taken by the leftist rebels of the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front in their 39-month-old guerrilla war against the U.S.-supported government.

Its capture facilitated the rebels' campaign of economic sabotage in a stretch of rich cotton and coffee lands 25 miles long and about 10 miles wide from the Pacific coast nearly to the Pan-American Highway.

The town was defended by less than 100 troops, police and militiamen, and rebel snipers apparently had no difficulty turning back two small convoys of reinforcements sent to aid them. After about 500 guerrillas overwhelmed the defenders Monday night, the government moved about 1,500 troops into the area from the north.

Civilians in Mercedes Umana, about 6 miles north of Berlin, reported helicopters flying over late Tuesday, possibly bringing in more troops or supplies.

Although the rebel commander in Berlin indicated that the guerrillas might not try to hold it, the capture of the city demonstrated their increasing ability to operate on more than one front.

The rebels struck in Usulutan while some 6,000 government troops, including the three mobile battalions trained by the United States, were tied down more than 100 miles northeast of San Salvador on an operation in Morazan province.

Marine tells Israeli soldiers: advance over his 'dead body'

WASHINGTON (AP) — A U.S. Marine captain climbed aboard one of three Israeli tanks, his pistol drawn and loaded, and told an insistent Israeli commander he would have to come over his "dead body" to get past an American checkpoint in Beirut on yesterday, officials said.

The Reagan administration immediately called Israel on the carpet over the "gravity" of the episode. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger called the Israeli behavior "threatening" and "both unnecessary and basically damaging" to peace prospects.

The column of three Israeli tanks backed off after Marine Capt. Charles B. Johnson, of Rock Island, Ill., pulled his weapon and loaded it in front of an Israeli lieutenant colonel, scrambled onto the commander's tank and demanded the withdrawal, officials said.

The Israeli officer "insisted they were coming through, the Marine captain said they were not," Weinberger said. Johnson "climbed onto the lead tank, said that if they were coming through they'd have to do it over his dead body," according to Weinberger.

The incident stood as the most dangerous to date in six or seven face-offs between Israeli soldiers and U.S. Marines serving as peacekeepers in Lebanon.

The Israeli commander, while not named by U.S. officials, was said to have been involved in at least two of the previous incidents.

At the State Department, it was announced that Acting Secretary of State Ken Dam had summoned the Israeli charge d'affaires "to discuss this incident and the gravity with which we view it."

"The recurrence of challenges to the Marines by Israeli Defense Forces is unacceptable," spokesman Alan Romberg said. "We view such incidents very seriously, both because they endanger the safety of the troops involved and hamper the peacekeeping efforts of the multinational force."

"We do not know why the tanks attempted to cross our lines but the incident was resolved, and the tanks withdrew at the insistence of the Marine officer on the scene," Romberg said.

He said he thought discussions between U.S. diplomats and Israeli officials after the previous episodes would have prevented any new ones. "We regret this has happened again," he said. "We don't understand the motivation for this action."

Weinberger said Johnson "behaved not only with total correctness, but with extreme courage, and I have asked that he be specifically commended on the basis of the information we have today."

Social Security plan debated in Congress

WASHINGTON — Congress is examining the $168 billion Social Security bailout plan, with its chief author warning that failure to approve it could damage economic confidence and stall recovery from the recession.

Alan Greenspan, chairman of the National Commission on Social Security Reform, said failure to resolve the Social Security problems would send "a terribly negative signal" to the financial markets and confirm uneasiness about federal spending.

Such an impression "will create a reignition of inflationary forces and that, in turn...would push long-term interest rates up from where they are; would abort a nascent recovery," said Greenspan who appeared before the House Ways and Means Committee Tuesday. The panel continued its hearings yesterday.

He also said there was no room to alter substantive portions of the package.

Congress, meanwhile, began scrutinizing President Reagan's $848.5 billion budget with both Republican and Democratic leaders eyeing the addition of a public works jobs program.

Boston commuters may face one-way toll

BOSTON — Drivers coming into Boston by the Tobin Bridge and the Sumner Tunnel would pay a single, double-priced toll and leave for free under a proposal being revived by two agencies.

The Massachusetts Turnpike Authority are resurreeting the proposal in hopes of speeding up auto traffic under and over Boston Harbor. The bridge is run by Massport and the Sumner tunnel going into Boston — called the Callahan tunnel outbound — is operated by the Turnpike Authority.

Tolls are 25 cents for the bridge and 30 cents for the tunnel.

Massport planning director Norman Faramelli said there is a "high likelihood" the experiment will occur, but not before April 1. Cooperation among the city and other agencies is key, he added.

Turnpike spokesman Edward King said Tuesday that authority is shooting for a March deadline.

7th Fleet commander dies in Newport

NEWPORT, R.I. — Vice Admiral Stuart H. Ingersoll, 84, a former commander of the 7th Fleet who had two future presidents serve under him, has died following a brief illness.

Ignersoll died Saturday at the Naval Regional Medical Center here. Private funeral services were held Monday.

He was promoted to vice admiral in 1955 and named commander of the 7th Fleet. In 1945 he served as chief of staff to the commander of the U.S. Pacific Fleet as a rear admiral.

While commanding officer of the aircraft carrier Monterey during World War II, Ingersoll received the Navy Cross for heroism during a Japanese air attack near Taiwan.

Serving on board the Monterey when Ingersoll was in command was Lt. Gerald Ford, who became president in 1974.

While Ingersoll was commandant of the U.S. Naval Academy from 1945 to 1947, one of the cadets was Jimmy Carter, who entered the White House in 1977.

"It's an unusual situation now that I look back on it," Ingersoll said in an interview in 1977. "Two future presidents and I could have told them both to go to hell — in a nice way, of course."

Ingersoll was appointed president of the Naval War College here in 1957 and served in that post until his retirement in 1960.

Born in Springfield, Mass., Ingersoll grew up in Portland, Maine. He was appointed to the Naval Academy in 1917.

He is survived by two daughters and a son.

Runners, anorexics may share problem

BOSTON — Women who starve themselves on ruinous diets and men who are obsessed with long-distance running may have the same personality disorder, a study concludes.

Unlike most recreational runners, some marathoners develop a single-minded commitment to keeping in physical shape. These people called "obligatory runners," may cover 100 miles a week. And for them, "running becomes a consuming goal that preempts all other interests in life," the researchers said.

They interviewed 60 of these long-distance runners and found many similarities with women who have anorexia nervosa, a disorder in which people become dangerously thin because of incessant dieting.

"The two groups may represent a single mode of behavior," the doctors wrote.

Generally, the obligatory runners value their exercise above all else. They will run in spite of illness, even when the exercise may be bad for them. And when for some reason they cannot run, they feel anxious and depressed about physical deterioration.

Olzewski murder trial heats up in Springfield

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — A sister of a man charged with killing his ex-girlfriend in a lover's lane has testified that a friend of the defendant stuck by an alibi the day after the friend allegedly told police about the murder.

Sandra Olszewski, 21, testified Tuesday for about 10 minutes in the Hampden County Superior Court trial of her brother, Anthony Olszewski, 23, charged with the murder of Joanne Welch, 18.

Alszewski has been accused of killing his ex-girlfriend Jan. 28, 1982 in West Springfield, where they both lived with their families, and dumping her body that day in neighboring Westfield, where she was found the next day.

Jury selection began Jan. 4, with opening arguments and testimony on Jan. 17. Since then, spectators have packed the courtroom daily, with people waiting in line to enter the room.

Miss Welch's death was the only homicide in West Springfield in 1982.

Olszewski was arrested Feb. 15. According to testimony by Philip Strong, that was the day he changed his alibi for Olszewski and told police that Olszweski admitted killing Miss Welch and showed him where he had dumped her body.

Strong testified he tore up his alibi statement and wrote five pages quoting Olszweski. The second statement has been entered as evidence.

SGA bars RSO groups from campaign spending

By MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate last night barred student groups from spending money to endorse candidates in the upcoming Student Government Association presidential election, in an attempt to equalize spending in the election.

Members of the senate hotly debated the right of the senate to prevent groups from using funds they had raised outside the SGA to endorse a candidate or issue and some questioned the legality of the proposal.

Mindy Ordway, who was appointed by the Senate last night to run the elections, defended the motion by pointing out abuses during last year's election campaign. She noted that a full column of Collegian personal ads last year endorsed candidates and that one candidacy had been favored.

The proposed election rule would bar Recognized Student Organizations (RSO) from spending any money on behalf of a candidate or a referendum question and would bar candidates from spending outside funds on the campaigns.

Each candidacy is granted $250 to spend on the election campaign, unless more than six candidates seek the office of SGA President, according to the SGA constitution.

"Basically, it's a code of honor," said public policy committee chairperson Sheila Sullivan. "If all the candidates work on code of honor, it might work out."

But finance chairperson Siobhan Powers challenged the effectiveness of a code of honor, calling it "dubious at best."

Powers pointed out that a precedent had been set for endorsement of candidates when the SGA endorsed state Senator John Olver last fall, but Michael Leary noted that, "There's a substantial difference between SGA elections and outside elections."

Tim Rudolph, a senator, called the action of the senate "hypocrisy."

"Isn't it hypocritical to stop a group from endorsing someone? How can you stop them from saying something?" said Rudolph. He compared the situation to problems between the SGA and Student Activities Director Randy Donant over control of SGA money and personnel.

Mount Holyoke employee sues school for firing

By NANCY GONTER
Collegian Staff

A former University of Massachusetts student has filed a $500,000 lawsuit against Mount Holyoke College, charging the school with extortion.

Zagloul Ayad, the plaintiff in the suit, claims an employee of Mount Holyoke said that if he did not resign his position as a cook, he would tell the police that Ayad had accosted a woman. Ayad's suit claims that allegation is false.

Ayad was hired as a cook at Mount Holyoke Aug. 31, 1982. Ayad said he was fired on Oct. 10. Mount Holyoke claims Ayad was discharged on Oct. 15.

The suit also charges that as a result of his firing, Ayad suffered "great pain of mind and lives in a state of constant nervous tension."

Most of Ayad's allegations are denied in a countersuit filed by Mount Holyoke. The counterclaim demands that the college be awarded a $500,000 judgement and that Ayad pay all legal fees.

George M. Nassar, the attorney who represents Ayad, said that Mount Holyoke acted in bad faith when they discharged Ayad, who Nassar said is a "decent, hard-working man."

"Ayad has no criminal record; there are no stains on his record. He is highly trained and has worked around the world," Nassar said.

Elaine M. Reall, the counsel for Mount Holyoke, was unavailable for comment.

According to Nassar, employees of Mount Holyoke claimed that Ayad had damaged stoves and that he accosted a female employee. Mount Holyoke refused to file a statement from the woman and has now dropped both of those charges.

Ayad was discharged because he failed to perform in a satisfactory manner, according to Mount Holyoke's countersuit.

Ayad previously worked for five months as an on-call cook at Mount Holyoke. After his voluntary resignation, a recommendation was written by a Mount Holyoke employee that said that Ayad was a conscientious and enthusiastic employee.

Ayad, a native of Cairo, Egypt, has been living in the United States for a year and a half.

Gnomon Copy strikers to start own business

By GLEN GOLDSTEIN
Collegian Correspondent

Employees of the former Gnomon Copy Center who were on strike last semester are now striking out on their own.

The workers will open a new copy center in Amherst in two weeks, said Tobi Saisa, a former Gnomon employee.

The worker settled a three month strike against Gnomon Copy franchise owners in December, only to have the store lose its lease a few days later.

Since that time eight of the original 11 striking Gnomon Copy workers have raised $14,000 to open their own copy center, Saisa said.

"The money was raised from private, working people. They will be paid back at 10 percent interest," Saisa said.

Different loans were negotiated at different rates. We raised about $1,000 from selling copies in advance at a discount price," he added.

The new store, to open in about two weeks, will be called the Acorn Copy Collective. It will be located at 25 N. Pleasant St. in Amherst, upstairs and to the left of Fotomat, Saisa said.

All charges have been dropped against the former Gnomon workers who were on strike. The last of these was a charge of trespassing filed against two strikers. The accused strikers appeared in court a couple of weeks ago, and were released, Saisa said.

The new store will offer inexpensive, quality copies for the academic community, Saisa said.

Gonomon worker went on strike Sept. 8, 1982. Several people were arrested during the course of the strike, but charges against them were later dropped.

Co-owners Catherine Iannacchino and Roland Wetherbee were forced to close the store after two and a half months of negotiation with former workers failed to produce an agreement.

Student run businesses to face SGA audits

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

The treasurer's office of the Student Government Association (SGA) will begin auditing student-controlled businesses February 14 in an effort to ensure the businesses are not being mismanaged.

SGA treasurer, Lisa Potter said the audits this month are part of a new policy in the SGA which calls for all student-run businesses to be audited at least once a semester.

"In the past we've only done audits when there has been a problem with a particular business. But, now we feel it is better to do periodic audits," she said.

The auditors will be checking the businesses revenues, expenses and payroll figures to verify whether they are correct expenditures, she said.

If the auditors find mismanaged businesses, Potter said, recommendations will then be made to them on ways to correct their mistakes.

"If businesses are losing money, the auditors can recommend ways to improve their situations," she said.

All student-controlled businesses are self supporting. Their goal is not to make a profit, Potter said, but rather to offer low cost goods and services.

"It is the treasurer's job to assure no groups run in deficits," she said.

Currently the treasurer's office has very little control over student -controlled businesses. The audits, she said, are designed to give the SGA some kind of control over the businesses.

The audits will be done by student interns. Most of the interns will be accounting majors, but Potter said all students are encouraged to apply by Feb. 8 if they are interested.

Everywoman's Center looking for volunteers

Volunteers and interns are needed to staff the University of Massachusetts Everywoman Center resource room in Wilder Hall for the spring semester. University and community women are invited to apply. Interns and volunteers will provide information about social, educational, political and survival resources; medical and legal referrals; do occasional crisis intervention; and update and maintain the resource files, library, resource books, and self-use materials on topics concerning women.

Credit is available for most UMass undergraduate students. College work study is available for the spring semester.

For a job description and application, see Ruth Fessenden, Resource/Referral Coordinator at the Everywoman Center or call 545-0883.

Application deadline for spring staffing is February 10. Interviews will be held as applications are received. Staffing of the resource room begins the week of February 14-18.

Former town manager seeks selectman's post

Former Town Manager Allen L. Torrey announced he will run for a seat on the Amherst Board of Selectmen in the April town elections.

Torrey was Amherst's first town manager, serving from 1954 until 1975. He filed candidate papers on Tuesday, expressing a desire to "get involved" again.

There are two seats open and so far the only other announced candidate is incumbent Selectmen Frederick Steinbeck.

Torrey, of 1110 South East Street, is treasurer and principal business officer of Hampshire College, a post he took upon resignation of his Amherst position.

Everywoman's Center starts divorce group

Performing Arts dept. plans many events

The Performing Arts Division is presenting a range of activities this month at the University of Massachusetts. They include: an open house at the Fine Arts Center from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. this Sunday, a formal ensemble recital by performing arts faculty at 3:30 p.m. Feb. 27 in Bezanson Recital Hall; and classes throughout the month that will be offered in dance, voice, piano, music theory and acting. Call the Performing Arts Division at 545-0519 for more information.

Journalism dept. starts employment registry

The journalistic studies (JS) program is arranging a job registry to pass employment opportunities in media-related fields to JS majors. These are usually paid jobs, ranging from clerical work to publicity, reporting and editing. Students will not be able to receive credits for these positions.

Students interested should go to the JS office and complete an employment questionaire, which will be put on file for prospective employers. The JS faculty plans to compile a file of job opportunities for students.

Taylor Brook coal pile solution only temporary

By ANN CARRNS
Collegian Staff

Although temporary measures to redirect the flow of water at Taylor Brook around the University of Massachusetts' coal pile have been partially completed, a permanent solution may be years away.

The diversions will redirect the water so it will flow around the coal pile instead of through it.

Seepage from the coalpile has been polluting the brook, and dairy farmers downstream have complained that their cows became ill from drinking the water.

The diversions, which will be completed soon, are by no means a permanent solution, Amherst Conservation Director Peter Westover said yesterday, and government red tape may delay funding for several years.

A joint report on the Taylor Brook situation by Town and University officials and an engineering firm was scheduled to be sent to the state Division of Capital Planning and Operations (DCPO) in January.

However, Westover said yesterday the report is "somewhere in the UMass bureaucracy," sand has not yet been sent to the state for evaluation. Physical Plant Director George Norton said yesterday the report was sent to Vice Chancellor of Administration and Finance John L. DeNyse for review.

Norton said the vice chancellor's office would prepare a letter of transmittal and the report would be sent to DCPO within one to two weeks. DeNyse could not be reached for comment.

"Once DCPO does receive the report, they have to do their own feasibility study," Westover said. "So, we're looking at roughly a couple of years before funding is provided for a permanent solution."

A study done by Tighe and Bond, an engineering firm hired by UMass, suggested three solutions. One, move the pile; two, cover it with an aluminum dome; and three, build a diversion system to treat the water at the site, and then carry it to Amherst's sewage treatment plant.

Westover said officials are "leaning toward" the third solution, but further studies on the water's content are needed to ensure that the sewage treatment plant's current equipment could handle it.

'Evita' postponed until fall

By JOHN DiPALAZZO
Collegian Staff

The touring company of "Evita" has decided to postpone , until next fall, its three-day performance in May at the University of Massachusetts, Fine Arts Center.

Judith Allen , director of programming for the Fine Arts Center Concert Series, said the postponement of the national touring company was due to a rescheduling of the entire tour when the company was not able to perform at one booked engagement.

The musical was scheduled to appear at UMass May 3, 4 and 5. Allen said the "Evita" tour would probably be rescheduled and appear at UMass either next fall or next spring semester.

"Evita" tickets have been and will continue to be refunded. Allen blamed the national economy on the cancellation and said many national touring companies have been forced to reschedule and sometimes cancel entire tours because of poor ticket sales.

Allen called ticket sales "a nightmare" because performances are frequently undersold. Since tickets have not been selling well, performances that would be undersold are cancelled. When there is a sizable gap between performance dates, tours are usually cancelled and rescheduled, she said.

Allen has announce, however, there will be a special concert by the Cleveland Orchestra with Victor Borge on May 11.

Building Operations employee spells relief: J-O-G-G-I-N-G

By LAURA YEE
Collegian Correspondent

Monday through Friday, at any time between noon and 2 p.m. University of Massachusetts graduate Barbara Gravin Wilbur, senior clerk for Campus Center Building Operations, sheds her office attire and dons a jogging suit.

She slides on her New Balance running shoes, carefully puts her Walkman radio in place, turns on the music and begins her daily jog. Her course takes her from the Campus Center to Commonwealth Avenue, up Massachusetts Avenue, then down North Pleasant Street through the center of town. She turns onto Route 9, continues down University Drive and back to work, all in thirty-six minutes.

Mrs. Gravinwilbur's supervisor said the fact that she uses her lunch break to go running instead of taking a long, leisurely lunch is not out of character.

Dudley Bridges, director of the Campus Center Building Operations said, "Barbara is consistent — and she can do so many things at once."

Gravinwilber is the mother of three children aged five, six and eight. She manages to hold a demanding and hectic full-time job, run a household, care for three young children, and yet she has enough time left over to make her daily run.

"I enjoy running because it lets me clear my mind and it's my time to think things out," Gravinwilbur rigorously follows her running regimen because it is a chance to put life and all the problems revolving it into perspective. She said that, after her afternoon run, "I realize that some problems that were significant twenty minutes ago no longer are."

Every morning, instead of driving an automobile to work or getting on a bus, Barbara rides her bicycle into work. On rainy, snowy or not so pleasant mornings one may be able to spot Barbara wearing a bright orange plastic suit situated on a bicycle happily rifing to the Campus Center and "putting things into perspective."

The view from Reagan's chair evades truth

By MANNING MARABLE
From The Grassroots

Imagine, if you will, that you are sitting behind a large desk in an opulent oval room. Your address is 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D.C. Your aides call you "Mr. President", and your name is Ronald Reagan.

Suddenly, out of nowhere, a tension builds in your forehead. The pain grows more intense. Inexplicably, you begin to experience a strange and rare sensation. You are thinking — about yourself, your policies, and the world.

You are the most powerful official in the world. You have at your disposal a powerful military machine, fueled by a projected $1.6 trillion over the next 5 years. You can jet across continents, rereading your yellowed and frayed 3 by 5 inch notecards at every stop, and at taxpayers' expense. You are the personal friend and protector of every petty despot and authoritarian despot, from Seoul to San Salvador, Manila to Santiago. And best of all, Nancy can purchase the best china that money can buy.

Your garbled thoughts turn to the nuclear freeze movement, and the worldwide campaign to halt the arms race. You are convinced that "foreign agents" from Russia have helped to instigate the U.S. movement toward a nuclear arsenal freeze. The Catholic Bishops and over a million people who demonstrated in New York City, Los Angeles and other cities around the country last June were all the wicked dupes of the Kremlin. "The Soviet Union saw an advantage in a peace movement built around the idea of a nuclear freeze, since they are out ahead (of us)," you mutter. "There has been, in the organization of some of the big demonstrations, there is no question about foreign agents that were sent to help instigate and help create and keep such a movement going."

But dimly, you know that anticommunist smears and McCarthy-type tactics are no longer as effective as they were during the good old days of the Cold War. Your own Secretary of Defense, Caspar "the knife" Weinberger, blurted out to the press that he would not want to trade the Soviets' nuclear weapons system for the current U.S. system, thus deflating your contention that this nation is militarily unprepared. About 12 million Americans voted for the nuclear freeze in last November's election. Thousands more cast ballots in favor of a "Jobs With Peace" referendum.

More painful still was your public humiliation on December 7th. The House of Representatives rejected the MX missile program. The overwhelming vote occurred on the forty-first anniversary of Pearl Harbor, only hours after you told a series of Representatives "very emotionally how World War II came about because we didn't have a very effective deterrent with regard to the Japanese." You and your aides told Congress that "the new long-range ballistic missile was needed to deter Soviet aggression and give the United States a bargaining instrument in arms negotiations with the Soviet Union." But in the end, Soviet Defense Minister Dmitri F. Ustinov was far more persuasive. He warned the U.S. that deployment of the MX would be "a gross violation of arms treaties and an extremely dangerous round of the arms race."

Your corporate bosses were now sorely disappointed at your performance. The Air Force had already dumped $4.5 billion into the coffers of major defense contractors for the MX, including Martin Marietta's $380 million, Rockwell International Autonetics Division's $236 million, Northrop's $187 million, and Boeing's $133 million. The merchants of war hungrily eyed that additional $26 billion for the MX system. But you had failed them in the clutch, and the burgeoning forces for disarmament had achieved a stunning triumph.

Your thoughts return to Washington, D.C., and you realized that you are afraid to walk only blocks from the White House after dark. Black residents of the nation's capital hate your budget cuts in healthcare, public housing, job training programs, and other essential services. Only weeks before, gangs of angry blacks and whites — all undoubtedly paid by Moscow — chased the Ku Klux Klan off the streets and out of town. Fortunately, you sighed, local low enforcement officers were able to protect the racists, and escourt them beyond the city limits. You'll have to plan more carefully next time.

If you are Ronald Reagan, you understand that your last and best hope to ensure the continuation of racial, sexual and economic oppression, at home and abroad, is your powerful military arsenal. A limited nuclear war in Western Europe or the Mideast is not an unlikely option. A neutron bomb dropped over Soweto or Harlem might reduce the rebellious impulses of the blacks. You plan for the worst, hoping that the oppressed peoples of the globe do not overtake you.

The economic hardship is not felt by the affluent

By BAYARD RUSTIN
A Philip Randolph Institute

The idea of equality is implicit in the very idea of democracy. Thus it comes as no surprise that when one traverses the breadth of American history one encounters such vital events as the struggle against slavery, the movement for universal suffrage, and the battle for civil rights. Indeed, it would be no exaggeration to say that the history of American political life has been the history of the struggle for equality.

In the twentieth century the American idea of equality has encompassed not only the right of every American to participate equally in the political process but also the right of every American to participate equally in the political process but also the right of every American to live a productive life free of the fetters of poverty.

The creation of some of our nation's most significant programs — the Social Security system, federal aid to education, and unemployment insurance for the jobless — constitute clear proof that the contemorary American view of equality includes the conception of a guaranteed standard of living for all Americans.

According to recent studies conducted by the Urban Institute, a non-profit research organization, and the Congressional Budget Office, the overall effect of the President's tax and budget cuts has been to make the rich richer while the poor get poorer.

According to the Congressional Budget Office the net effect of the Reagan program on households with incomes of under ten thousand dollars is a loss of $240 dollars in income and services. For those households earning $80,000 or more the net effect is a staggering gain of over $15,000.

Moreover, Reagan's economic revolution has born no fruit for the vast majority of Americans. According to Urban Institute; "The broad middle class will realize modest reductions by 1984 in their real after-tax incomes." On the other hand, "Substantial gains will accrue to higher income families."

Additionally the policies of the Administration and the current recession have resulted in a significant upturn of poverty. By 1979 the incidence of poverty had fallen to 11.6 percent but in the first year of the Reagan Administration rose to 14 percent, with an even higher rate projected by the end of 1983.

The Reagan Administration has helped to undermine the social cohesiveness which is necessary to build a strong and productive America. The reversal of the regrssive effects of the Administration's "supply-side" tax cuts must therefore have a place in any future agenda for social justice and economic progress — an agenda which derives from the very idea of democracy.

Black History Month commemorates DuBois

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

Since February of 1926 when Dr. Carter G. Woodson, director of the Association for the study of Afro-American Life and History (ASALH) originated the idea of commemorating the past achievements and present status of Black Americans in what was then called Negro History Month, the world was to learn of the long ignored status of Blacks in history.

The celebration, coinciding with the birthday of Frederick Douglas (February 14) and of Abraham Lincoln (Feb. 12), has achieved the long term goal Woodson had in mind when thinking of the idea.

Woodson wanted the world to see the Negro "as a participant rather than a lay figure in history" and this is exactly what Black History Month, as the celebration has become known during the 1970's, has done.

Celebrating its 56th year in 1983, Black History Month is commemorating the 80th anniversary of the publication of "W.E.B. Du Bois' Souls of Black Folks." Du Bois is one of the most important scholars in American History. In contrast with Booker T. Washington, who ideally thought that the Negro should find jobs in skill trades, Du Bois focused more toward the educational fields for blacks. This interest led him to found the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP); this was also a national campaign against lynching.

When we think of Black History Month many significant names of leaders, scholars and liberationists who have dedicated their lives to the welfare of Blacks come to mind. Among these great personalities are Gabriel Prosser, Nat Turner, Frederick Douglas, Harriet Tubman, Malcom X, Martin Luther King, Sam Cornish, Claude McKay and many others.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The syllabus nightmare now begins

They have been dangling out of notebooks for decades. Tattered pieces of paper which control the intellectual minds of scholars nationwide. They come in many forms, though the more observant student will notice that the information actually doesn't change much from year to year.

The standard syllabus is packed full of seemingly vital information which is presented in a rather formal manner. Usually these are headed with the name of the course. This is helpful for the student who now realizes that he is seated in "Honors Organic Chemistry" rather than a "Physics for Poets". Office hours are conveniently the victim of either typographical error or some problem with the xerox machine, but no professor is ever available the night before the test. After all, when else are you really going to want to see them anyway?

For the most part, these office hours are a time reserved for cleaning off the desk and separating the paper clips from the thumbtacks. Invariably, the phone will ring when you stop in to see the professor unexpectedly, or a different set of office hours will be posted on his door, their sixteenth revision in as many days.

The syllabus then moves into its own method of madness: the course outline. Topics are illustrated in nondescript titles according to their relevance to a particular chapter of reading. The standard syllabus devotes two class periods to lengthy and tedious introduction, inevitably of no relevance to the rest of the course. Areas which might even begin to interest the conventional student are left to the end of the syllabus, a sacred region, which can never be touched.

One thing the University has adequately taken care of is syllabus distribution. In the past, syllabi were distributed on the Campus Center concourse along with add/drop forms. An elderly woman from the scheduling office was armed with a truck of add/dropp forms and a literal library of syllabi. Students were instructed to gather at the Student Union until nine on Registration day. There the masses were then turned loose on the registration woman. Many older students can now remember the fragile woman leaning on a cane, confronting a screaming mob of fourty thousand students shouting their demands for courses. She handled each student patiently and one at a time. Unfortunately this practice was abolished after the angry mob refused to form a line.

Some professors feel a compulsive need to revolve their entire course around the syllabus and not the other way around. These are usually the same people who make lists of what they have to do in the morning which include breathing and blinking their eyes. These compulsive professors experience no guilt feelings when keeping a class over for an hour or two to evaluate a crucial point. They are the men and women who have given their midterms on March 15 for the past twenty five years. It no longer matters what day of the week this date happens to fall on. It was a Wednesday when the original syllabus was typed out, and thats all that matters now.

Some feel the need to hold up the syllabus at the first day of the semester and announce, "This is a challenge". Others inform the class that the twenty page hardcover syllabus is now available at the textbook annex for six bucks. The garden variety professor hands out the standard one-pager with an optional five pages of reserve readings which were stolen from Goodell in 1968.

The most frightening professor of all, is one with a gentle manner. He saunters into the room with a twinkle in his eye and a two-ton attache case. His stomach is giving his shirt a workout and he looks like he has just driven in on an eighteen wheeler. He plays with the hole in his sweater as he eloquently speaks on why he hates to give exams. The class relaxes. He winds through a few bad jokes, plays with course objectives, and casually mentions something about his musty office. He dismisses the class without the syllabus. The terror has set in. Its going to be a nightmare in there.

Thumbs up to hitchhiking

You know what really ticks me off? Trying to hitchhike at UMASS. It's not that I don't like thumbing, I do. But certain circumstances of late have made it very hard, and have been a great source of aggravation to boot.

For one thing, too many people have been catching on. Instead of waiting for the PVTA to arrive, now there's always one oddball out in front of the bus stop with their thumb up. In the past, one or two hitchhikers cluttered the curbside, but now there are scores of them. It's hard to conjure a more frustrating occasion than when you hit the road, late for a class, and find three people doing the same thing on each side of you.

Josh Meyer

Getting "on-line" in front of other thumbers, the cardinal sin of the craft, has been occurring with increasing frequency. Whatever vestiges of roadside manners that had existed before this past intersession have been totally left by the wayside.

Besides this, there's still the old "double standard" syndrome in effect. The fear of a single woman picking up a sex-crazed maniac has successfully dampened any expectations on my part of getting a ride with a woman I don't know. Women who thumb (all three of them) usually get rides before their thumb is up for the first time, and before their cans of mace are out and ready for action. Perhaps the worst part is when caravans of big, empty cars drive by without as much as a glance.

Thumbing is good sport though. Besides being a cheap, efficient way of travel and a great way of getting some fresh air, it's an easy way of meeting people. As such, I've come up with a proposition. Why not open up a Hitchhiker's Co-op in the Student Union? The idea deserves a table on the Concourse, at least.

Besides selling the obvious stuff like splash-proof clothing, pebble-proof sunglasses, and day-glo trenchcoats (to protect against those curb-hugging drivers with night blindness), the commercial possibilities are endless. Fake, inflatable gas cans, gloves with extra large thumbs, and carbon-monoxide proof designer scarves could all be potential sell-outs. Portable party packs to get you in that "high-spirited" mood necessary for thumbing would be popular, as would easy-to-read signs. "Harmless College Student" and "Have Drugs, Will Travel" have always helped out on those longer trips. Even signs like "Home To Mother" or "Pick Me Up or I'll Break Your Windshield" have been known to lure those hard-to-persuade drivers to the curb. People think they're cute.

Improving the life of the UMASS hitchhiking population would help us all. With enough lobbying, "thumb-stops" could be as much a part of school as PVTA stops, and probably much more effective. Anyone trying to catch a rush hour bus to Sunderland or Northhampton would be quick to agree, as would anyone waiting for a bus over intersession. It's not that public transportation doesn't work, it's just that it's about as adequate as carpooling on a ten-speed bike.

Hitchhiking should be promoted as a safe (in most cases), reliable form of transportation. The Hitchhiker's Co-op and other reforms are certainly within our grasp. Unfortunately, the free time needed to spend on this is a luxury many of us can't afford. If anyone has any constructive ideas, come forth with thumb now. Otherwise forget it. I'm not nearly as concerned about the plight of the oppressed hitchhiker as I was before. But next time I drive by you in the car I just bought, wave and I might pick you up.

STOP story clarified

To the Editor:

Thank you for your February 2nd coverage of our new alcohol education program entitled The Student Opportunity Program (STOP). Unfortunately, the title which was assigned to the newsline article was misleading. It is not a program designed for student alcoholics. It is a program designed to help any student who is interested in changing their drinking patterns and related behaviors. Any students who would like further information about STOP are encouraged to call me at 549-2671 X 181.

Live Wire

by Dave Chevan

Imagine, just for a second, you are a club owner somewhere in the valley. Now, imagine it is the first weekend of the semester and all your clientele (the students) are back from vacation. Okay, now take your imagination even further and try to figure out what the best way would be to exploit these returning students for every cent they've got. Well, dear club owner, what I would like to know is how such a small head can hold so much air.

One look at the bands booked this weekend reveals not only an amazing variety of bands, but, with only a few exceptions, the largest collection of has-been rock acts ever showcased in one valley.

Tonight's top choice is the ever funky Syncopation Station at Sheehan's in Northampton. For the harder rockers there is always Bratt at the Wok Lounge.

Friday night presents even greater variety, but even less substance. The best acts to catch are The New England Jazz Quartet at the Iron Horse, the New Improved Neighborhoods at the Wok, Poco at the Rusty Nail, and local The Pleasure Dots at the Blue Wall, (I'll bet you can never guess where I'll be.)

Saturday night looks a bit better with the Valley Big Band swinging their way into the Wok Lounge in Hadley. If you've never seen this band you're in for a special treat. They perform big band jazz music from the 30's, 40's and right into the 80's. On the rock side there's always Fat meets the Enemy at the Rusty Nail, and this year's model of Orchestra Luna, Berlin Airlift will be at the Hangear. Hard core punkers should head for the Guiding Star Grange in Greenfield for a wild night with the F.U.'s, Deep Wound, and All White Jury. And, of course, the Hampshire College dining commons will be hosting those crazy Pleasure Dots for the annual Penguin Dance.

Enough of the music stuff; let's get to the weekly trivia contest. There was no contest last week so I kept the prize, which was lots and lots of money, for myself. But there is a contest this week and the prize is a record, and it will probably be a good record, and it might be by somebody famous, I think.

This week's contest is called Name the Rockstar. I've listed 10 names of people in the rock industry; you have to write the real name down and submit them to me, care of the Arts Desk Mass, Daily collegian, 113 Campus Center, by Wednesday, Feb 9, 12:00 noon. In case of a tie we'll have a drawing. Good luck!

1) David Bowie 2) Iggy Pop 3) Stevie Wonder 4) Ringo Starr 5) Rick Berlin 6) Elvis Costello 7) Rick James 8) Elton John 9)Bob Dylan 10) Pig Pen

The Pleasure Dots — Frank Schwartz, David Chevan, Annie Tomolonius, Albert Fortin, Steve Ellis — will perform in the Blue Wall on Friday night.

Neil Young's Trans-tion

TRANS (Geffen)
Neil Young

By PETER WISSOKER
Collegian Staff

It doesn't matter what the critics say about Neil Young's new album because at least fifty percent of their readers are going to disagree. So of course Trans is no exception. Except that, in this case, a larger percentage of Neil's followers will be freaked out by the album.

Trans can be split into three sections. Those songs which are good, those songs which are amusing, and those songs which stink. What shall we talk about first?..the good news or the bad news. It's good form to begin a serious lecture with a litle joke and it seems that Neil feels the same way. Trans opens with the undeniably bouncy "Little Thing Called Love" (not the Queen song). Only Neil can get away with a chorus that reads.

"Only love puts a tear in your eye,
Only love makes you choose,
Only love brings you the blues,
Oh, a little thing called love."

Let's be serious. This is ridiculous, but then again so are the words to "Cinammon Girl."

A lot of songs on the album are on this marginal line between good and awful. The remake of "Mr. Soul" is terrible. It is a pitiable effort. However a lot of the funk songs (funk songs?) on the album do work. They work as only Neil could make them work and start with heavy metal licks and then have the voice put through the vocolater. These songs do not lack credibility and could easily be played as funk hits on most major funk stations.

The odd thing about this album is the way Young envisions the future, as a cold one, a bleak computer age. The funk songs have the same feeling as the film Blade Runner evokes. It makes a lot of sense, actually, that Neil Young of all people is out here on the edge long before most popular bands will even consider making songs about the coming high-tech age.

Young has always lived on the edge. Listen to the album "Tonight's the Night" for example. What most people have a hard time dealing with is that the acoustic Neil Young has another side to himself, and he's honest about it. This should be a thrill for the "New Age" people who feel it's important to let yourself go. This is a pretty emotional album — as most of Young's work is — but it appears that his emotions have matured somewhat. There is even one song on Trans where he suggests that one is better off not falling in love because it limits one's ability to grow. Can this be a new Neil Young?

Neil: a not so young Young.

Someone was talking to me about the review in Rolling Stone of this album and said that they had given it five stars or something. Can I agree with that? Well, I would say that the album deserves about three and one half stars, but not for the songs they've been playing on the radio. Should you buy it? If you want Harvest "Revisited" don't bother. If you want something relatively interesting and are willing to take a chance, borrow it first and then decide.

Newman's "got no reason"

Randy Newman

TROUBLE IN PARADISE (WARNER BROS)
Randy Newman

By DAVID CHEVAN
Collegian Staff

Alas, what once was, may never return. Randy Newman, pianist, and satarist par excellance, made the mistake several years ago of writing a song about short people. The only problem is, he hasn't written a decent song since. What compounds this problem is poor Randy's desperate desire to repeat his latter day success. This is an album of bad singles.

Trouble in Paradise does not work. There are one or two neat little ditties on this LP, but it's albums like this which give new meaning to the word fluff. Newman no longer possesses his scathingly original charm. His new album is purely an L.A. schlock product. However, when a musician is predominantly backed by players from Toto, one can hardly expect brilliant new musical statements.

Lyrics are Newman's biggest problem. He cannot decide whether to be serious or satiric. This lessens the impact of his material severely. The only two songs which work at all are Christmas in Capetown, and My Life is Good. The first song is about South African Apartheid, the second about that easily satirized L.A. lifestyle.

However, two songs do not an album make. Randy Newman needs to make a few decisions about his direction. His past work proves he can write solid satire. With any luck, he might still have a chance for a comeback.

ENGINEERING MAJORS HAVE ENOUGH STRESS WITHOUT HAVING TO WORRY ABOUT TUITION.

If one of the angles you've been studying lately is a way to pay your tuition costs, Army ROTC would like to offer some sound advice.
Apply for an Army ROTC scholarship.
Recently, we set aside hundreds of scholarships solely for engineering majors like yourself.
Each one covers full tuition, books and other supplies, and pays you up to $1,000 each school year it's in effect.
So if the stress of worrying about tuition is bending you out of shape, get some financial support. Apply for an Army ROTC scholarship today.

Also against Amherst, Laurie Keen broke her own existing record for the 200 yard breaststroke posting a time of 2:37.17.

Gina Perrone set school records for the one and three meter diving events, scoring 228.05 and 237.60 points, respectively, against Southern Connecticut.

The next meet for UMass will be at home Saturday against the Rams of the University of Rhode Island, but Turtle is looking past Rhody to a big meet coming up against the University of New Hampshire on February 11 at New Hampshire.

"That will be our next big test," said Turtle. "We want to be strong for that meet. If we take that we could go in to the New Englands 11-1."

The climax of the swim season would be a New England championship, but defending champ Boston College may have something to say about that.

UMass feeds Penn St. to the Lions

The pieces fall together as the Minutemen prevail, 86-64

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

They had their backs to the wall. They had to come up with something. They needed to put on a show.

They did.

They are the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team and if you weren't one of the 4,200 people who stood, squished, crammed and otherwise poured themselves into the Curry Hicks Cage last night then you missed the best basketball game a UMass team has played in four years.

"We played against a very good team tonight," said a more than relieved head caoch Tom McLaughlin after his Minutemen had vanquished Penn State 84-62, "and we totally dismantled them."

Dismantled may be a mild term. The local hoopsters had everything go their way as they led at halftime by five at 38-33 and then opened the floodgates by scoring 46 points to the Nittany Lions 29 in the second half.

"We might have finally arrived as a team," said an elated Donald Russell. "We had the fans behind us and that helped us to win like we did. It felt really good to blow someone out."

The win was the first Atlantic Ten victory all season, the second Minuteman 'W' since December 22 and you had to sense that, had the team dropped last night's game, there might not have been another capacity crowd in the stands for quite some time.

That will not be the case now, however. When the clock finally ticked down to zero, sealing the eventual outcome, no one had left. No one was leaving this game. It was a show.

And the show had a lot of stars. Led by Russell, who had 18 points, three assists, three steals and four rebounds, all five Minuteman starters posted double digit performances.

Edwin Green netted 15 points (four of those coming on dunks), and led UMass in rebounds with 10. He was followed by Ron Young, who started in the backcourt with Russell and scored 13 points. The forwards, Horace Neysmith and John Mempel, each had 12 points.

What the final analysis will show is that last night's win was a total team victory, a coming together of all the jumbled pieces that make up the Minutemen.

"You want to know what happened," said Neysmith, "we gelled. Donald Russell took control in the first half and kept us in the game."

"Everybody had confidence in each other," chimed in Darryl Carter, who had six points of his own.

The Minutemen jumped out early and after a Green three-point play (he was fouled), a Hempel three-point play (from three-point land) and a twisting Neysmith layup (Horace had all the moves last night), the home team led 8-3.

The Nittany Lions, who entered the game with a 7-1 league record, 14-5 overall, dug in and took the lead however, at 12:53 of the period on a Dave Griffin jumper, 12-11. Penn State then held the lead for 2:47 until Russell hit the fourth of six consecutive free throws to put UMass ahead 19-18. The Minutemen never trailed again.

The win ups the UMass overall record to 5-12 and 1-5 in the Atlantic Ten but, more importantly, it proves that the Minutement are more than capable of playing ball with any team in the conference. They proved last night that they are a team to be respected.

"The University can be proud of itself tonight," said McLaughlin.

And will the team be ready to look for its second Atlantic Ten victory over the bad men from New Jersey, Rutgers University, Saturday in the Cage?

"Hell, yeh," said Ron Washington.

Women swimmers (8-1) shoot for New Englands

By BILLY SHEA
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's swimming team is hot, running up a glossy 8-1 slate thus far this year, and coach Valerie Turtle can't help but look ahead to the Division A New England Championship meet to be held the weekend of February 25 at Springfield College.

"We're looking to do very well in the New England Championship this year," said Turtle, whose team finished seventh in a field of ten teams in last year's championship meet.

"We've had 18 swimmers qualify already and hopefully a few more will qualify by the time the next arrives," said Turtle. "We will do better this year because we have a lot of depth."

According to Turtle, the team to beat at the New England Championship meet will be the defending champions Boston College, who placed the only blemish on an otherwise perfect season for the Minutewomen swimmers.

"Boston College is tough," said Turtle. "They have a very strong team and will be tough to beat. But after them it's really up for grabs."

Boston College came to UMass January 25 and beat the Minutewomen 82-67, but Turtle wasn't discouraged as BC racked up five Boyden pool records and UMass set two school records.

Jenn Nicolai smashed Theresa Totin's seven year-old 100 meter individual medly record of 1:04.05, posting a 1:03.99 time for the 100 meters.

Elizabeth Feinberg also set a UMass record, breaking her own existing record of 1:58.47 in the 200 yard freestyle, taking the heat with a time of 1:58.27.

Aside from Boston College, UMass pretty much blew out everybody else, routing Amherst College 101-47, Southern Connecticut 97-43, and Northeastern 93-46.

Turtle feels the extra work the Minutewomen did over intersession may explain their strong performances over intersession.

"We went double sessions over intersession because we didn't have academics to be concerned with and I think it's really paying off now."

All total, the UMass swimmers posted six new school records over intersession, and numerous personal best times were logged against the powerful Eagles, so the Minutewomen are really rolling.

Against Amherst, Martha Samsel set a Boyden pool and school record for the 1650 yard freestyle, smashing Lynn Lutz's record of 19:54.65 wtih a time of 19:11.14.

Men's ski team tops in NEISC this season

By MATT LUCZKOW
Collegian Correspondent

FRANCONIA, N.H. — The University of Massachusetts men's ski team have won three of four races so far this season in the New England Intercollegiate Ski Conference and currently hold first place in the league.

At Cannon Mountain on the weekend of January 22-23, the men settled for fourth place in the slalom event on Saturday, but came back to win the giant slalom the next day.

In the slalom, Plymouth State College won the race with a team time of 548.94 seconds, (best 5 of 8 times). Amherst College took 2nd place (569.66), Boston College came in 3rd (572.75), and UMass finished 4th (586.24). Skiing for UMass and taking third and fourth were Tim Enright and Jon Segal with times of 100.39 and 100.63.

Also skiing well for UMass was Kris Vanderzee (11th place), Dave Rossi (18th), Bob Faigel (26th), and Bill Davidson (35th) finished the race, despite falling down on the course.

"The front-end of our order blew-out of the course (fell down and didn't finish the race) and we were lucky to finish as well as we did," said head ski coach Bill MacConnell. "After skiing all month on limited terrain at Berkshire East, I think the guys had some trouble adjusting to the steepness of the slope."

In the giant slalom UMass snapped back to take the win with an 11 second margin over 2nd place Boston College. The total of the best five runs for UMass was 373.01, while BC had a 384.57, and 3rd place Brown University a 385.16. Doug Karwoski from Plymouth State won the race in a time of 72.57, while Dan Conway (73.11), Brian Prindle (73.21), Jon Segal (74.23), and Tim Enright (75.20) took 2nd, 3rd, 4th and 8th place respectively for UMass. Also finishing for UMass, out of a field of 80 racers, were Bob Faigel (17), and Bill Davidson (18).

Last weekend, on two beautiful racing days at Waterville Valley, N.H. the Minutemen skied away with a clean sweep of both the slalom and giant slalom events.

In the slalom UMass had a team time of 515.39, Amherst College was second with a 548.70, and Plymouth SC came in 3rd.

Conway (100.05) won his first race of the season for UMass, while senior co-captain Brian Prindle (101.44) came in 2nd. Also skiing well for UMass were Jon Segal (6), Tim Enright (8), and Bob Faigel (11).

In the giant slalom, UMass placed 6 men in the top 15 and had 5 individual times good enough to upset 2nd place Plymouth by 3 seconds. Karwoski, from Plymouth, was 1st (79.62), VanZon from BC was 2nd (79.86), while Prindle (79.62), Conway (79.86), finished 3rd, and 4th respectively for UMass.

After two weekends and four competition events, the men's ski team is in 1st place in the NEISC league with wins over Boston College, Army, Brown University, UConn, Plymouth SC, Amherst College and Trinity College.

The men's and women's ski teams will be in action this weekend hosting a dual slalom race at Berkshire East in Charlemont, Mass. Anyone interested on watching the races are encouraged to attend.

Financial aid plan labeled "unworkable"

By RICHARD NANGLE
Collegian Staff

A proposal by the Reagan administration requiring low-income college students to finance more of their education has been labeled "unworkable" by Arthur Jackson, director of financial aid at the University of Massachusetts. The program, released in a budget document Monday would include an increase in the maximum amount a student can receive in a Pell Grant from $1800 to $3000 a year. But in order to receive any grant a student must provide either $800 or 40 percent of his college costs. (whichever is more) above what parents would be recommended to contribute.

While recommending an overall $700 million cut in education, the administration is proposing an increase of $300 million a year, to 2.7 billion, for Pell Grants (named after their original sponsor, Sen. Clairborne Pell, D-Rhode Island.)

By increasing the maximum amount a low-income student can receive in the Grant, the administration stated it is hoping to encourage more people to attend expensive private universities.

"What it is is probably a feeler at this time," Jackson said. "Reagan is seeking public opinion about this."

Reagan would like to change the emphasis of financial aid from grants to loans and work programs, Jackson said.

Jackson said if the program is implemented the only options students will have for financial aid will be to borrow from a loan network or receive a Pell Grant. He said the administration has already cut and wants to eliminate altogether the national Defense Loan Program Supplemental Grant Program and State Student Incentive Grant Program.

It s a program without a firm educational base or a firm fiscal base," Jackson said of the Reagan plan.

The amount of aid going to families with less than $12,000 in annual income would increase from 74 to 80 percent under the Reagan plan. Families earning more than $26,000 in annual income would be excluded from receiving Pell Grants.

The program is being proposed in order "to restore the traditional roles of students and families in meeting college costs," Education Secretary T.H. Bell said according to a New York Times report earlier this week.

Academic requirement changes still in limbo

Breadth of knowledge, integration of knowledge may replace cores

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

The Faculty Senate of the University of Massachusetts yesterday began debate in the final report on the General Education curriculum proposal. The Senate is scheduled to debate the proposal during the next two Senate meetings, and is expected to vote on the entire proposal on March 17.

The proposed curriculum consists of 10 courses which would be required of all undergraduates once the plan in implemented, according to a report released by the Senate Ad Hoc Committee on General Education.

According to the report, the proposed General Education Program will enable the University to "provide all students with a grounding that is both rigorous and coherent."

The goal of a university, the report states, should be to "admit and educate a large and diverse group of students." The General Education Program will help to better accomodate and educate students in a more diversified manner than currently exists, the report states.

The proposed curriculum is divided into three parts: skills, breadth of knowledge and integration of knowledge, according to the report.

The breadth of knowledge portion of the curriculum would replace the present "C", "D", and "E" core requirements. Students will be required to take at least one 4-credit course in each of the six areas comprising the breadth of knowledge portion of the proposal, according to the report.

The six breadth of knowledge areas are continuity and change, expressive culture, the individual, societies and institutions, the biological world and the physical world.

The skills part of the proposal requires undergraduates to take a three credit expository writing course during the freshman year and three credit writing course during the junior or senior year which will be within the student's major department, the report states.

The proposal also requires all undergraduates to take a quantitative reasoning course.

The Freshman Seminar "is the cornerstone of the General Education Program" the report stated. Its goal is to encourage a closer relationship between faculty and undergraduates.

The freshman seminar has been one of the most controversial parts of the proposal. Many faculty do not like the seminar idea "because it requires the involvement of a large proportion of the faculty and asks them to perform a kind of teaching with which many of them may not be familiar," according to the report.

The freshman seminar program encourages tenured faculty, rather than teaching assistants and untenured faculty, to teach smaller classes comprised of freshmen and sophomores.

Faculty Senate divided on future of proposal, discussions to continue

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

The General Education Curriculum proposal came under heavy criticism yesterday as the Faculty Senate of the University of Massachusetts began debate on the controversial program.

During heated discussion, which lasted nearly an hour, several senators expressed disapproval with the proposal which would, if passed, significantly alter undergraduate university requirements.

The proposal calls for, among other things, the elimination of the current distribution requirements which force undergraduates to elect a number of courses from "C", "D", and "E" cores.

The distribution system would be replaced by a new curriculum having three components: skills, breadth of knowledge and integration of knowledge.

David N.Ferro, associate professor of entomology, echoes the sentiments of many senators when he said the proposal, designed to be implemented over a period of seven years,"was a massive experiment which could be very costly to both students and faculty."

Funding was a major issue as several senators expressed concern over the cost of the curriculum. The proposal does not list the estimated costs of the new program.

"I am very uneasy about an absence of numbers," said Irving Howards, political science professor.

"I fail to see how the Faculty Senate can intelligently respond to it unless it has numbers," he said.

Although several senators expressed pessimism at the proposal, some openly supported the measure calling it long overdue.

"It is a time for a change. It was time for a change two or three years ago," said Fern L. Johnson, associate professor of communication studies. Chester Davis, associate professor of Afro American studies said many professors oppose the curriculum because they refuse to accept change. But, he said, a "major change needs to be made in the graduate curriculum. Davis called the present core distribution system a shambles."

Micheline Dufau, professor of Afro American studies said many professors oppose the curriculum because they refuse to accept change. But, he said, a "major change needs to be made in the undergraduate curriculum. Davis called the present core distribution system "a chambles."

Micheline Dufau, professor of French and Italian, also criticised the present core system. Dufau said as an advisor to students she has had difficulty rationalizing and explaining the current system.

"We need some kind of a system so we can explain why to students when they are taking courses," she said.

UPI suspended in Poland

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — The Communist government suspended United Press International's news operations in Poland yesterday until the official PAP news agency is allowed to reopen its office in the United States.

The action signaled further deterioration in Polish-American relations which have been cool since the Reagan administration imposed trade sanctions against Poland after the declaration of martial law in December 1981.

The suspension followed the expulsion of UPI's chief correspondent, Ruth E. Gruber, last month, and retaliatory action by the U.S. government, which ordered PAP's only American-based correspondent out of the country.

UPI's second correspondent, Polish citizen Bogdan Turek, continued filing dispatches following Miss Gruber's departure Jan. 15.

Turek said he was summoned to the Foreign Ministry and told that his accreditation had been suspended. He will be allowed to keep the UPI office open to handle administrative chores, but is barred from reporting, the Foreign Ministry said.

A spokesman for the U.S. Embassy in Warsaw said the mission "had expressed in no uncertain terms its displeasure with the arbitrary action."

The official reasons for expelling Miss Gruber were extremely ambiguous. The Polish government said she was implicated in an "espionage" case, but also described her reporting from Poland as "venemous" and called her expulsion a "warning" to other correspondents who quote supporters of the outlawed Solidarity labor movement. Miss Gruber denied the allegations.

US drug abuse declines

WASHINGTON (AP) — The epidemic of drug abuse which plagued the United States in the 1960s and 1970s is receding somewhat, the government said yesterday. Still, one out of three Americans over age 12 has tried drugs and one high school senior in 16 uses marijuana daily.

The Department of Health and Human Services released two reports, one of which said the United States probably has the highest level of illicit drug use in the industrialized world.

"Although there has been a decline in drug abuse in recent years, the decline is relatively small and we as a nation still face a serious health problem," said Dr. Edward N. Brandt, the department's assistant secretary for health.

Brandt released the results of the National Household Survey on Drug Abuse, which examined a national sample of Americans over age 12, and the High School Senior Survey.

The surveys showed that one out of three Americans over age 12 has tried some kind of illicit substance. Although the proportion of high school seniors who smoke marijuana daily has dropped from its high of more than one in 10 in 1978, the proportion remains at one senior in 16.

The use of hallucinogens like LSD, PCP and peyote continued to drop among young Americans. The use rate among young adults fell from 4 percent in 1979 to 2 percent in 1982.

Cocaine use, which spread rapidly during the late 1970s, has stabilized at 29 percent of the population aged 18 to 25, the reports said.

Marine challenges tank

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — The Israeli army said it reached an agreement with U.S. authorities yesterday reaffirming Israel's right to patrol in the area of Beirut where three Israeli tanks were challenged by a pistol-waving U.S. Marine.

There was no immediate comment from U.S. officials.

Marine Capt. Charles B. Johnson told a Beirut news conference that when he jumped on the lead tank Wednesday he grabbed the Israeli commander and told him that if the tanks wanted to advance, "You're going to have to kill me."

The Israeli commander of the tank patrol told a Tel Aviv news conference yesterday he was "rather amused" by the pistol-waving and that he told Johnson: "Don't worry, I'm not going to kill you."

Brig. Gen. Amnon, the Israeli commander who worked on the latest arrangement, told Israel radio that contrary to the expressions of concern and anger from Washington, the Americans in Beirut had admitted to him that the whole affair was "half-funny, half-sad, no more than that."

The general, whose last name was not given for security reasons, said the Americans told him the Marine officer acted under the mistaken impression that the Israeli tanks were headed for Marine-controlled territory.

An Israeli army communique said that at a meeting between Amnon and a U.S. diplomat, it was reaffirmed that the north-south Beirut railroad was the eastern perimeter of Marine territory, and that the area east of that, including the scene of Wednesday's dispute, was open to Israeli patrols.

It said the zones "will be marked in the field by colored barrels to prevent any future misunderstanding."

The Israelis professed to be mystified at what a spokesman called "this so-called incident, this non-event."

Ghana fears violence as thousands flock into country

ACCRA, Ghana (AP) — Deportees from Nigeria yesterday poured into transit camps already jammed with exhausted Ghanaians suffering from food shortages, illness and the rigors of their long trip home.

The sudden flood of returning Ghanaians raised government concerns that violence will add to the misery of the estimated half-million that have reached the camps.

Commodore S.G. Obimbeh, coordinator of the repatriation task force, said authorities would not tolerate "acts of violence or unruly behavior."

Obimbeh said he saw a group of newly arrived deportees set fire to a man in Accra for allegedly attempting to steal a cassette recorder.

The Ghanaians went to oil-rich Nigeria in the mid-1970s to get work and make some money. On Jan. 17 Nigeria, hit by the drop in oil prices, ordered the expulsion of an estimated 2 million illegal aliens — half of them said to be Ghanaians.

The Ghanaian government has not given official figures on the number now back home. But Interior Minister Johnny Hansen told reporters in the Nigerian capital of Lagos on Wednesday that "about half a million" of the expelled 1 million Ghanaians had returned.

He described the mass return as a "national crisis."

Pope John Paul II called for an urgent and adequate solution to the expulsions, Vatican Radio reported. The broadcast said the Nigerian decision created a "grave, incredible drama" and that the pontiff has instructed Roman Catholic relief organizations to extend immediate humanitarian aid to the deportees.

In London, Nigeria's high commissioner, or ambassador, defended his country's decision to expel the aliens, saying the scale of the expulsions was far smaller than similar events in European history. He did not specify which events he meant.

Selection of new dean announced by Duffey

By JIM FINKLE
Collegian Staff

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey announced the appointment of Murray M. Schwartz as dean of humanities and fine arts at the University of Massachusetts at yesterday's Faculty Senate Meeting.

Schwartz currently works for the State University of New York at Buffalo as dean of colleges, director for the Center for the Psychological Study of the Arts, professor of English, and clinical associate professor of psychiatry.

"He has a number of years of experience in administration and as a dean at a University of the size and composition of this one," Duffey said of the appointment. "He has the background and determination to be a forceful advocate for the humanities."

Duffey also praised the work of outgoing dean Jeremiah M. Allen, who served as dean since 1970. "The impressive quality of the humanities and the fine arts is largely due to Jeremiah Allen's efforts and we are in his debt," Duffey told the Faculty Senate.

"I think he (Schwartz) is highly qualified and should do a good job as dean," Allen said. He said he has met Schwartz and spoken with him about the appointment.

Allen commented on the challenges Schwartz would face.

"For the next few years, his biggest challenge is going to be to try to deal with inadequate resources," Allen said. He said that while the number of faculty members in the humanities and fine arts has decreased from 406 ten years ago to 360 now, the number of programs under that jurisdiction has doubled from 10 to 20.

"Our resources have been spread pretty thin," Allen said, "but the programs themselves are strong."

Allen said a recent study cited UMass as having one of the top ten graduate programs in linguistics in the country. The departments of English, French and Italian, Germanic languages and literatures, history, philosophy and Spanish and Portuguese were also ranked highly, Allen said.

Acting linguistics department head Elisabeth O. Selkirk met and interviewed Schwartz while he visited the campus as a candidate last semester.

"He has a lot of very good ideas about new things to do to help generate a good atmosphere for faculty and learning," she said.

She said she thinks he will be able to obtain funds to increase the size of the faculty.

"We need a strong advocate for the faculty," she said. "I think he is aware of that and can carry that out."

Schwartz looks toward added emphasis on arts

By JIM FINKLE
Collegian Staff

Incoming Dean of Humanities and Fine Arts Murray M. Schwartz will make sure his departments receive proper funding, he said in a telephone interview last night.

Schwartz, 40, said the University must recognize that while it increases programs in the sciences, the humanities still remain an integral part of any education.

"I will insist on the vital connection between the humanities and these areas," Schwartz said. "It's a question of how the total education process will occur." Support for the humanities is not necessarily an either/or choice."

Schwartz, who begins work as dean this summer, said he was attracted to UMass because he feels it is one of the best schools in the country.

"UMass/Amherst has the potential to be one of the veryfew best public universities in the country." Schwartz said.

To realize that potential, Schwartz said he will try to improve the quality of the faculty. "They (the faculty) are already excellent, but there is a potential to making it even better," he said.

He will place emphasis on undergraduate education "I have a very strong interest in undergraduate general education," he said.

He said he was impressed by the work of the Faculty Senate's ad hoc committee on General Education. "They are a step ahead of most other public universities," Schwartz said.

Schwartz said his excitement over the job was shadowed by the fact that he does not know who will serve as vice chancellor for academic affairs and provost after Loren Baritz steps down in June.

Schwartz, an honors graduate of the University of Rochester with a doctorate and masters degree in English from the University of California at Berkeley, is recognized for his work on psychoanalysis and Shakespeare.

Nomination papers out Monday for S.G.A. posts

By MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Staff

Nomination papers for the Student Government Association (SGA) spring election will be available beginning Monday for the offices of SGA President, Campus Center Board of Governors and the Residential Committee, marking the start of a month-long campaign.

Candidates who wish to appear on the ballot must return the notarized papers by 3 p.m. Friday, Feb. 18. Candidates for the office of SGA President will also receive campaign funds from the SGA.

The SGA President also serves as a voting member of the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees. Although either one or two persons may run for the office of president, only one person may serve as Trustee.

Normally, candidates for the office of SGA President are granted $250 for campaign costs, such as posters and advertising. However, if more than six candidates file nomination papers, a total pool of $1,500 is divided evenly among the candidates, according to the SGA constitution. Candidates may not use any other campaign funds.

Elections will be held on March 7 and 8. If no candidate receives one-third of the total vote, a runoff election is held between the two top vote-getters later in March. The SGA President takes office on April 1.

Campus Center Board of Governors members are elected at the same time, but the Board is a separate governing agency, overseeing the Campus Center/Student Union complex and all related activities. Representatives are elected from each residential area and several positions represent the entire campus.

The Residential Committee monitors activities related to the dormitories, dealing particularly with the Residence Hall Contract each student must sign each year.

Two representatives are elected from Southwest and one from each of the other four residential areas.

Protest of Salvadoran aid takes unique twist

Mock troops seize key positions around campus, casualities small

By GLEN GOLDSTEIN
Collegian Correspondent

It appeared that El Salvador National Guard members temporarily seized control yesterday of the Whitmore Administration Building, the Blue Wall, the Campus Center Coffee Shop and the Student Union's Commonwealth Room.

The Guard, actually members of the Western Massachusetts Latin America Solidarity Committee (WMLASC), and the Northampton Committee on El Salvador, marched across campus, seizing voluntary prisoners along the way.

Dressed in military outfits and brandishing wooden guns, the group stopped to salute the Whitmore building before entering.

The presentation was in response to a re-certification statement issued by President Reagan on Jan. 21 which said that the Salvadoran government had made significant gains in human rights. This qualifies the Salvadoran government for additional U.S. military aid.

"We're not looking for applause," said a member of the guerilla theater group, "we just want to make people think."

"We're not trying to confront people, just shake them up," Pete Bohmer, a member of the group and a student of economics at the University of Massachusetts said.

After marching down the Whitmore hallway, the Guard seized an El Salvadoran peasant in the Whitmore Coffee Shop.

Guerrilla theatre players march towards Whitmore Administration Building after taking other players prisoner from the Coffee Shop and Student Union Building.

The peasant, played by one of the group members, screamed to be set free.

A military figure holding a sign identifying him as "El Salvadoran National Guard" demanded, "Where's your loyalty?"

"Where's my husband?" the peasant answered. "You dragged him off months ago."

"Silence!" said one of the guards.

"There will be silence soon enough," another guard said.

The soldiers marched in place. Their footsteps echoed throught the quiet audience of coffee shop customers and curious passers-by.

"My name is Maria Isabella Gonzales," said the peasant woman. "On Oct. 14, 1982 I was seized by the El Salvadoran National Guard. Thousands have been taken over the past three years," she added.

This violence is paid for by you, with your tax dollars. Stop the aid to El Salvador," she said.

The peasant and a woman who tried to protest her seizure were dragged away by the actors.

Both of the groups involved in yesterday's presentations on campus were also involved in a sit-in at the U.S. Army recruiting office in Northampton Jan. 25, where 18 protesters were arrested, and a protest at the office of U.S. Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R-Mass.

Director sought to head UMass office devoted to institutional research

By JIM FINKLE
Collegian Staff

Creation of the new Office of Institutional Research at the University of Massachusetts is a necessary step the University must take to become one of the nation's top universities, according to an administration official.

UMass is currently searching for a director of the office of Institutional Research. The office will be responsible for compiling and correllating data pertaining to all of the University's activities, according to Bryan Harvey, an assistant to the chancellor.

Based upon the recommendations of the task force, Duffey initiated plans to establish the UMass office of institutional research by requesting that engineering professor Richard J. Giglio organize a search committee to find a director for the office.

"It is something you must have to move an institution forward," Harvey said. "It's a prerequisite."

Duffey began to set up the office on the recommendation of a task force he established on institutional research. The task force was established by Duffey to look at the current configuration of institutional research at UMass as performed by the Office of Planning and Budget. It was requested to look for efficient ways to coordinate this research, according to Assistant Chancellor Deirdre A. Ling.

The task force recommended that Duffey remove the institutional research functions from the Office of Planning and Budget because the budget "overshadows" the office's ability to perform other duties, Harvey said. "They have difficulty concentrating on other things," he said. Based upon the recommendations of the task force, Duffey initiated plans to establish the UMass Office of Institutional Research by requesting that engineering Professor Richard J. Giglio organize a search committee to find a director for the office. That director will report directly to Assistant Chancellor Ling.

The office will produce reports the University needs for its own use as well as various compliance reports and applications to government agencies, Harvey said.

"When you have a staff in the business of interpreting and researching data they will know of all similar research on campus," Harvey said. In the past, departments have been unaware of internal research conducted on campus, he said. Without a central office coordinating research, it is possible that two departments may spend time obtaining data that may have already been collected, correllated and interpreted.

Harvey said the office will enable the University administration to make better management decisions because they will have the best possible data from which to make those decisions.

The University is advertising the position through the Sunday New York Times, the Chronicle of Higher Education, the placement service of the Association of Institutional Research and has mailed the advertisement to predominantly black colleges around the country, Harvey said. The job's salary range is between $30,000 and $43,000.

Students uninjured in auto mishap

Two University of Massachusetts students escaped injury early yesterday morning when an automobile driven by Lori A. Dandini, a resident of Leominster, reportedly backed into them in a downtown Amherst parking lot, Amherst police said.

Charles Lonardo, 22, and Lisa Mielli, 21, exited Poor Richard's nightclub at 1:20 a.m. yesterday and were returning to their car which was parked across Route 9 at a service staton when the mishap occurred.

Lonardo and Mielli were treated at the UMass infirmary where Lonardo received stitches in his arm and was then released, police said.

Dandini was later found by police driving her car on North Pleasant St. She told police she was uncertain whether she hit the pedestrians, police said. No citations have been issued. The matter is still under investigation.

SGA bookstore project dumped

By TAMI BORTON
Collegian Staff

A plan devised by the Student Government Association (SGA) at the University of Massachusetts to offer economics textbooks at reduced prices did not materialize because of communication problems, said SGA president Jim Murphy.

Another hindrance to implementation of the plan is that Kenny Abert, assistant to Murphy who was working on the plan did not return to school this semester.

The operation would have run on a non-profit basis as an alternative to the Textbook Annex, according to Murphy. The Reading Remedy Bookstore in Amherst was approached by Abert and asked to supply the textbooks.

"The decision not to do it was more of a logistical concern than anything else," Murphy said. "The people from the Reading Remedy didn't want to do it gratis."

However, Eleanor Levine, owner of the Reading Remedy, said she was never asked to distribute books, only order them. "It was my understanding they (the SGA) were to supply the labor," she said.

Discount Books, a company from Darien, Ct. which sells textbooks on campus, was also approached by the SGA and had planned to supply the texts, Scott Kellogg, proprietor, said.

"We were more than willing — the increased volume allows us to purchase books from our publishers at lower prices," Kellogg said.

"The SGA never got any response from the economics department," Ron Keefe, chairman of the Board of Governors said. "The project didn't come together this semester because of this, but it may in the future."

The SGA sentiment is that the Annex prices are too high, according to Murphy.

"I'm behind Discount Books," he said. "Anything to undercut the Textbook Annex is okay by me."

Annex profits, which amount to $150,000 annually, return to the Campus Center, Win Cummings, manager of the University Store said.

"Any Campus Center profits help keep student fees down," he said.

"What is happening is the profits from the Annex are being used to subsidize losing operations in the Campus Center when the emphasis should be in correcting these losses," Keefe said. "Then we wouldn't need the surplus and the Annex could reduce their prices."

Keefe supports the SGA plan.

"It needs work, but a student run bookstore is a good idea," he said.

Dukakis pushes rent assistance

BOSTON — The Dukakis administration took emergency action yesterday to more than double the amount of rent arrearages that can be advanced for welfare recipients — up to $1,245 annually.

The plan was outlined at an informational meeting of the Legislature's Committee on Human Services and the Elderly.

Ranking appointees of Gov. Michael S. Dukakis said the priorities for the administration include care for the homeless, curbing child abuse and controlling escalating hospital costs.

Philip W. Johnston, director of human services and until last month a member of the legislative committee, revealed the new emergency assistance regulations.

Johnston said several thousand families will be aided by the extra rent assistance, although no total dollar estimate was available. The current budget for emergency assistance is $3 million, officials said.

Richard Dolan of the Deparment of Public Welfare said later that the funds apply to the Aid to Families with Dependent Children program. He said previous regulations allowed rental assistance in certain situations up to $500.

Drinking age no deterrent to teens

BOSTON — Massachusetts teen-agers appeared to be drinking as much as ever despite the state's raised drinking age of 20, according to a Boston University survey comparing them to their New York state counterparts who still can imbibe legally at 18.

However, some highway deaths associated with drinking were down over the first two years of the raised age, judging by a decline in the number of 18- and 19-year-old Massachusetts drivers involved in fatal, single-car, nighttime crashes, reports the survey in the February issue of the American Journal of Public Health.

But the decline was partly made up by an unexplained increase of 16-and 17-year-old drivers involved in thesame category of fatal crashes, according to the study by the School of Public Health at Boston University School of Medicine.

Massachusetts teen-agers were compared with New Yorkers to see if any change in drinking habits could be directly attributed to the raised age, said Dr. Ralph W. Hingson, the study's project director.

"No significant changes were observed...relative to New York in the proportion of surveyed teen-agers who reported that they drank, or in the volume of their consumption," the survey concluded.

Students sit-in to save teacher's job

HARTFORD, Conn. — About 40 students held a two-hour sit-in yesterday in the office of Trinity College vice president Thomas Smith to protest what they say is an attempt to fire a black, female history professor.

The students, members of the Trinity Coalition of Blacks, ended their sit-in when they were allowed to speak with the chairman of the history department, Theodore Sloan.

Coalition president Russell Hall said the professor, Dr. Johnetta Richards, is an asset to the small, private college where she has taught for four years. Trinity has 1,885 students and 135 faculty members.

"Dr. Richards offers a unique way of looking at the content of her courses," Hall said. "We believe that, traditionally, history has given us a partial or distorted view of the contributions of Africans in both American and world history.

"Dr. Richards' mode of instruction sheds a positive light on the significance of Africans in history," Hall said.

The group also said that there is just one black teaching at Trinity this semester. There are four black professors, but three, including Ms. Richards, are on sabbatical leave. Minortiy students comprise 6 1/2 percent of the student body.

More testimony in widow's

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. — Further medical testimony was presented yesterday in a young Ware widow's $1 million lawsuit against the town.

Debbie Irwin, 23, claims in the Hampshire Superior Court suit that Ware police should have detained Donald Fuller, 19, of Monson when they stopped him driving away from a local nightcub at 2 a.m. on May 14, 1978. A few minutes later, Fuller's car careened off a telephone pole and collided with the Irwin's car.

Mrs. Irwin's husband, Mark, 19, her daugher, Misty Jane, 18 months and Fuller were killed in the crash.

The town maintains that the two officers stopped Fuller because he was driving too fast and released him with a warning, because he didn't appear intoxicated.

Yesterday, Dr. Abraham Traub, a plastic surgeon from Longmeadow, described the skull fracture and extensive scalp wounds Mrs. Irwin's son, Steven, then 3, suffered in the crash. The boy, who was hospitalized 8 days, has 16 inches of permanent scars on his scalp, Traub said.

Boston 18 wheeler hit by gunfire

BOSTON — Two shots believed fired from a pickup truck struck a tractor-trailer rig driving west in Natick on the Massachusetts Turnpike in at least the second violent incident in the state linked to the independent truckers strike, the State Police said.

"There were no injuries," State Police Dispatcher Paul McNealey said. "There were two shots, one hit the trailer and another the cab."

He said the shots came from a pickup truck on the turnpike, about 22 miles west of Boston.

"The driver continued on until he came to a service area and then he pulled over and called the police," said McNealey.

The shots were fired about 7:15 p.m., he said. Investigators were seeking more details.

Homeless find shelter above popular nightspot

By NEIL FOOHEY
Collegian Correspondent

A woman who was sleeping in the doorway of A.J. Hastings stationery store on South Pleasant St. because she had no home typified the need for an emergency shelter in Amherst in late 1981.

"She was pregnant and her baby was born deaf and blind. That shook me and made me determined that we needed a place like Prospect House as soon as possible," said Kathey Bennet, the original chairperson of Amherst Emergency Shelter Inc.

Prospect House,located in a wing of the Village Inn, home of the Drake, is a temporary overnight shelter for homeless individuals and families.

Between April and December of 1981 there were 970 homeless people in Hampshire County and over 200 of these listed their last address in Amherst, according to Deborah Friedman, the only paid staff person at Prospect House.

Prospect House was started by Amherst Emergency Shelter Inc. after they solicited $10,000 from the Amherst Town Meeting, $1000 from Hampshire County United Way and donations from area churches, service clubs and businesses.

"A bare-bones annual budget of $32,000 was assesed to cover the cost of rent, a coordinator and operating expenses. When a little over half of that was raised, we hired Deborah Friedman," Bennet said.

Prospect House volunteer Jane Fleishman stands in the house's kitchen in front of canned food which is purchased for 10 cents a pound from a food warehouse in Hadley.

Friedman is responsible for recruiting and supervising volunteers and interns, handling administrative duties, and working as an advocate with shelter residents.

"The residents have to solve their own problems," Friedman said, "but we can help them to use resources available to them."

Prospect House holds training sessions for volunteers. The training sessions include an orientation to shelter policies and regulations and training in assertiveness, listening, first aid, and discussion of "the myths and realities about poverty and homelessness."

Probably the worst myth about the homeless is that they are predominately alcoholics. This just isn't true,"Bennet said.

The shelter is located in the Village Inn, a bar which Bennet concedes has had a bad reputation in the past. Bennet attributed the choice or location to expediency because the wing of the Village Inn was already properly zoned, required no substantial renovations and was affordable.

The shelter may be more acceptable to the community since the Drake is already associated with transients, Friedman said. However she said that there is very little negative reaction or misunderstanding in the community about the shelter or it s proximity to the bar.

Included in Prospect House policy is an admission process designed to screen prospective residents for compatibility with shelter regulations. These regulations prohibit drugs and alcohol on the premises. Residents found under the influence of drugs or alcohol will be asked to leave, according to the regulations.

"If someone comes looking for help but appears to have a drug, alcohol or serious psychological problem, rather than admit them to the shelter, we'll call one of the area social service agencies or hospitals and try to get them help for their specific problem" said Joe Belec, a volunteer at Prospect House.

Belec said he remembers the two "horrible" years he spent on the streets in the early '70's. Regardless of the alcohol myth, the biggest problem in the shelter is the anxiety which comes over residents when the 14-day maximum stay expires and they have found no solution to their homelessness.

"Debbie can and will grant extensions when warranted," Belec said. "But those run out too and then they're faced with having to leave but having no place to go."

Twenty-three percent of those who stayed at the shelter are considered to have found a home and another 26 percent have found a temporary place, Friedman said.

Approximately 16 percent of former Prospect House residents faced the dilemma Belec described and were forced to go "back to the streets." Another 15 percent are categorized as having left the area and 20 percent as unknown.

A big disappointment for everyone involved with Prospect House seems to be that they just cannot help everyone find a home, Friedman said.

Friedman, Belec and Bennet all listed the shelter's meager budget as a major obstacle. Particularly affected are families with children. Although homeless families were an original priority of the shelter, according to Bennet, Prospect House records show a trend of more use by individuals. However, the shelter's admittance policy gives preference to families.

Constraints of the cramped and public site of the shelter and the solitary paid staff person make a 24-hour shelter impossible, although it is apparent that this would be better for families with children, Friedman said.

Neither Friedmen, Belec, nor Bennet believe that a bigger budget for the shelter will solve the area growing homelessness problem. Friedman and Belec blame Reagan administration policies and budget cuts for the worsening homelessness problem.

High area rents and the mandatory first and last months rent and security deposit are major factors in the area's homelessness problem, Bennet said.

"I think somehow the area's landlords have to develop some sort of morality,"she said.

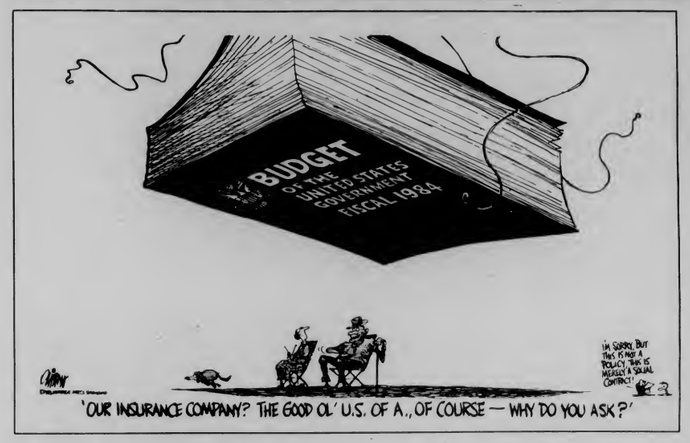
EDITORIAL/OPINION



An Administration in trouble?

Sandwiched around an interesting if not predictable State of the Union Address were two flagrant examples of an administration in trouble. Both examples were perpetrated by the "Great Communicator" himself, President Ronald Reagan.

The first occurred ten days before the address. Reagan called a press conference to announce that his administration was not, in fact, "in disarray." These labels surfaced after his abrupt firing of Eugene Rostowskis chief arms negotiator. He then went on to propose an arms negotiation treaty with the Soviet Union to prove his administration's good intentions for peace on earth. All this was obviously timed to be overshadowed by what was upcoming in the hope that people would forget what had just transpired and focus on the glitter and the glory of the President's midterm oral report.

The whole point of the trip was to emphasize White House support for the high-tech industry. It was meant to be an uneventful day of touring computer plants in Roxbury and Bedford. It wasn't.

The President broke up the monotony initially by making a trip to the Eire Pub in Dorchester, a "men's bar." Then after putting a beer under his belt and shuttling off to Bedford he once again gave himself athlete's mouth.

"I'll probably kick myself for saying this," he said, "but when are we all going to have the courage to point out that in our tax structure with the corporate tax, it's very hard to justify its existence."

And there it was for all the networks to report and all the people to see and hear with their own ears, the true feelings of Ronald Wilson Reagan. The painful truth that the President simply cares less about the poor than he does the rich was once again evident. The Boston Phoenix summed things up the best.

"All of Ronald Reagan's worst political traits — carelessness, self-indulgence, and impulsive speech — had combined to do him in. He communicated, all right, but the message he gave was that he is indeed out of control."

His aides naturally downplayed the remark, but that only served to further the belief among some people that Reagan is not running the show, that he does not make most of the decisions in Washington.

Whatever the problem, Reagan is making it difficult for his own or any Republican's presidential victory in 1984. By then we will not be better off than we were four years previous, and besides,' Jimmy Carter didn't say nearly as many dumb things as Reagan has.

Rich Nangle is a Collegian columnist.

Rich Nangle

His address was full of the usual Reagan rhetoric designed to focus on the personality rather than the issues. Since this has always been Reagan's strength, he gave the usual pep-talk.

"The problems we inherited were more than those inside or outside of government expected."

"Thanks to the courage and strength of our people America is on the mend."

And, "Americans can still pull together for the common good."

We were subjected to yet another boost for tax credits for private schools and school prayer with Ronnie telling us that God should never have been expelled from America's classrooms. And in a time when world hunger is a major problem, he called to farmers to reduce their crop outputs in order to receive government awards.

Just when it appeared that the President was not going to touch the unemployment issue, he unveiled a plan for increasing the amount of summer jobs that could be obtained. That plan, of course, is for a sub-minimum wage for teenagers.

Through all the uneventfulness of the speech, Reagan may well have succeeded in getting people to forget some of his problems by introducing new "solutions." Why, people may have even forgotten his gem of a few weeks ago when he reminded some reporters that for every one person who is unemployed, there are nine others who are working. Still, all might have been well and good if Reagan had chosen this year to be the one when he would refrain from putting his foot in his mouth. He didn't. For the day after the State of the Union Address he made his ill-fated trip to Boston.

Letters

Comic criticism very unfunny

To the Editor:

Ring in the new semester! It has officially begun. No semester would truly be official without letters complaining about the various and sundry comic strips printed in the Daily Collegian.

We agree with Mr. Slarsky's contention that UMass is a viable institution of higher learning. We even agree that many of the strips are idiotic. This is obvious. But it is disheartening and most annoying to turn to the Op/Ed page day after day, semester after semester, hoping for some thoughtful opinions on meaningful issues only to find column upon column of insipid letters from every possible individual and organization complaining about the comics.

It's overplayed. Give it a rest.

Amherst today, gone tomorrow

Last Sunday, while watching re-runs of Batman on Channel 38, I got a sudden urge to be kind to my housemates and decided to make a quick trip downtown for Pepsi and donuts.

At first it seemed to be a normal trip, down East Hadley Road to Route 116, and up 116 to town, but as I crossed over the hill by Amherst College, I realized this was no normal trip.

The lines were back.

Downtown Amherst was crowded with cars, big Ford station wagons piled full with clothes and bundles, pick-up trucks with their beds crammed with furniture, and the occasional Datsun or Toyota trying to zip through the crowd and beat the light.

Scott Hersey

After spending what seemed to be a blissfully quiet six weeks in a town that barely resembled the Amherst I had been used to, I had totally forgotten about the mass confusion that school brings to Amherst.

During a vacation, Amherst undergoes a transformation that Dr. Frankenstein would envy.

The town changes from a crowded, vibrant place, alive with students and the energy they bring, to a small New England town, quiet and unassuming.

Did you know that during a vacation it's possible to drive from Amherst College to the UMass Campus in less than 15 minutes, and you don't have to jockey for position like the beginning of the Indy 500?

Did you know that if you have to go to campus it's actually possible to get a parking space at the Horseshoe in front of Whitmore or any of the other UMass lots?

Against my better judgement, I decided to forge ahead and attempt to get to my bank downtown so I could get some money out of the machine.

It was hopeless. I was competing against very determined fathers and mothers, who obviously had their minds set on getting their children to school and nobody, but nobody, was going to stop them.

Wild eyed, and clutching the steering wheel till my fingers turned white, I eventually made my way back home alive, and decided that I wouldn't leave my house for the rest of the day.

I was convinced that next night, however, to go out and join some friends at the Drake. Now over vacation I had spent quite a bit of time patronizing Amherst's various bars and I foolishly expected that they would be the same as they were earlier that week and the week before that.

I was wrong.

Did you know that during a vacation it is possible to go to the Drake or the Pub on a Thursday or Friday night and there are no lines for the bar or the bathroom?

And did you know that it is possible to get the bartenders attention without waving a flag, lighting a flare or pushing your way through the crowd to get to the front of the line?

The Drake was mobbed. Everyone seemed to have the same idea, go downtown, grab a beer and say hello to everyone they hadn't seen in six weeks.

It was getting to be too much for me to handle — to go from peace and tranquility to chaos in only a few short hours. I had to get away from it all.

As I hurriedly left the Drake, a thought came to mind. I would head for the mall and the relative peace of it's video arcade.

It would be perfect. I could get out all my frustrations on the Tempest machine and get away from the relative confusion of downtown Amherst.

The only problem was that the arcade was mobbed too. Seemingly every regular video nut had gone without a fix for the whole vacation, and had to head for the mall to waste a few quick quarters.

Did you know that its possible to play a video game or a game of pool without having to deal with lines of people three deep waiting to play the game and a pile of quarters already on the machine?

Did you know that it is actually possible to walk through the Campus Center without the broken field running ability of O.J. Simpson?

Well now I think I know why most longtime Amherst residents seem to hate us. We come in and disrupt the quiet and peaceful character of their town and take it over 10 months per year.

So don't get me wrong. I really want to wish everyone a hearty "Welcome back" and hope they have a great spring.

Just keep it down to a dull roar please.

No, J-Geils isn't returning, but once again many students camped out in the Student Union building awaiting morning ticket sales. This time, however, the people who spent the night lined up outside Union Records Unlimited wanted to insure that they got seats to Phil Collins, who will be appearing at the Fine Arts Center on Thursday, February 17. Collins, who is an ex-member of Genesis, will be backed by his band The Fabulous Jacuzzis & One Neat Guy. The show has not sold out, and Union Records will resume selling tickets at 10 a.m. today. Tickets cost 11.50, 10.50, (UMass students), and 12.50, 11.50 (general public). There is a limit of two tickets per person.

LIVE EVIL (Warner Bros.)
Black Sabbath
By DAVE CHEVAN
Collegian Staff

Ozzy, Ozzy, Ozzy! Where are you when we need you most? Sure, Ronnie James Dio has a heavy metal voice, but Oz, we both know that you are the throat of Black Sabbath. Have you heard what your old buddies are up to lately? Well, all I can say is they've released some pretty mediocre material since you left. First there was Heaven and Hell, then Mob Rules. Now they've raided the cellars for a live album that would embarass even the biggest Sabbath fans.

First of all Oz, most of the material on the album is from the early days; "War Pigs, "Paranoid", and "Iron Man". Guess what? Ronnie James cannot do it. Sure he knows the words, but the inflections are all wrong. Besides, Tony Iommi must have been drunk. His solos are all out in left field. It's too bad; do you remember the good old days, Oz? God, Iommi was awesome! Between you and me, AC/DC is just a sham of you guys on an off night.

The new stuff (since you left) sounds better, but only because the band knows how to sing and play their instruments. If you ask me Oz, I think anyone who wants a Sabbath album should go for the old greatest hits disc, We Sold Our Souls For Rock And Roll. For the meantime, I'm going to bite off the nearest pigeon's head, and listen to your latest LP.

To celebrate Eubie Blake's 100th birthday this month, pianist Nigel Coxe (right) will present a program of Blake's works. The free concert will take place at Bezanson Recital Hall on February 12, at 8:00 p.m.

Trailers

by Andy Gordon

Welcome back, film buffs. It should be a good, if not slow, semester for movies. Post-Christmas is always slow for new releases; the major studios usually stick their big pictures into the profitable summer and Christmas seasons and save the smaller and more specialized films for around this time.

Opening today natiowide is Without a Trace for which Twentieth Century-Fox, God bless them, sent us eighty passes for. Unfortunately, the passes were for the University Theatre in Amherst, New York. But it's the thought that counts. The film stars Kate Nelligan as a Columbia University professor whose six-year-old son disappears on the way to school one day. Nelligan, who starred in last year's Eye of the Needle, is aided in her plight by detective Judd Hirsch. Producer Stanley Jaffe (Kramer vs. Kramer, Taps), makes his directorial debut.

Also new from Twentieth Century is The Man from Snowy Mountain, which is "the heroic tale of a mountain boy's passage into manhood." Tom Burlinson won the title role over 2,000 others and Sigrid Thornton is the girl he develops a relationship with.

Kate Nelligan stars as the mother of a six-year-old boy (Danny Corkill) who suddenly disappears in Without A Trace.

Margot Kidder and Robert Hays star as lovers in Jerry Leider's production of Trenchcoat.

Kirk Douglas has a dual role as Burlinson's late father and the rancher who gives him a job. The film, which was shot entirely in Australia, was directed by George Miller (not to be confused with the Australian film director George Miller). It should hit the area sometime next month.

Also on the way is Trenchcoat, a comedy/mystery which stars Margot Kidder as an aspiring mystery writer who goes to the Mediterranean to research her next novel. Along the way she becomes embroiled in more conspiracy and intrigue than seems possible to fit into the film's 90 minute running time. Also on hand are Robert Hayes (Airplane) as a love interest and Ronald Lacy (the nasty Nazi in Raiders of the Lost Ark) as a nasty transvestite. The picture is being released by Buena Vista (A.K.A. Walt Disney), though it appears to be laced with sex and violence. It was shot on location in Malta.

Local Best Bets: Videodrome starts today at the Mountain Farms 4. I'm not quite sure how to describe the film, but it promises to be intense. An indictment of video and its potential horrors, it stars James Woods and Debbie Harry. Director David Cronenberg (Scanners) worked on the film for more than two years.

The Amherst Cinema tonight and tomorrow has a Mr. Sensitive festival with Alan Alda's The Four Seasons and The Seduction of Joe Tynan. The Academy of Music is showing Moonlighting.

On campus, the Blue Wall is showing Meatballs tomorrow night and a Peter Sellers double feature of Being There and Murder by Death on Wednesday and Thursday. These films are free.

Trivia: 80 passes to last night's screeing of Without a Trace to the first person to identify the following movie characters-- Ned Racine, Felix Garmer, Atouk, Earl Keese.

Sophie a good Choice

Streeps finest performance yet

SOPHIE'S CHOICE
Written and directed by Alan J. Pakula

By ANDREA MILLSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Alan J. Pakula's film version of William Styron's acclaimed novel Sophie's Choice is the kind of movie which pieces guilt, deceit, love, friendship, and courage into one complex and enthralling puzzle.

Two auto-biographical stories are actually woven into one dynamic saga. Stingo (Peter MacNicol), a naive aspiring writer from Virginia, has come to Brooklyn for solitude to complete his first novel and to combat the conflicts of the sexual frustration of the 40's. His solitude and life are ruptured when he meets Sophie (Meryl Streep), a beautiful and vulnerable Polish emigrant who is desperately trying to survive her disturbing past in Auschwitz.

The emotional, courageous, and fragile Sophie has captured the love and attention of both Stingo and Nathan (Kevin Kline), her eccentric lover who helps and destroys her. Nathan and Stingo become both friends and enemies as Sophie becomes the centerpiece in their lives. Through terrifying flashbacks, Sophie's truths are filtered through the eyes of Stingo, and he only wants to shield this mysterious woman he passionately loves from further pain. However, in the end it is Sophie's guilt which leads to her fate.

The intensity of this movie is as powerful as the acting. The inter-woven adventure and relationships in this charismatic trip sparks every human emotion. From the first scene to the last, the audience shares Sophie, Stingo, and Nathan's pains and joys as well as empathisizes with their hidden secrets and lies.

Meryl Streep superbly conquers the complex and difficult role of Sophie. In addition to the Brooklyn scenes, there are entire flashback sequences in Polish and German dialogue. Streep has not only transformed Styron's fictional Sophie into a real character, but has mastered both languages which contributes to the film's authenticity.

Sophie's Choice is a landmark film for director Alan J. Pakula, and for Meryl Streep and Kevin Kline who are at the peak of their powers. Kline's performance is enigmatic and entertaining and Streep is simply outstandiong. Sophie's Choice depicts innocence and guilt, courage and fear. For those who were mesmerized by the book, the movie will definitely knock you out.

Meryl Streep, star of Sophie's Choice.

"Pond Series" is one of the prints by Mike Toole on display at the Frame Shop art gallery in Amherst.

Toole paints the town

MICK TOOLE
Pastel drawings
Frame Shop art gallery, Amherst
Thru February 5

By MARY BETH HEBERT
Collegian Staff

The walls of the Frame Shop art gallery on 7 Main Street, Amherst are currently covered with the pastel drawings and collages of Mick Toole, a 24-year-old Amherst resident.

Students and others familiar with Amherst life will readily recognize a glimpse of last Spring's "Pond Series" or yet another rainy day in Amherst. Those with an active social life will note that one bar scene in particular bears a striking resemblance to the Rusty Nail in Sunderland.

Toole explains, "I try to express in a modern way the lifestyles I see people living." Toole added that most of his work is geared toward a young audience.

Many of Toole's drawings are crowd scenes. In all cases, particular attention has been paid to details, and one can almost always pick out something new that was missed before when carefully scrutinizing his work. Bars and parties are also favorite subjects for Toole. In these, he uses very dark backgrounds so that the figures in the scene, who are usually dressed very brightly, are in sharp contrast.

Stylistically, the works on display (they are also for sale), are a cross between the impressionistic and expressive schools of art. Earlier artists who have experimented with similar techniques are Degas, a major influence in Toole's work.

Although Toole will be leaving the area soon to attend the Corcoran School of Art in Washington D.C., his work will still be available to the public. The "Pond Series" drawing is currently being printed as a poster and should be available at the University Store in a few months.

Arms director appointee says nuclear war has no winners

WASHINGTON (AP) — Kenneth L. Adelman, fighting for his confirmation as arms control director, said yesterday the administration will make a decision by mid-February on two test ban treaties that have languished since the mid-1970's.

Adelman, testifying before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, also apologized for being "overly cautious" last week when he told the committee that he hadn't thought about such issues as whether a nuclear was was winnable.

It isn't, he testified yesterday.

Adelman, nominated to head the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, raised criticism with his lack of answers last week, and Committee Chairman Charles Percy had threatened to hold up his nomination until the administration moved on the two test ban treaties.

In yesterday's testimony, Adelman had answers. He said a nuclear war, even if limited at the outset, would spread because "pressures would be toward escalation." Previously he said he hadn't thought about it.

"There would be no winners in a nuclear war," he said, although he declined to explicitly say that the United States couldn't "prevail" in such a conflict.

On whether the United States or the Soviet Union could survive a major nuclear war, Adelman said, "No...It would change the fundamental nature of the world, the fundamental nature of human life. It would be such a cataclysmic event that it would be horrendous."

His answers to the two questions brought praise from Percy, who said they were "much more satisfactory" than his earlier testimony. However, several Democratic senators continued to say they would probably vote against confirmation.

Adelman went a long way to ease Percy's doubts by promising that the administration would sent up its recommendations on the two arms control treaties by the end of the Lincoln Day recess on Feb. 14.

He didn't indicate whether the administration will recommend that the Senate approve or disapprove the treaties with the Soviet Un... but Percy said he was "extremely pleased" that the administration would act.

Officials have said the administration wants to renegotiate the 1974 Threshold Test Ban Treaty and the 1976 Peaceful Nuclear Explosions Treaty to make compliance more verifiable. The treaties, which prohibit test explosion of more than 150 kilotons, were negotiated during the Nixon and Ford administrations.

Investigation continues in $1.5 million marijuana heist

BARNSTABLE, Mass. (AP)

Three more suspects were arraigned yesterday in the 1981 heist of 50 bales of marijuana from the South Yarmouth state police barracks, authorities said yesterday.

A total of eight people — including veteran state police Lt. Chester W. Campbell Jr. — have now been indicted on various charges in the disappearance of the 3,450 pounds of marijuana, estimated to have a street value of $1.5 million, First Assistant District Attorney W. James O'Neill said.

"It's been a long, hard investigation," said O'Neill, who has been searching for Campbell and other fugitive suspects in the case since the Barnstable County grand jury handed down the first group of four indictments in October 1981.

"We still hope to find the people who received the marijuana ultimately," he said.

Three of the four people indicted in the second wave of charges Wednesday had surrended to authorities.

Swim team splashes its way to big victory

By KEVIN DELUCA
Collegian Staff

As any true sports fan knows, a team's record is not necessarily indicative of how good they are. An example from professional sports would be the 4-5 Giants of football, who, with a little luck could have been 7-2. An equally relevent example from amateur athletics is the University of Massachusetts men's swim team.

The team's record is only 2-5, however, three of those defeats came against the top three teams in New England. Besides, things are looking up.

Wednesday night the men's swim squad left the University of Connecticut with a very impressive triumph over the Huskies. The 68-45 victory was truly a team effort.

All of the following swimmers took first place in each of their particular events.

With all of his hard work really paying off, Phil Surette won the 200 meter individual medley in 2:06.17, one of his best times ever.

Paul McNeil won that grueling test of endurance and versatility, the 1000 meter free-style, in a time of 10:21.35.

In the 200 meter free-style, Chris Porter showed his talent by winning in 1:49.42.

Showing himself to be the Houston McTear of swimming, Brian Spellman won both "sprints", the 50 and 100 meter events, in times of 22.49 and 49.66, respectively.

In that most difficult of swimming strokes, the butterfly (at least it is for me), Chris Clarke fluttered the 200 meters in 2:03.64.

In the 200 meter breast stroke (no comment), Tom Lowery was the victor in a time of 2:19.85.

In the diving events, our only victory was provided by Pat Mullen in the one meter dive. He totaled 190.5 points.

The team also was victorious in the 400 meter free-style. Mark Surette, Rich Plunkett, Spellman, and Porter achieved a combined time of 3:19.64.

The next meet is home this Saturday versus Vermont, which coach Russ Yarworth expects the squad to win. Then there is the big meet against New Hampshire at home next Wednesday at 7:00 p.m.

Minutemen looking to slay Knights

Rutgers comes to Cage

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

"Don't give me none of your aggravation, 'cause Saturday night's alright for fightin' get a little action in..." Elton John

Say what you want about the cross-New England rivalries between the University of Massachusetts and URI, UNH and UConn. Talk about the tradition, honor and hatred (pretty strong word, ey?) that exists when any of these schools get together.

But, if you really want to see a rivalry, then bring your carcass to the Curry Hicks Cage on Saturday night at 7:30 p.m. and then you will see a rivalry.

Saturday, the bad men from New Jersey (which exit?), the Scarlet Knights of Rutgers University will take the floor against the Minutemen in an Atlantic Ten matchup and, make no mistake about it, there is no love lost between these two teams.

The last clash against Rutgers saw the Minutemen drop a very tough 79-67 decision down in the Rutgers Athletic Center in what turned out to be more than a basketball game.

Midway through the first period, in that contest Rutgers coach Tom Young and sophomore forward Bobby Braun had words. Words were enough to clear both benches as a potential eruption brewed for several minutes before order was finally restored and the game went on.

This was not the only incident that took place during the course of that long afternoon. On several occasions, tempers flared and things were pushed to the brink of chaos. No, these two teams do not like each other at all.

And, Minuteman basketball fans will most likely remember the 41-40 sqeaker that the Scarlet Knights eked out in their last visit to the Cage on February 16 of last year. When that battle came to a close, a Rutgers player decided to continue the war and proceeded to jump the bench and assault a UMass fan who had been harrassing him from behind the bench. Whether or not the fan had provoked the attack by shooting his mouth off is still a mystery but, the incident is remembered.

Yes, things could get pretty tough on the hardwood this Saturday night.

And, if UMass was every ready for a battle, it is this upcoming game. Not only do the Minutemen remember the aforementioned losses (UMass has lost the last ten games between the two squads) but they are also coming off what could very well be the biggest Massachusetts victory in the past four or five years.

Everything fell into place this past Wednesday night for the MInutemen as they completely dominated a Penn State team that was considered to be one of the best of the Atlantic Ten entries in the league.

The local team, led by a stellar performance by sophomore guard Donald Russell, broke open a close contest with the Nittany Lions in the second half of Wednesday's game to pull away to an easy 84-62 victory.

Penn State had come into the game with a 7-1 league record and including a win over UMass. The Minutemen, who had been struggling all season long to put together a total team effort, were able to gel and the Lions were vanquished.

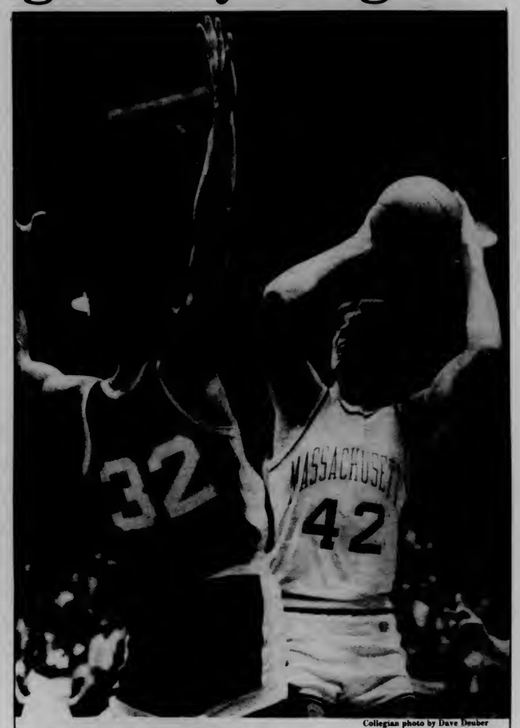
The big question now is: Will UMass be able to continue to play with the same 40 minute intensity that proved to be the difference in the Penn State game?

Will a ruthless Rutgers University invade the Cage and try to once again take control of the locals?

Will Bobby Braun and Rutgers coach Tom Young have words again?

Will the battle turn into a war?

For the answers to these and other questions, tune yourself in to the Curry Hicks Cage Saturday night at 7:30 p.m. and wear a helmet.



Collegian photo by Dave Deuber

Bobby Braun will be looking for a little revenge himself when Rutgers comes to the Cage tomorrow night.

Men gymnasts travel to East Stroudsberg

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

After a 14 point loss to Navy last Saturday, the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team is looking forward to getting back into the win column tomorrow as it travels to Pennsylvania to meet East Stroudsburg.

According to coach Roy Johnson, the team is looking better and have been working on spots that they had trouble with against Navy. Coming off the loss, the team is a little more geared up for the meet.

"The meet will be a lot closer than people think," Vault and still ring specialist Tony Sbarra said. "If we can come back and beat East Stroudsburt it will be a bigger win. We need some good performances from some people that we didn't get against Navy."

Johnson said UMass is the better team on pommel horse, parallel bars and still rings, but fives the edge to East Stroudsburg in floor and vaulting. East Stroudsburg in floor and vaulting. East Stroudsburg is a power tumbling team and has two gymnasts who rank among the top colleges in the nation in the floor event. An expecially springy floor helps Stroudsburg out but the advantage should also lean in the favor of UMass which is used to tumbling on the hard floor mat in Boyden gym.

Stroudsburg and plan to make it another victory this year.

"We've been having some pretty good workouts and the team as a whole looks good," senior John Macurdy said. "They're (Stroudsburg) a team a lot like us. They have a lot of talent in all around and a couple of good specialists."

There will be one lineup change for the Minutemen tomorrow. Freshman Joe DeMarco will be going in place of co-captain John McGonagle who can't make the trip. DeMarco will be performing in the still rings and floor event.

"I'm hoping to hit, I'm planning on it," DeMarco said. "I'll do the best I can. I don't have the big tricks that John has (in rings). I can go 9.0 if I hit. I'd be happy if I did."

DeMarco, although a freshman, has performed before in Stroudsburg at the International Gymnastics Camp which is run by Bruno Klaus, coach of the East Stroudsburg team. Still, there is a little pressure.

"I'll probably be a little nervous," DeMarco said. "I don't want to lose, especially if I'm in the line up. It's my first important meet and I'm glad it's at somewhere I've been before."

Johnson doesn't plan on a repeat performance of the Navy match and said for the team to beat Stroudsburg, they have to work hard and hit their moves.

"They missed things that they sometimes missed in practice, Johnson said of the team's performance in the Navy meet. "But they all missed them at the same time. We're going to have to hit our tricks and routines to win."

New Hampshire downs Minutemen grapplers

By STEVE FITZ
Collegian Correspondent

It's been a long season for the University of Massachusetts wrestling team.

After suffering through eight consecutive losses the grapplers managed a 25-25 tie against the University of New Hampshire, Wednesday night in Durham, New Hampshire.

"We have four consistent wrestlers, but the rest of the team is inconsistent," coach Rick Freitas said.

Freitas pointed to wins by 150-pounder Mike Bossi, 167-pounder Dave McEntee, and 177-pounder Scott McQuaide as highlights of the match.

McQuaide wrestled an exciting match and eventually pinned his opponent.

"The only bright spots over intersession were Brian O'Boyle, McEntee, McQuaide, and John Butto. Bossi also wrestled well for us over break," Freitas said.

O'Boyle sports a 19-6 record and has lost only once in a dual meet competition.

That loss was to Bill Dalackek, a Division III All-American from Southern Connecticut.

"O'Boyle is having an outstanding season," Freitas said.

In the MIT tournament, UMass had three place winners; O'Boyle finished fourth, McEntee finished second, and McQuaide finished third.

At the C.W. Post tourney Butto finished second.

New England Conference All-Star team will have three UMass representatives in O'Boyle, McEntee, and McQuaide.

According to coach Freitas, O'Boyle, McEntee, McQuaide, and Butto should be some of the higher seeds in the New England University Wrestling Association Championships at Boston University, February 26-27.

In order to qualify for the NCAA championships they have to finish first, or can go as a wildcard if they finish second or third.

The Minuteman grapplers are looking ahead to next year.

They only lose McEntee to graduation and should have several new recruits next year.

Coach Freitas has been travelling around the state to different tournaments and high school matches. UMass's setting and low tuition have been helpful in recruiting according to Freitas.

"We've done a lot of recruiting, and it's been going good, up to 50 kids are interested in UMass," Freitas said.

Freitas is looking to have 20-30 freshmen apply for next fall.

"We're the most active school in the state as far as recruiting is concerned. Out of state recruiting has been tough though," Freitas said.

The matmen have five matches remaining and hope to improve on their 0-8-1 record.

Tonight they host Springfield at 7:30 in Boyden gym, and Saturday they travel to Boston College to take on the Eagles.

Survey shows satisfaction at five colleges

By PAUL DESMOND
Collegian Correspondent

Students at the University of Massachusets are more satisfied with their overall college experiences than students at two of the five area colleges, according to a survey of the colleges released last December.

The survey, conducted by the Student Affairs Research and Evaulation Office (SAREO) at UMass, began last spring when questionnaires were mailed to a random sampling of students at each of the five colleges. Questions covered a wide variety of areas including: academic and non-academic experiences; adjustment to college life; services and resources; and student concerns and optimism for the future.

While many of the responses were predictably different, given the diversity of the five colleges, others were surprisingly similar.

William Weitzer of SAREO said he was pleased that all five colleges participated in 1982, something that has only happened "off and on" since UMass began the survey eight years ago.

He said the survey proved that "students show comparable levels of satisfaction at a number of levels."

For example, at least 80 percent of the students at each college said they were either "satisfied" or "very satisfied" with their overall college experience.

Thirty-nine percent of Hampshire College students said, however, that they have seriously considered transferring to a different institution.

Only 13.6 percent of Amherst College students have harbored such thoughts while 21.3 percent of UMass students admitted to the possibility of transferring.

Those figures concur almost perfectly with the proportion of students who said they were satisfied with the social life at their school. Amherst College students boast 84.9 percent satisfaction with social life while UMass students are close with an

Town election nominations in for spring

By NANCY GONTER
Collegian Staff

Four candidates have announced their intention to run for the two vacant seats on the Amherst Board of Selectmen in the April 5 town elections.

Friday's deadline for filing nominations brought a rush of last minute activity, including a challenge to Town Moderator William F. Field. Field, the University of Massachusetts dean of students, will be seeking his 12th one-year term as moderator.

Filing on Friday for selectman were Joanne R. Levenson, of 630 West St. and Vincent O'Connor, of 73A Pine St., who will join Allen A. Torrey, of 1110 South East St. and Frederick W. Steinbeck, the incumbent, of 218 Harkness Road. The four will be running for two three year terms.

Levenson, the director of off-campus housing at UMass, is an advocate of tenants rights and has worked for the passage of rent control.

O'Connor, who has been a member of town meeting, resigned that position in October after six years of service. O'Connor has been active in Amherst government, working on issues of bicycle safety and zoning.

Allen Torrey, Amherst's first town manager, is now the treasurer and business manager of Hampshire College. Torrey, who is also a town meeting member, announced his candidacy last week.

Steinbeck, who is a building contractor, announced his candidacy for re-election last month. He was elected in a special election in November of 1981, and considers himself a fiscal conservative. He said he would be working on several issues if re-elected, including planning for a new police station.

Francesca Maltese, whose term expires in April, has chosen not to seek re-election.

Three candidates have announced their candidacy for the Amherst School Committee. Casey Clark, of 27 Birchcroft Lane, will run for re-election against Peter J. Murphy, of 53 Rolling Ridge Road, and Karin Winter, of 120 Rolling Ridge Road.

Price increases no deterrent to beer drinkers

By KEN BAZINET
Collegian Staff

One of this semester's busiest weekends for local package stores has come and gone, and despite radical increases in the cost of beer, consumption by University of Massachusetts students has not changed.

Students waited in long lines at Amherst's package stores to pay as much as $13 for a case of Budweiser plus the $1.20 for deposit on the now mandatory returnable bottles.

"There hasn't been a change in our business," Jerry Russell, manager of Russell's package store, said Saturday. "But we haven't been getting many returnable bottles back."

Russell will not have to worry about getting his bottles back, according to several UMass students, who told the Collegian that as soon as enough accumulate, they will be returned.

Several students are treating the bottle law as a business opportunity. They plan to collect bottles and cans throughout the campus and dorms, and hope they can stay ahead of the price increases.

The students said they are concerned with the increase in the cost of a case of beer which is as high as $3, not including the $1.20 for deposit on the bottles. Some package stores are charging an additional 30 cents for the cardboard box which contains the bottles or cans.

"The store owners and distributors think it's a good time to mark up the prices," said Peter Sinibaldi, a sophmore resident of Washington Tower. "The prices are very high and (the students) are getting screwed over."

Several students said they were expecting the price increase, but questioned whether it is because the industry is striking out against the people of the state for approving the bottle law, or if the industry is passing on the cost of renovating plants to accomodate the returning bottles.

"People don't understand why the prices have gone up," said Drew McLeod, a freshman living in Washington. "When the bottle bill was introduced, I don't think people knew about an increase. It has hit (the students) the hardest."

Russell said the increase is coming from the distributors. "I'm curious to find out what increase the wholesalers are taking," he said. "(The wholesalers) are turning around and saying the increase is coming from the brewers. I don't think so."

Some students and the store owners agreed they would support a repeal of the bottle law, should a movement to do so begin. Many students said they would choose to return to the $9 case of Budweiser at the expense of cleaner neighborhoods and highways, which proponents of the law said they feared most.

The Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MASSPirg), a strong proponent of the law, said the cost increase is unjustifiable.

"Boycott the national brands and just buy the local brands," said Lisa DeCaviolis, chair of Umass/Pirg. "The distributors are making fools of us."

Two Milton police officers shot in 'unprovoked attack'

MILTON (AP) — A Milton man charged with shooting two police officers in what authorities called a unprovoked attack was being held without bail before arraignment today on assault charges.

Milton police oficer Paul Nolan was shot early Saturday after he stopped his cruiser when he thought he heard a rock hit it, said officer Kevin Mearn.

Nolan was shot in the arm and leg when he approached a man standing between two homes on Central Avenue, police said. He was listed in stable condition at Milton Hospital yesterday after surgery, according to officer Vincent Maglio.

Officer Charles Paris, who also was shot when he responded to Nolan's call for help, was treated and released from the hospital.

"It was shocking to us," said Lt. David Macdonald. "It was a totally unprovoked attack with no warning whatsoever. We were lucky."

Nolan would have been shot three times but for the portable radio on his hip, which stopped one slug, Macdonald said.

Milton police arrested Francis Cullen Jr., 40, of Milton after a scuffle at the scene of the shooting. He was charged with assault and battery with intent to murder and illegal possession of a handgun, Macdonald said.

Cullen was held without bail for a hearing today in Quincy District Court.

Macdonald said Cullen lives at 340 Central Ave., next door to the shooting scene, and a few houses from the scene of an attempted break-in.

US official to support higher military aid in Korean trip

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz, signaling North Korea of U.S. determination to defend the south, meets with President Chun Doo-hwan today and flies to the demilitarized zone to "pay my respects" to U.S. troops guarding the frontier.

Shultz will don army fatigues and a steel helmet for the visit to Camp Red Cloud and Camp Liberty on the DMZ dividing North and South Korea.

"The principle objective of my visit is to reaffirm and support our security arrangements with Korea and also to pay my respects to the U.S. troops who are are stationed there," Shultz told reporters as his U.S. Air Force jet flew from Peking to Seoul yesterday.

There have been periodic proposals and preliminary steps suggested for the reunification of the Korean peninsula nearly 30 years after the armistice that ended the Korean War in 1953.

But Shultz said he had no "real reaction" to a current proposal that would seat both Korean governments in the United Nations. Shultz said that in the past North Korea has "preemptorily rejected" such proposals.

In his first meeting here, Shultz told Foreign Minister Lee Bum-suk that the Reagan administration will work hard to obtain restoration of $70 million cut from a South Korean military aid program cut by Congress. President Reagan had asked for $210 million but Congress appropriated $140 million.

In Korea, as he did in Japan and China, Shultz criticized the arms control proposal by Soviet Party leader Yuri V. Andropov, which Shultz said would result in redeployment of mediumrange missiles in Asia.

Shultz told reporters before arriving here that he found that the areas of agreement between the United States and China "appear to be much greater than the areas of disagreement."

"Basically we wish to restore a useful dialogue with the Chinese leadership and to use that dialogue to help us in building a stable and enduring relationship based on mutual trust and mutual benefit," Shultz said.

Shultz opened his South Korean visit by laying a floral wreath on a towering shaft honoring war dead at the South Korean National Cemetery.

He said he came to South Korea "with an open agenda," prepared to respond to whatever concerns the South Korean government may have.

Shultz praised South Korea's actions to permit more political freedom but said he would not mention the subject in further public statements here because "we have to work these things out through quiet and non-public diplomacy."

Troop strength on the Korean peninsula includes between 600,000 to 650,000 South Koreans, about 39,000 Americans and an estimated 800,000 North Koreans.

Shultz said he believes there is a "satisfactory status quo" in terms of the numbers of U.S. forces and programs here.

Black ambassador criticizes Reagan

BOSTON — The Reagan administration has turned black ambassadors into an "endangered species," the head of the TransAfrica Support Group's Boston chapter contends.

"This is the time when there are very few black Americans actually serving as ambassadors anywhere in the ranks," said Willard R. Johnson, MIT professor at a meeting of the group. "We never had a great number, but we are an endangered species under the present circumstances."

Johnson, president of TransAfrica, spoke Saturday at the group's "Ambassador Weekend" at the Harvard Law School.

Fifteen black U.S. ambassadors attended, including former United Nations Ambassadors Andrew Young and Donald McHenry. About 300 people gathered to hear them discuss U.S. foreign policy.

Walter C. Carrington, former ambassador to Senegal, called for changes in the Reagan administration's approach to the Third World. He said the Reagan administration should develop closer relations with Zimbabwe, for example, rather than dismissing the African nation as a "Soviet puppet."

Indians stranded in sea of red mud

WINDOW ROCK, Ariz. — For seven days, Ellis Peterson and her 4-year old grandson were marooned with only bread to eat in their hogan here on the Navajo reservation, where the only travel is by helicopter because of shoe-sucking red mud.

The 53-year-old woman and her orphaned grandson, Billie, had only a 20-pound bag of flour — from which she had been making bread — and were out of drinking water when the Arizona Army National Guard helicopter arrived Saturday with supplies.

Some of Mrs. Peterson's 20 sheep, including two newborns, died even though she took them into her 10-foot by 10-foot log home, eight miles from tribal headquarters. Fuel was low for the ancient pot-bellied stove, the only heat to combat the cold that rises from the raw dirt floor.

Lebanese fight through blizzard

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Christian and Druse militiamen battled with grenades, artillery and rockets during a blizzard in Lebanon's central mountains Sunday, killing at least five people and setting several houses afire, police said.

A few stray rounds of smallarms bullets landed near U.S. Marine peacekeepers deployed in the Beirut airport area, but caused no injuries. But an Italian member of the multinational force had a leg amputated Saturday after a cluster bomb he thought was inert exploded while he was taking it to demolition experts, an Italian spokesman said.

In other developments, the death toll climbed to 22 in the bombing of a PLO building in Beirut, a guerrilla blast slightly wounded the Israeli tank commander confronted by a pistolwaving U.S. Marine last week, and Israeli military officials put out a story that the Marine had alcohol on his breath.

U.S. military spokesmen called the story "absolutely false."

Police said renewed Christian-Druse battles flared during heavy snowfall in the central mountain towns of Aley, Souk el-Gharb and Aitat, about eight miles southeast of Beirut.

The Christian Phalange Party, political arm of the militia which cooperated with Israel's invasion army against the Palestine Liberation Organization last summer, accused Israel for the first time publicly of supporting the Phalangists' Druse opponents.

"Israeli forces are preventing our forces from confronting attacks mounted against us by Druse socialists in Aley," said the Phalangist-controlled Voice of Free Lebanon radio. "Socialists are attacking from Israeli lines."

Bostonian wins Colorado Lottery

DENVER (AP) — The luck of the Irish proved good for Brian McLaughlin, who flew here from Boston for his brother's wedding and won $10,000 in the Colorado lottery.

The groom, John McLaughlin, took Brian and their sister, Maryann, on a tour of Denver's nightspots after Brian arrived Friday night.

"Being Bostonian and Irish, I told Brian I would show him where we celebrate St. Patrick's Day and we went to Duffy's," John explained. He bought two Colorado lottery tickets and gave one to Brian.

It was the first lottery ticket Brian, 26, said he had ever scratched.

"It took a while for it to sink in, but then the whole bar started applauding," said Brian, who is an insurance company supervisor. "It was really a thrill."

Brian, who lives in the Brighton section of Boston split his winnings with his brother and sister. He said he may use some of his winnings to pay off a new car. He also said he has been thinking about running for a seat on the city council and the money "would come in handy to help my campaign."

Six hospitalized in Chinatown

BOSTON (AP) — Four children and two adults were hospitalized early yesterday — one in serious condition — after they were found unconscious, apparently overcome by carbon monoxide, at an apartment in the city's Chinatown section.

A mother, her daughter and twin sons, another woman, and a visiting girl were taken by ambulances when a neighbor reportedly discovered them about 2 a.m., police said.

Lisa Ng, 31, and Kim Lok Yee, 61, were both listed in fair condition in the intensive care unit at Boston City Hospital, according to central administrator Chris Catino.

Ms. Catino said carbon monoxide poisoning was suspected.

"It seems to be what they're leaning toward from their blood levels," she said about hospital tests. "A nurse said it (the carbon monoxide) could have been from a stove because there was a lot of cooking going on."

James Boylan, a spokesman at New England Medical Center, said toxicology tests confirmed that 6-year-old Jennifer Ng, another child found unconscious, was overcome by carbon monoxide poisoning. She was listed in satisfactory condition.

Twin boys, Jack and Gary Ng, 4, were listed in stable condition in pediatric intensive care at Massachusetts General Hospital, according to Harry Harding, emergency ward administrator.

Dukakis names advisor for Educational Affairs

Former education task force chair will coordinate education policy

By KEVIN BOWE
Collegian Staff

Governor Michael S. Dukakis named a cabinet advisor for educational matters Friday, fulfilling a campaign promise he made last year.

Gerald R. Indelicato, 36, dean of undergraduate studies at Worcester State College was named as Special Assistant for Educational Affairs.

Indelicato will coordinate education policy for Dukakis and will serve as the liasion between the Governor's office and the educational community in Massachusetts, said Dukakis spokesperson Richard Gureghian.

"This state's economic future depends on the quality of our education," Dukakis said at a press conference held Friday. "No area of state government plays so vital a role, and underscores so many of our diverse economic needs, as the quality of education in our state."

Indelicato chaired Dukakis' education task force during the campaign for the governorship. The task force advised Dukakis on educational policy affecting kindergarten through post-graduate studies.

Dukakis, Indelicato said at the press conference, "will play a critical role in the educational policy...of our Commonwealth."

"The economic recovery of Massachusetts is the number one priority of this administration, and preparing our working people for the economy of the future will rest squarely on the success of education in this state," he said.

Indelicato, a graduate of Bridgewater State College and the University of Connecticut, taught in the Brockton public school system, where he served as an assistant principal.

He was director of a community education program before he served as a bureau chief for the Massachusetts Department of Education Bureau of Community Education and Adult Services, where he administered $16 million in federal and state grants.

He has been the dean of undergraduate studies at Worcester State College since 1981. He was responsible for the coordination of 26 academic departments which enroll 3500 undergraduate students.

Speaker emphasizes status of black leaders in politics

By MARY BALDWIN
Collegian Staff

The problem with politics is not that women are ineffective, but that there just are not enough of them, said Yvonne Braithwaite Burke, a former member of the California House of Representatives during a lecture Friday evening at Smith College.

Burke, an attorney and member of the University of California Board of Regents, said during her speech on "Black Women and Politics", that Reagan has not appointed any black women to a major post in the administration.

"For this first time we have a president who has erased black women from the face of the earth," she said.

Burke said the best step into politics for women is through staff positions, internships and consulting positions.

"This is the way today, because you get acquainted with many sources and people and you know how you raise money," she said. "Graduate school, where you see the loss of black enrollment, is the key to policy making."

Burke said the new politician is younger, more educated and richer and therefore politics are changing. "The decline of machine politics is one of the strongest things that will get women to move in the political direction," she said.

Burke said she believes there will be an emergence of black women as mayors and on the national ticket.

"Women have concentrated their political power at the local level. It's been difficult for women to move up to higher echelons of power. The same with black men," Burke said.

Referring to the status of black women, Burke said, "What we see is a growing number of black women who are heads of households. More and more, black women have responsibility for both children and jobs."

"This means black women have growing responsibility. They are involved with community," she said.

Burke, stressing that social change is needed and will come about when the economy improves, said, "as you increase employment you increase minority employment. We need to push for an economic policy that assures black jobs and provides adequate opportunity. We can no longer isolate people.

"We need a strategy to stimulate the entire nation," she said. "We need new social ideas that go to the heart of social change."

Security – inconvenience that beats living at home

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

Housing security at the University of Massachusetts is probably one of the least expensive kinds of insurance around today.

For $15.99 a year, a sum paid indirectly through dormitory rates, students receive the benefits of a security system composed of evening receptionists, roving supervisors and an administration based in the Department of Public Safety.

Security is an "absolutely" essential service at the University, said Robert L. Campbell, associate director of Housing Services. Without it, the dorms would be "wide open to all kinds of unrestricted antisocial activity," he said.

The current system was developed by students in the 1970's when vandalism and wandering strangers in the dorms became a problem, and no security system was in operation to handle it, said Housing Security Office Director Carol Radzik.

"(Security was) reinstated as a student force — a system to keep strangers out of buildings and damages down," she said. The students' "loosely organized" system was controlled by Housing Services until 1979 when the UMass Police took over, she said.

Bob Campbell, a former UMass student, explained the unfairness and technicalities of security in the period before co-ed living came into existence, in 1969-70 and before the current system was formed.

"The male dorms were not locked up," he said, while females had to be in at a prescribed hour — 10 p.m. on weeknights and some later time on weekends.

"They (the women) had to be back at that time or they were given various sundry duties (such as) handling security duties the next weekend," he said.

There were also no men allowed in the corridors of female dorms, Campbell continued.

"There were 'date rooms' where someone would call up your date (to tell her you'd arrived.) If you desired to stay (in), you sat on the couch where everyone could see you." And of course, no one touched each other in those days, he added.

"The system was unfair to women — it didn't exact the same standards (for men and women)," Campbell said. "They let the young men run around without boundaries.

Once dormitories became co-ed, however, no security system was in operation.

The feeling among students at that time was "we don't need security anymore — the boys are in the dorms to protect the girls," said Radzik, also a former UMass student.

The dorms became a "24 hour open house — open to anybody," Campbell said. It was at this time that vandalism and strangers in dorms became a problem, and students united to protect their property, Radzik said.

Under the current system, student receptionists who check ID's, sign in guests, report strangers and are prepared to handle emergencies are the backbone of the current system.

In one instance Radzik mentioned, a receptionist reported the strange behavior of several individuals who were later apprehended by police in a stolen vehicle full of stolen goods.

More typical of a busy night, however, are hassles encountered by security personnel from "drunks not wanting to show their key" or sign in guests, she said.

A saying framed in Radzik's office sums it all up: "Security may not be convenient, but it beats living at home."

81.9 percent level. Smith and Mt. Holyoke were slightly further behind with 77.3 and 75 percent satisfaction levels.

Although Smith and Mt. Holyoke students were somewhat behind in social life, they do appear to be eating well. Students at the two schools reported 79.7 and 79.1 percent, respectively, that they were either satisfied or very satisfied with food services. UMass, Amherst and Hampshire were behind in this category ranging from only 50.3 percent (UMass) to 52.9 percent (Hampshire) of students expressing satisfaction.

Bad ratings in the food service department are a "tradition" at UMass, according to Weitzer, but not because the food is actually that poor. "That's just the type of question students like to answer negatively," he said. Research in that area alone, as opposed to part of a larger survey, has shown UMass food services to rate much higher, Weitzer said.

Do those who eat well also do well academically? At first glance the answer appears to be "yes" since Mt. Holyoke students showed the greatest amount of satisfaction with their overall academic experience with 91.6 percent satisfied. But Smith students contradict the theory by showing the second lowest level of overall satisfaction (80 percent). The least satisfied students academically are at UMass, where only 73.9 percent say they are satisfied.

However, 73.9 percent is "still a fairly high level of academic satisfaction," according to Weitzer. "Given the price (of a UMass education),if we can satisfy that proportion we're doing pretty well." Weitzer explained that among seniors alone satisfaction with academic experience was about 80 percent.

Despite their relatively low level of academic satisfaction, almost 9 of 10 UMass students (89.5 percent) still had an optimistic outlook for their personal future, even though only 83.3 percent were optimistic about their occupational future.

Hampshire College students were slightly more optimistic in both categories than UMass students. Mt. Holyoke came out in front again in the optimism category with 96.5 percent optimistic about their personal futures and 91.9 percent optimistic about their occupational futures. Smith is again in the cellar with 79.3 percent personally optimistic and 73.3 percent occupationally optimistic. The question was not asked at Amherst.

Want more figures?

"Isolation" category: 51.7 percent of Smith students feel isolated to at least "some extent;" Amherst, 45.5 percent; UMass, 39.0 percent; Mt. Holyoke, 26.5 percent. The question was not asked at Hampshire.

Wondering which of the five colleges is the lonliest? Well, 66.6 percent of Hampshire College students reported feelings of loneliness to at least "some extent." Amherst is next with 48.3 percent with Mt. Holyoke close behind with 47.6 percent. If you are one of the 38 percent of UMass students who reported feeling lonely, cheer up, at least you're not at Hampshire. You may be curious about how many Smith College women are feeling lonely. We may never know. They weren't asked.

Finally, let's examine the "distrust of others" category. Mt. Holyoke shows the most trusting students with 29.2 percent reporting they distrust others to "some extent." Smith was next at 45.9 percent, then Amherst with 49.1 percent while 51.1 percent of UMass students said they distrust others somewhat. Hampshire College reports that 54.5 percent of their students distrusted others.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Debate on admission criteria

Proposed changes are equitable

A great deal has been written about the decline of academic standards in the nation's public schools. According to a recent survey, 27 states are grappling with the problem of high school graduates who are inadequately prepared for college.

For too long, too many of out schools have taken a laissez-faire approach to academic requirements, allowing students to elect whatever smorgasbord of courses they wished. The nation's colleges and universities have been partners in bringing about this decline. By not requiring students to meet entrance requirements, they have condoned a lack of preparedness.

All responsible educators agree that the situation should be corrected as quickly as possible. The Board of Regents seeks a solution to this most pressing problem that is in keeping with the Regent's emphasis on access and quality.

John B. Duff

Under this proposed plan, students who plan to enter college must be adequately prepared in English, mathematics and science. The standards will be phased in over a four to five year period to allow school districts ample time to prepare for the changes. Such changes will not only benefit students continuing on to post secondary education, but also will help those who plan to enter the work force following graduation.

Recent studies have shown that appropriate courses and increased homework have raised student grades in general; the positive effect has been even greater for minority students. Increased focus on preparedness also results in better performance on SAT scores for minority students.

Robert Spillane, Superintendent of Boston Schools, in testimony before the Board of Regents' subcommittee for Academic Affairs, observed that a high school diploma had become a meaningless document in the United States — nothing more than an empty reward for four years of education.

The Boston superintendent also noted that Massachusetts is one of the few states in the nation without standards of education established for the elementary and secondary schools. Spillane praised the Regents for introducing a proposal that will set minimum admission standards at the state's four year colleges and universities. "You are actually doing us a service...you are on the right track...you are holding our feet to the fire," he said.

A unique aspect of the proposed standards is the provision for a clear and assured path through the community colleges for students who can benefit from a university or college education, but who are in need of additional preparation after high school. Public colleges and universities will reserve a certain percentage of their seats for community college transfers. A task force is currently developing procedures which will assure a smoother flow of students from community colleges to baccalaureate institutions.

Furthermore, these standards will apply to students entering the public institutions directly from high school. For other entering students, institutions will develop special criteria which will be approved by the Board of Regents. This criteria will insure admission of older non-traditional students, the educationally or otherwise disadvantaged students as well as those with special talents.

In the public discussion of the admission standards the issue of racism has been raised. Racism is a false issue in the case of the proposed admission standards, but legitimate concerns must be confronted honestly in order to eliminate demagoguery, clear up misconceptions, and correct misinformation. The Board of Regents is determined to improve access for minority students. The Regents are also determined to keep them in school and see that they graduate. With the introduction of minimum standards for admissions, the retention rate of all students should significantly improve, for it has happened elsewhere in the United States where admission standards have been implemented.

The Regents believe that the establishment of standards will reaffirm the academic expectations for college bound students and provide needed leverage to high school counselors and teachers who strive to prepare students for college. But before any standards are voted or implemented, representatives of the Board of Regents and staff, will discuss the proposal with interested groups across Massachusetts. Concerns will be heard, suggestions solicited and opinions will be evaluated.

As Chancellor of higher education in Massachusetts, it is my conviction both personally and professionally, that the establishment of standards will reaffirm the academic expectations for college bound students and help achieve our twin goals of access and quality.

John B. Duff is Chancellor for Higher Education in Massachusetts

Admission standards show bias

The University of Massachusetts believes in admissions standards.

The University has applied such standards, of course, for decades. That's why we are obliged to turn away thousands of applicants every year. That's why our student body's average SAT Scores are as high as they are. And that's why our students move on to successful work in graduate and professional schools and in the job market.

Obviously, however, admissions standards ought to bring state-of-the-art precision to measuring what such standards are supposed to measure; namely, a student's academic competence.

Our current standards, we believe, tied as they are to a student's actual academic performance in the full four years of high school, meet the test of state-of-the-art precision.

David C. Knapp

The standards drawn up by the staff of the Board of Regents, however, even though they are well-meant, clearly flunk the precision test.

Whatever these proposed standards would measure, it is not academic competence.

Because they are imprecise, moreover, they are unfair.

If the proposed standards are adopted, then they would require a student to do two things in order to gain admission to one of the four public university campuses in the state: score 800 or more on the combined SATs and show a class rank in the top 40 percent.

There would also be an alternative: if a student scores 850 or more on the SATs, then this student can gain admission with a lower class rank, in the top half.

For one thing, these standards overlook what is now the leading admissions standard in American higher education, public and private: namely, the requirement that a student show evidence of competent academic performance in college prep work in four years in high school. Roughly 40 percent of all colleges and universities in the country used this as their chief standard.

This standard, however, isn't included in the proposals. This is akin to drawing up standards for doctors and neglecting to mention medical school.

Moreover, each of the proposed standards would show a bias against a different group of prospective university students.

Some high schools are academically stronger than other high schools. Therefore, a class rank in the 51st percentile in a strong school should count for more than the same class rank in an academically weaker high school. At UMass, moreover, it does.

In the proposed standards, however, the same class rank in these very different schools would be counted as the same for admissions purposes.

The use of SAT scores as a cutoff displays a bias against students from black and Latin and blue collar families.

Moreover, SAT scores were never intended to be used as a cutoff — so has said Gregory Anrig, the president of the Education Testing Service, the designer and administrator of the tests.

As the best research now shows, the SATs do a poor job of gauging the academic competence of individual students — though they are reliable in gauging the collective academic competence of groups of students.

Moreover, students whose parents earn more and have more education tend to get higher SAT scores than students whose parents earn less and have less education. Here, the tests aren't measuring academic competence, but social and economic class.

This is why public high school students in Boston, for example, do so poorly on the SATs. If you tally the average score of the test-taking students in the city's 14 regional high schools, then you will see that it is roughly 630 — a full 170 points below the proposed cutoff point.

Again, the University believes in standards. However, we also believe in bringing state-of-the-art precision to such crucial decisions as who is to gain a university degree and who isn't. This precision is what guarantees fairness to all.

However, the proposed standards now before the Board of Regents threaten to keep more young people off our campuses and slow down growth in educated talent and in new jobs.

The University believes that our state's approach to the issue of admissions standards should not block economic growth but should encourage it by helping to make a better and stronger match of young people to these new jobs and to the broader issues we now face in guaranteeing growth and quality of life in New England's new economy.

Donna Kane plays "the wonderful, wild, and unconquerable" Sally Bowles in the Amherst Masquers production of Cabaret.

"Come to ze Cabaret!"
Walter Boughton's marvelous trip into the realm of the fantastic

CABARET
Directed by Walter Boughton
Produced by the Amherst Masquers
February 4-6, 9-12
Kirby Theater, Amherst College

By JANINE BRUNELL
Collegian Correspondent

The experience begins immediately upon entry into the beautiful Kirby Theater at Amherst college, where an aura of history and aristocratic ambiance puts one in the mood for theatre. House lights dim and beautiful music and lighting prepare us for the revealation of our Master of Ceremonies, Peter Clark. In his nonchalant sophistication Clark does a wonderful job of putting the audience at ease: "Come. Leave your cares outside and join us. Where the girls are beautiful, even the orchestra is beautiful."

The visual experience of Walter Boughton's Cabaret was indeed beautiful. With a lovely mixture of extraordinary lighting design, and bright and flashy costumes on a cleverly designed set, the eyes are delighted and the mind is a place of beauty and excitement. A fantasy.

Scott Haycock as Cliff Bradshaw, a young American novelist experiencing his first exposure to Berlin, does a believable job of creating his character for us. Certainly his appearance immediately spells American intellect, and his gestures and mannerisms were consistent with the character, although at times his energy was not.

The wonderful, wild, and unconquerable liveliness of Sally Bowles, played by Donna Kane, was always deliciously on the verge of explosion, and Donna Kane's final expression of that self was carried over beautifully in a deep, throaty, and sexy vocal performance of "Cabaret". An enthusiastic burst of applause showed the audiences gratitude.

Other marvelous performances were given by Michele Beasley as Fraulein Schneider, Ellen Reilly as Fraulein Kost, and Jim Lamb as Herr Schultz. Each obviously had developed an understanding of their characters that made their performances touching and unquestionably real. Fritz Schwentker as Ernst Ludwig created the subdued fear that everyone feels for the Nazi's and his confused concept of "the true German" not only frightens but angers Cliff Bradshaw and the American audience. At last, recognition and enthusiastic applause to the Kit Kat girls whose wonderful dancing and more than suggestive costumes made an unforgettable line of chorus girls. Without them the show would have lost much of its success and attraction.

A combination of successful performances, beautiful music and costumes, placed on a flashy stage and emphasized by extraordinarily effective lighting, made Cabaret a thrilling experience which succeeded in pushing away the audiences troubles. What was it the Master of Ceremonies said? "I told you so!"

Airlift your spirits
Berlin Airlift lands at hangar

By ED BEEN
Collegian Correspondent

What Berlin Airlift does, it does very well, as the band proved Saturday night when it landed for the first time this semester at Hanger One, bringing its pop flavored contemporary sound to the enthusiastic crowd of 200.

The slick professional show was a result of very competent musicianship fronted by vocalist songwriter Rick Berlin and guitarist vocalist Steven Perry. They were experienced and convincing performers who kept the audience constantly on the dance floor with songs like "It's You I Love" and "Over The Hill." Both of the songs are on Berlin Airlift's first album, Berlin Airlift, which has been receiving regional, and some national interest.

The band's stronger material, however, was to be found not in the "I love you" songs which tended to become redundant and predictable, but in the songs with a story line. "Here Lies Norman," introduced with some beautiful keyboard work by Jane Balmond, told of an ugly sexually frustrated young man who jumps from the B.U. Bridge. In "I Don't Know How To Be Cool," an adolescent tries everything in order to be hip, but just can't fit in.

Rick Berlin was constantly on the move on stage, looking like a cross between Mick Jagger and Peter Wolf. This is not all that surprising since the band recently did six east coast shows with the J. Geils Band, from whom, Berlin said, the band learned a lot.

"When we saw how hard those guys (Geils) worked, it made us move off our ass and push more," he said.

The pop quintet was rounded out by bassist Chet Cahill and drummer Joe Pet, both of whom sang and further added to the versatility of the band's sound. Airlift's lush four part harmonies were sometimes reminescent of Styx and Journey. But at times the band took on a heavy metal sound, thanks to Perry who can use the whammy bar with the best of them.

"We don't sound just like everyone else, we're not trendy, we're not scene makers, we just play," said Berlin whose personal influences included John Lennon, Patti Smith, and Joni Mitchell.

Sound Advice

The band took a break at 1 o'clock at which point the audience thinned out to about half. But those who stayed became more enthusiastic as the band played past two and included the Kinks' "Rock and Roll Fantasy" as an encore. The audience and the band thoroughly enjoyed themselves.

Berlin said the record is doing well, but their original company, Handshake Records folded two months ago. "C.B.S. is still distributing the album, but no money is being spent on its promotion."

Opening for Berlin Airlift were the ever-popular Museum Directors who played original favorites like "No Way" and "Anorexic Blonde". They have become much tighter since the last time I saw them and they delivered a solid set.

Rick Berlin, vocalist and songwriter for Berlin Airlift.

UMass women swimmers blow past Rhode Island

By BOB BROCK
Collegian Staff

Jean Nicolai led the way as the University of Massachusetts women's swimming team chalked up their ninth win in ten starts, with a 89-64 decision over the University of Rhode Island, Saturday afternoon in the Boyden pool.

Nicolai, a senior from Greenfield, took first place honors in four events to spark the Minutewomen to the win. She took the 100 yard individual medley which she won in 1:04.26 and the 100 yard freestyle which she took in a swift 55.64.

The Minutewomen also had their share of double winners during the meet. Connie Anderson, Ann Wirlog and Elizabeth Feinberg each won two events to aid the UMass cause. Anderson also added two third place finishes which picked up valuable UMass points.

Despite the large margin of victory, the meet was closer than it appears. Rhode Island grabbed the lead first when URI's Amy Colby took the 100 yard breastroke in 1:14.2. They stretched the lead to 34-27 after the 200 butterfly. After Anderson's win in the 50 freestyle URI's lead going into the 1 meter diving was only four points at 37-33.

The UMass divers, Gina Perrone and Jean Bushee placed first and second in the event to push the Minutewomen ahead 41-38. They cruised on to win from there.

The Minutewomen have now won two straight since they suffered their only setback of the season, January 25 at the hands of a tough Boston College squad. They are in action next this Friday when they travel to Durham, N.H. to take on the University of New Hampshire. Then they have only one more dual meet (against Mt. Holyoke) before the New England Championships at Springfield College later this month.

UMass women bow to Huskies

BOSTON — The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team continued their losing ways as they fell to a tough Northeastern University team by a score of 63-50 on Saturday.

"I feel that to give up only 63 points, that we played good defensively," said Coach Mary Ann Ozdarski. "We made them shoot 30 percent in the second half. But we had lapses midway through the first half and at the beginning of the second half and that's what did us in."

UMass was led by forward Nadine Jackson, who recently re-joined the UMass lineup in January and played a good all around game. She finished with 16 points, four rebounds and two assists. Also contributing to the UMass effort were Karen Damminger with eight points and five rebounds and Kelly Collins who had seven points and five rebounds.

Northeastern was led by Melissa Lang who poured in 17 points and Kym Cameron who scored 14 points and collected 10 rebounds.

The young Minutewomen squad fell behind early in the contest and just could not get back into the game. UMass was down by 34-20 at halftime, but did show improvement outscoring Northeastern in the second half 30-29, and outrebounding them for the game 39-38.

There were numerous turnovers on both sides throughout the game. UMass played a 2-3 zone defense in the firt half and added a man to man defense in the second half, in which they increased their own shooting percentage from 30 percent to 50 percent, while decreasing Northeastern's from 44 percent to 30 percent.

"We just have to put it all together and play consistently in all phases of the game. If the kids work hard, we'll get there," said Ozdarski.

The Minutewomen return to the Curry Hicks Cage on Tuesday night to face Dartmouth College and coach Ozdarski is looking forward to a super game from everyone on her team. Game time is at 7:30 p.m.

UMass dream turns to nightmare

Hempel 3-pointer off; Rutgers escapes, 62-60

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

If only fairy tales could come true.

John Hempel's last second desperation bomb from midcourt banged off the backboard and the rim before bounding away and sending the Scarlet Knights of Rutgers University home with a very tough 62-60 victory over the University of Massachusetts Minutemen, Saturday night at the Curry Hicks Cage.

"In a fairy tale ending," said a dejected but proud coach Tom McLaughlin, "John Hempel makes that shot. But, in reality, the shot was a very difficult shot and it just didn't go in."

The buzzer put an end to a dramatic rally that saw the Minutemen claw back into contention in the waning moments of the contest only to fall short.

It was a game that saw the emergence, once again, of the very vocal Minutemen fans as a vital cog in the UMass basketball effort. The crowd was at capacity by 7:15 p.m. and estimates were that 2,000 plus had to be turned away at the door.

The first half was a series of Massachusetts outside shots offset by the dominating play of Rutgers' center Roy Hinson, who gave a clinic in the ultimate high percentage shot, the dunk, as the two teams struggled back and forth to the delight of the boisterous UMass fans.

"The crowd played a really big role," said Hempel, who led the Minutemen scoring attack with 12 points on the night. "UMass has one of the best crowds around."

At 6:28 of the first period, Bobby Braun (11 points off the bench) followed a Horace Neysmith miss to knot the score at 17-17. Rich Brunson answered for Rutgers with a jumper and the Scarlet Knights took the lead for good at 19-17.

The score at the half was 27-22 in favor of the Knights.

In the second half, Rutgers appeared to have broken the game open and silenced the howling crowd as they pulled out to what looked like an insurmountable 49-38 lead by the 7:38 mark and the clock became as big an adversary as Rutgers.

The shot that gave Rutgers that 49-38 lead was a free throw by Kevin Black, which he was given due to a bench technical against UMass. Minutemen coach Tom McLaughlin had been arguing with the referees about an offensive foul call against Darryl Carter.

It may have been the turning point of the game.

"It was a bad call," said Carter of the call, "but, that's the way it goes sometimes."

UMass refused to roll over and die. Paced by a couple of Braun layups and the outside shooting of Edwin Green, the Minutemen clawed their way back into the game in time to set up the final shot by Hempel.

It just didn't go in.

Fairy tales just don't come true.

Ron Young goes up for two in Saturday night's 62-60 loss to Rutgers.

If the Rage in the Cage was a Freeze Frame

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

I still can't decide whether I did the right thing or not this past Saturday night in the Curry Hicks Cage.

There I was, witnessing the closing seconds of a hard fought game between the Minutemen and the Scarlet Knights of Rutgers University. The home team was trailing by two points, 62-60, as Bobby Braun shoved the ball to John Hempel.

Four, three, two...the clock ticked away as Hempel turned and heaved up a prayer from just inside halfcourt and the crowd roared. The ball arced towards the hoop as 10,000 eyes followed its flight.

And then, all of a sudden, something totally bizarre happened. Everything stopped. And I do mean everything, the fans, the players, the ball, everything, but me.

I could move. I turned to my WMUA broadcasting partner, Dave Goldfield, to see if he was affected, and sure enough, he was solid as a board.

"What is going on here?" I thought to myself as I looked to see if Rod Sterling was suddenly going to appear and submit something for the television audiences approval about a color man for a college radio station, but he didn't.

Then the idea hit me. I wasn't exactly sure how long this was going to last so I'd have to move fast.

I ran down the stairs from the upper level of the Cage and sprinted onto the floor. Grabbing a chair from behind the Minutman bench, I rushed onto the floor and climbed up on the basket. The ball had just hit the backboard and was about to hit the rim. It wasn't going to go in.

Quickly, I moved the ball down an inch, just enough so that, instead of hitting the rim, it would fly cleanly through the net. UMass would win, 63-62!

I jumped down from my perch, put the chair back, and hustled back to my spot. All I had to do now was sit and wait for whatever it was that was going on to stop and let life continue again. I sat and smiled, bracing myself for the explosion that was bound to occur when our shot came and Hempel's went in.

And, you know, if time had started again just then, I don't think it would have bothered me that I had changed the outcome of the contest. After all, I REALLY wanted the Minutemen to win. The 5,000 fans who had crammed into the Cage (not to mention the 2,000 who were turned away at the door) deserved to get a victory after supporting their team so strongly, despite a poor record.

But, I had to sit and wait. And the more I had to sit and wait, the more the realization that what I had done was wrong crept over me. It just wasn't right to cheat.

I struggled with myself in one of those classic devil on one shoulder and angel on the other scenes. After all, who was going to know that I had moved the ball.

But I couldn't do it. I went back down to the floor, this time a little slower than my previous trip, hating myself all the way for not being able to steal a win for the team and its fans. I just couldn't do it.

I climbed back up to the basketball, paused for a second, and then put it back where it had been before I had touched it, where it belonged. I knew I was doing what was right, but it was so so hard.

I headed back towards the stairs, pausing as I passed John Hempel. I had had a chance to make him a hero and passed it up.

I looked over towards the stands and saw the pretty blonde cheerleader I had always had a crush on. She had this half hopeful, half frightened look on her face as she stared at the ball. Soon she would be wearing a dejected look as would most of the people in the Cage. I felt so sorry for her that I went over and gave her a quick kiss on the cheek and mumbled "I'm sorry" to deaf ears.

I worked my way back to my seat and just looked the other way. I couldn't bear

UM women gymnasts flip over Cornell

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics squad is one hot team in UMass sports right now. The women, who haven't lost a meet since December 3rd against top ranked University of New Hampshire, raised their record to 8-1 with a 170.9-163.05 victory over Cornell.

The talented Minutewomen lost to UNH at the UMass Invitational but have piled up wins ever since. Before a crowd of approximately 200 last Saturday, the women scored an all time high of 170.9 points, two tenths higher than its previous high which was scored two weeks ago against Yale.

UMass, which is unofficially ranked third in the NCAA Eastern Region, expected a closer meet with Cornell but, due to injuries, two of Cornell's top all arounds were out. The team didn't waste any time as it pulled out in front by almost two points in the vault exercise. Co-captain Robin Low got the high score, performing a tsukbara in a piked position for an 8.9.

The Minutewomen took the uneven bar event by two points with Low again taking the top score with another 8.9. Birgit Zeeb placed second for Cornell with an 8.75.

Coach Ken Anderson said the team performed outstanding in the balance beam event in which they took the top four spots. Karen Knapp performed a very smooth routine and scored a 9.1. Low, Yael Kantor and Sue Allen took the next three spots with scores of 8.6, 8.55 and 8.45 respectively.

The Minutewomen scored their best in the floor exercises with 43.65 points. Low performed beautifully with a fast paced routine and took the top spot with a 9.0. Lisa Griffen tied for second place with Cornell's Zeeb both with an 8.9.

The team took four of the top five places in the final all around scores. Low was first with a total of 35.4 points. Knapp was third with 34.4, Allen was fourth with 33.8 and Kantor scored 33 points to take fifth. Zeeb placed second for Cornell with 34.85 points.

Anderson feels it is a combination of things that is keeping the Minutewomen on the winning track.

"Part of it is the freshman talent this year," Anderson said, "and the coaching staff has a positive attitude toward our athletes."

This seasons Minutewomen consists of two seniors, four juniors, four sophomores and the rest are freshmen. Working with this very young team, Anderson said positive reinforcement and hard work are two key factors.

Over intercession, the Minutewomen had two other high scoring meets. On January 27, the team walked over Temple 167.95-156.7. Low had a good meet taking first in the all around scores with 34 points and scoring a 9.3 in the floor exercises.

On the 29th, UMass had a tri-meet with Maryland and Rhode Island. Although Maryland is known to have big tricks, the team looked rough in spots, according to Anderson. Maryland won the beam event but UMass fought back with high scores in the other events to beat them 170.1-166.4.

Rhode Island was not much of a match for the Minutewomen as UM toppled over them by nine points.

The women will start getting into the meat of their schedule next week as they take on Springfield and Air Force in a tri-meet.

Black History Month 1983

A Serious Appraisal of the Present Crisis

by Robert Teixeira

On the campus of Simon's Rock of Bard College, the eightieth anniversary of the "Souls of Black Folk", a famous literary masterpiece written by the most prominent twentieth century Afro-American scholar, W.E.B. DuBois, was celebrated. This event took place on Friday, February 4, and Saturday, February 5, in Great Barrington, Mass., the hometown of the great W.E.B. DuBois.

During this celebration of Black History Month at the small Western Mass. college, four workshops and a symposium given by some of the most well-respected Afro-American intellectuals and leaders highlighted the event. Symposium keynote speakers, Clifford Alexander, Jr., former Secretary of the Army, and Richard Hatcher, Mayor of Gary, Indiana, and Executive Board member of Trans-Africa, were a few of the prominent Black leaders in attendance. Professor Broderick of UMASS/Boston and David Graham DuBois, international journalist and visiting lecturer at UMASS/Amherst was among the prominent Black scholars taking part in the event.

On Saturday, Leon Botstein, President of Bard College opened the symposium on Urban Affairs with a few welcoming remarks before an audience of ninety people. Mr. Botstein spoke about the need to dramatically increase Afro-American studies at the high school and college level as a way to combat the pervasive racism that afflicts American society. In that effort, Bard College welcomed "this celebration of W.E.B. DuBois."

The moderator of the symposium was UMASS/Amherst's own William Strickland who provided a brief but thorough introduction of the two keynote speakers. Professor Strickland noted the rapid advancement of Clifford Alexander to positions of respect during their college years together at Harvard University. He also labeled Mayor Hatcher a man "who never forgot from whence he came." It was stressed that the mayor, who has experienced inner city poverty, understands the plight of urban Black America. Mayor Hatcher, during his lecture entitled, "State of the Cities", severely criticized the Reagan Administration's "callous disregard for the plight of Black America". The Mayor then backed that assertion with rich statistical data on the "intensification of our common economic plight that Black Americans face." He noted that the inner cities were becoming increasingly poor and Black under the Reagan Administration's program of an "intensified state of despair." He said, "The Black unemployment rate is hovering over 18 percent, while Black teenage unemployment remains well over 50 percent." In the mayor's hometown alone, Black teenage unemployment has soared to an astounding 88 percent.

Mayor Hatcher also noted the Reagan budget cuts and its effect on specific social programs. For example, "under the new eligibility guidelines for families applying to Aid to Families With Dependent Children (AFDC), assets cannot exceed $1,000.

The Mayor also urged all Blacks to vote. He said that we can no longer rely on the "Democrats or Republicans to represent the interests of Black America", thereby hinting at the need to form an independent political party.

"Full employment and full development are in our national interests", Hatcher termed when he was describing important objectives for the U.S. But the Mayor was skeptical on the notion that the private economy will rescue Black America. For it was the "Private sector that controlled slavery with the sanction of the government." And today the private sector is much more discriminating than the public sector and thus the economic recovery must be "at the government's initiative."

And last, Mayor Hatcher urged all Black Americans to stand up and fight." "For if we don't stand up, we will stand for anything."

Sanctifying Dictators, Certifying Lies

By Jean Caiani

"This Administration believes that human rights is an issue of central importance to relieve suffering and injustice and to link foreign policy with the traditions of the American people."
--State Department, Feb. 7, 1981

In December 1981, Congress stipulated that the President of the United States must certify every six months that the Salvadorean government is making progress with regard to internationally recognized human rights, following international condemnation of the Salvadorean government's human rights abuses. This certification, under the Foreign Assistance Act, must take place before arms can be sent to the government of El Salvador.

The report which President Reagan certified as truth on January 21, the third time since the provision was implemented, states that the Salvadorean government is in compliance with the following five points:

1) a concerted effort is being made to comply with internationally recognized human rights
2) there is demonstrable progress in implementing essential economic reforms, including land reform
3) free elections be held in order to restore law and order
4) the government is achieving substantial control over all elements of the armed forces and
5) there is an investigation into the murders of the six American citizens.

President Reagan's certification in late January that human rights and reforms are significantly improving in El Salvador comes as no surprise. Since his return from his Latin America visit in early December of last year, President Reagan has declared his satisfaction with the human rights conditions there and has stated that he would so certify. But those of us who have been following the events in El Salvador over the past six months know that the facts he produced to back these claims are not much above a touch of fantasy.

Repressive Abuses Continue

Daily murders, tortures and disappearances continue, carried out either by official or officially sanctioned forces. According to the U.S. Embassy and Roman Catholic church officials "political slayings have risen markedly since President Reagan's last certification of July 27, 1982." The March 27th elections of last year which are described as "the development of a democratic order" have proven that although Salvadoreans seek a peaceful political process, the new government is committed to a continued war. The land reform has remained at a standstill since the fall of 1982, and two years later the "goodfaith efforts to investigate the murders of the six citizens" have reached an impasse despite clear evidence implicating high Salvadorean military officials

The overwhelming evidence pointing to the hypocrisy of President Reagan's certification casts doubt on the reliability and truth of the information used in the certification process. The only assurances to the President's claims consist of statements from the Salvadoran Ministry of Defense. Even U.S. Ambassador Deane Hinton says that human rights abuses by the Salvadoran government "could force Congress to withdraw its support." Congress must question the deliberate omission of evidence and blatant contradictions in the President's report. To do so would challenge not only the certification process but the administration's efforts to foster an image of serious evaluation, weighing the alternatives, with sincere concerns of human rights.

Economist Ed Boorstein Discusses Current Depression

"When you can't find bandaids big enough, or tylenol to fix the system, you have to change it" was the pronouncement made by Mr. Edward Boorstein in a talk given on Jan. 31 in a Daily World Forum held in Northampton's Peoples Institute. Boorstein is an economist with a long history of involvement in struggle and socialist planning, and author of The Economic Transformation of Cuba written following his appointment in Cuba's Ministry of Foreign Commerce in the early 1960's.

Boorstein gave a brief history of shifts in government economic policy in America since the Depression, saying of Roosevelt's 'New Deal' "...he never solved the problem of the Depression." Throughout his description of the contemporary policy shifts preceeding the current crisis, Boorstein linked economic problems to military spending in general and the Vietnam war in particular, over the past two decades. "Inflation got going then...and escalated as the war escalated."

The period in question was marked by an extreme and rapid succession of recesions and recoveries, which according to Boorstein were purposefully created by government fiscal and monetary policies in order to alternatively attack infaltion and promote growth. Yet over a long run period these policies caused more problems than relief as inflation climbed from 6 percent to 14 percent while unemployment still doubled, reaching 6 percent simultaneously. Yet, Boorstein declared "we do not have to follow these policies."

According to Boorstein, the Nixon, Ford and Carter Administrations all failed to correct economic problems using these traditional policies because the cause of the inflation was never addressed, being brought about by excessive military spending. "The way to solve inflation is to slash the military budget, this basic cause of inflation...to stop the budget deficit, and not these little cuts they're talking about now." Boorstein estimated that $5.2 trillion has been spent on the military budget since 1980. He said it effectively ammounted to "throwing that capital into the sea."

On the topic of plant closings, leading to the unemployment of numerous workers, Boorstein linked capital flight to the search for profits. "Statistics show that plant closings are more likely when they're owned by conglomerates...they (conglomerates)don't manage production, they buy and sell factories...they close plants even when they're making a profit, because they can make a bigger profit elsewhere"said Boorstein. He used the example of the steel industry, whose companies are now buying oil companies toillustrate his point.

Regarding the notion that high technology companies can provide overall economic health Boorstein stated "what is high technology today is exportable industry tomorrow."

Boorstein also proposed solutions, such as to "take away from the corporations their undemocratic power to decide plant closings" by setting up public boards to consider and decide upon corporations' requests to cease operations. With respect to "certain industries where more plants are closed than open" Boorstein suggested that nationalization would best preserve them.

Boorstein qualified these proposals saying "no measure short of socialism will solve the problem 100 percent," but that they would "give relief." However, Boorstein pointed out the need for political action for immediate or long term changes, saying "none of these things will happen by themselves...it's all a question of political power...the key is unity."

Mass. Divests State Funds from S. Africa

Excerpt from the Daily World

The Massachusetts Legislature passed legislation on the last day of the 1982 session withdrawing all public pension funds invested in firms doing business in South Africa. The legislature overrode a gubernatorial veto to make the state the first in the nation to pass such a divestment measure.

The action capped a four-year effort to enact a divestiture law and is expected to result in the withdrawal of $100 million in state pension funds from the stocks and bonds of 42 corporations. It requires that all South Africa-related holdings be sold over the next three years and that, whenever possible, proceeds from the divestment be reinvested in firms doing business in Massachusetts.

Previous budget amendments have prohibited any further South Africa-related investments since Sept. 1, 1979. The new law affects stocks and bonds bought before that ban went in effect.

Several supporters of the law said it would help the 18 million Black South Africa living under apartheid and make a strong statement in favor of human rights.

The House raced against the clock before the 1982 sesion automatically dissoved at midnight to achieve the required two-thirds vote needed to override. It voted 133-2 to reject Gov. Edward J. King's veto of the measure protesting South Africa's apartheid government. The Massachusetts Senate voted 23-5 to override.

Black legislator Rep. Mel King, one of the major sponsors of the bill, said that "divestment is one concrete way to protest the brutality and racism of apartheid." He said that Ford Motor Co., Xerox, and J.P. Morgan and Co. are among those to be affected by the bill.

Sen. Jack Backman said the new law "will send a strong message to the rulers of South Africa, the only government in the world whose constitution mandates racial discrimination, and to its allies in Washington and in the corporate world."

What is Nummo?

Nummo News is the voice of Black, Latino and Asian-American students from the University of Massachusetts, and as such voices the concerns of people of color from across the world.

"Nummo is the magic power of the written and spoken word....", are the words that appeared in Nummo a full eight years ago. Never has this been more true than it is today, because the issues facing Black, Latino and Asian-American peoples must be clarified and addressed by people of color for themselves. These issues and problems remain obscured and distorted by main-stream mass media and in the public eye. Often, there is just a simple silence where there should be outrage, questioning and a resolution towards action. The voice of the Third World community is needed to ensure that these concerns are dealt with at all, in addition to correcting the narrow perspective that often prevails when the controversial, and often long standing issues, are concerned.

Nummo News is presently the largest weekly Third World newspaper in the Five-College Area. It began in protest to the absence of news pertaining to black people in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian. Since then it has expanded its coverage to include other professed minorities and oppressed people. But basically Nummo News exists in order to give "the other side" of the story. In that respect Nummo is a dynamic and influential periodical.

Because Nummo was begotten from struggle we have to keep in mind that nothing worth having comes easily. Nummo News has a duty to keep abreast of the current political climates. Nummo must essentially operate as a three-headed entity with an eye on campus and local events, another one on national news and a third that surveys global activities.

Nummo News staff are trained in all phases of newspaper production, including: reporting, writing, photography, typesetting, graphic reproduction and layout. The "each one teach one" philosophy is fully operative from 5pm Friday evening to 4:30pm Sunday afternoon in the Campus Center graphics room. Obviously there is a great deal to be gained in the area of creative development and it would be in your best interest to contribute to the effort by either joining the staff or by making whatever committment is possible. Nummo News would also benefit tremendously from the organized input of campus and community groups.

WAKE UP, LATINO!

"The United States seems destined by providence to plague the Americas with miseries in the name of liberty.

Simon Bolivar

38,000 deaths in El Salvador in the last three years...hundreds of peasants murdered in Guatemala by the dictator Rios Mont...6,000 disappeared in Argentina under the military junta...torture in Chile under ten years of dictatorship...bombings by the U.S. Navy in Vieques (Puerto Rico)...genocide of indigenous people in Brazil...Honduras...Paraguay...Uruguay...repression, torture, poverty, and hunger everywhere.

The great majority of our Latin brothers and sisters suffer under oppressive dictatorships and capitalist oligarchies, backed and helped economically and militarily by the North American government. A government that trains the troops and the generals of the Latin American dictatorships (most dictators are graduates of American military academies); that trains their secret police in modern methods of repression, torture, and murder; that tries to destabilize the progressive government of Nicaragua; that trains counter-revolutionaries from Cuba and Nicaragua in secret camps in Florida, Honduras, and Panama; that helps in the torture of Chilean political prisoners; and that provides the arms and ammunition used to massacre peasants in El Salvador and Guatemala.

Things are also bad in this country: cuts in social programs, unemployment, poverty, discrimination, racism, sexism, systematic oppression of Blacks, Hispanics, and Native Americans. There is suffering in the most powerful country in the world!

Living here, in a university community like Amherst, we are somehow insulated from the rest of the world. What happens in Latin America seems far away, less urgent, suffering gets here a little muffled. We live here with some comfort, we have our room in a dormitory or house, we eat well every day, we have access to a great variety of free activities, we go to the movies, we dance, we study...

It is not that there are no problems here. There are. We confront a scarcity of economic resources, difficult studies, discrimination, depression, and we miss our countries, but nothing compares to the suffering of our people in our countries or the suffering of our comrades in the South Bronx or Springfield. Nothing compares to the torture, murder, hunger, and fear that they experience day after day. Nothing compares to the suffering of so many of our people.

I am sure that the majority of us feel sorry about what is happening; we sympathize with the FMLN/FDR in El Salvador; we hate Rios, Stroessner, and Pinochet; we want the Navy to get out of Vieques and we want a free Puerto Rico. Isn't it true? I am positive that this is how most of us feel. But if this is the case, why do we not show it? Why are there so few latins involved in the struggle here? During the last few weeks, there has been a series of activities in opposition to U.S. policy in El Salvador. There have been demonstrations, vigils, sit-ins, arrests, etc. Very few latins have been involved in these actions. There are groups in the area that are doing solidarity work with Latin America, such as the Northampton Committee on Central America (NCOCA) and the Western Mass. Latin American Solidarity Committee (WMLASC).* These groups have been active against oppression in Latin America for years, yet the Hispanic presence in them is almost non-existent.

Why are we not more active? What are we waiting for? It is not enough to say, "Yes, I support the FMLN, I oppose Pinochet." No. This is not enough. It is necessary to act. We have to get involved with the groups which are active or form new groups (there used to be a Puerto Rican Solidarity Committee and a Patria Libre group). We have to go out into the streets, we have to demonstrate, take risks, protest. We have to fight. We do not have an excuse not to do it and we will not be forgiven if we remain passive.

We live here in the belly of the monster, the monster responsible for the oppression, the poverty and the genocide in our Latin America (and the rest of the Third World). We have the duty, if we believe in justice and liberty, of fighting this monster until it is defeated here and in our own countries.

¡DESPIERTA LATINO!

"Los Estados Unidos parecen destinados por la Providencia a plagar de miserias las Americas en el nombre de la libertad."

Simon Bolivar

38,000 muertos en El Salvador en los ultimos tres anos...cientos de campesinos asesinados en Guatemala por el dictador Rios (de sangre) Mont...6,000 desaprecidos en Argentina bajo la junta militar...tortura en Chile durante diez anos de dictadura...bombardeos en Vieques por la marina norteamericana...genocidio de los pueblos indigenas del Brasil...Uruguay...Paraguay...Honduras...represion, tortura, pobreza y hambre por todas partes.

La mayoria de nuestros hermanos y hermanas latinos sufren bajo dictaduras opresivas y oligarquias capitalistas respaldadas y ayudadas economica y militarmente por el gobierno norteamericano. Un gobierno que entrena a las tropas y generales (la mayoria de los dictadores son graduados de academias norteamericanas) de las dictaduras latinoamericanas; que entrena a sus policias secretas en metodos modernos de represion, tortura y asesinato; que trata de desestabilizar el gobierno progresista de Nicaragua; que entrena a contrarrevolucionarios cubanos y nicaraguenses en campos de Florida, Honduras y Panama; que ayuda en la tortura de los prisioneros politicos chilenos y provee las armas y municiones usadas en masacrar al pueblo de Guatemala y El Salvador.

En este pais tambien estan las cosas mal: reducciones en los programas sociales, desempleo, pobreza, discriminacion, racismo, sexismo, opresion sistematica de hispanos, negros y nativoamericanos. Tambien hay sufrimiento en el pais mas poderoso del mundo.

Viviendo aqui, en una comunidad universitaria como la de Amherst, estamos un poco aislados del resto del mundo; lo que pasa en America Latina parece mas lejano, menos urgente. El sufrimento llega aqui un poco amortiguado. Vivimos aqui con cierta comodidad, tenemos nuestro cuarto en un dormitorio o en una casa, comemos bien todos los dias, tenemos acceso a gran variedad de actividades gratis, vamos al cine, bailamos, estudiamos, etc.

No es que no haya problemas aqui. Los hay. Confrontamos escasez de recursos, estudios dificiles, discriminacion, depresiones y nostalgia, pero nada comparable al sufrimiento de nuestra gente en nuestros paises o de nuestros companeros en el Sur del Bronx, o Springfield. Nada comparable a la tortura, asesinato, hambre y miedo que ellos experimentan dia tras dia. Nada comparable al sufrimiento de tanta de nuestra gente.

Estoy seguro de que la mayoria de nosotros sentimos lo que esta pasando; simpatizamos con el FMLN/FDR de El Salvador, odiamos a Rios (de sangre) Mont y a Stroessner y a Pinochet; queremos que la marina se vaya de Vieques y que Puerto Rico sea libre. ?Verdad? Estoy seguro que asi es como nos sentimos casi todos nosotros. Pero si es asi, ?por que no lo demostramos? ?por que hay tan pocos latinos envueltos en la lucha aqui en el valle?

Durante las ultimas semanas ha habido una serie de actividades en oposicion a la politica de USA en El Salvador. Ha habido manifestaciones, ocupaciones, arrestos, etc. Muy pocos latinos han estado envueltos en estas acciones. Hay grupos en el valle que estan haciendo trabajo de solidaridad con America Latina, como el Comite de America Central de Northampton (NCOCA) y el Comite de Solidaridad con America Latina del Oeste de Massachusetts (WMLASC).* Grupos que han estado activos en la lucha contra la opresion en America por anos, grupos que apenas cuentan con una persona hispana entre sus miembros.

?Por que no estamos mas activos? ?Que estamos esperando? No es suficiente decir. "Si, yo apoyo al FMLN, yo me opongo a Pinochet." No. Esto no es bastante. Es necesario actuar. Hay que envolverse con los grupos activos o formar grupos nuevos (antes existian otros grupos como el Comite de Solidaridad con Puerto Rico y Patria Libre). Hay que educarse, que echarse a la calle, hay que manifestarse, arriesgarse, protestar. Hay que luchar. No tenemos disculpa para no hacerlo y no tendremos perdon.

Vivimos aqui en las entranas del monstruo, el monstruo responsable de la opresion, la pobreza y el genocidio en nuestra America Latina (y el resto del tercer mundo). Tenemos la obligacion, si creemos en la justicia y en la libertad, de luchar contra este monstruo hasta que sea derrotado aqui y en nuestros paises.

!Venceremos!

Student enrollment to decline in Mass

By JIM FINKLE
Collegian Staff

Prophet of higher education Clark Kerr last night warned state trustees and regents of higher education that an upcoming decline in college enrollments will "severely hit" Massachusetts.

Speaking to a group of 90 regents, trustees, administrators, professors and students, Kerr, 71, said he predicts a drop in enrollment at Massachusetts' colleges between 15 and 25 percent, compared to a nationwide decline between 10 and 15 percent.

"That's a dramatic decline never seen before in American history," Kerr said. He predicts the decline will begin next fall and last through 1997.

He urged higher education officials to begin planning to compensates for the decline. "They kind of forgot about it," he said. "Now they are relaxed and not making plans."

Kerr said he recommends higher education institutions raise admission standards. "I favor the tendency to raise admission standards for the sake of the high schools," Kerr said. "Our secondary schools are among the weakest elements of our society," he said.

He said raising of admission standards will serve as a catalyst improving the quality of secondary education. "Higher education must begin to help," he added.

He said that while he feels admissions tests, such as the Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT), successfully predict a student's performance in college, he favors using high school grades as an admissions standard.

"I would look at the test scores but put most emphasis on grades," Kerr said. "I would look at the pattern of these grades, whether up or down. It's best as a determinant (of college success) and it encourages people to work harder in high school, to work hard as they go along."

Kerr said from 1968 to 1977 higher education funding per capita remained level in terms of real dollars. He said that per capita spending must be increased now because overhead costs remain constant, despite student decline.

"As students go down, more dollars will have to go for overhead," Kerr said. After discussions with political leaders, he said he does not think officials will support his case. "After they see the point (they) are not really sympathetic to it," Kerr said.

Besides fighting for continued funding, Kerr said trustees must work to find and retain qualified administrators.

Because cutting programs will be necessary during the coming years, Kerr urges the cuts be planned. Although he finds faults with both selective and across the board cuts, he has developed a system: "the better of a lot of bad approaches."

He first recommends that small across-the-board-cuts be instituted to serve as an early warning system so that faculty realize that "bad times are ahead."

Storm cancels classes

By TAMI BORTON
Collegian Staff

Although yesterday's snow storm occurred exactly five years after the record-breaking blizzard of 1978, there is no comparison between the two storms. However, more snow fell than was predicted for yesterday and conditions were severe enough to warrant the closing of the University of Massachusetts at noon yesterday.

"This was a tough type of storm to predict," said John L. DeNyse, vice chancellor for administration and finance. "Three to five inches were predicted but a storm came up from the south with more snow," he said.

"Most people in Massachusetts will see 15 inches of snow, but without the colder air north of the storm and warm, moist air phased with astrological high tides, this storm is simply a baby brother of the great one," said David Taylor climatologist for the Weather Service Corporation in Bedford.

A storm watch was in effect until 6 p.m. yesterday, according to reports from the Weather Service Corporation. Although the Physical Plant reported "horrible road conditions," no serious accidents occurred at the UMass campus or in the area, said Gerald T. O'Neil, Director of Public Safety.

The state police in Northampton reported no major accidents due to the storm. But the wet slippery snow caused cars to go off the road and a few fender benders, officials said.

The UMass transit buses operated on a modified schedule due to the storm, Pat Scanlon, driver supervisor said. "The Orchard Hill route was shut down as soon as things got slick," she said. "This is always the case." South Amherst, Belchertown Road and the North Amherst routes ran every 20 minutes from 1 p.m. to 6 p.m., and then resumed evening schedules. All other routes ran the same, Scanlon said.

Weather predictions for the next two days are for partly sunny days and cold nights, according to the Weather Service Corporation. UMass area colleges and businesses should then be operating normally, DeNyse said.

Closing: three-fold decision

By TAMI BORTON
Collegian Staff

The decision to close the University of Massachusetts at noon yesterday was made jointly by the Personnel department, the Physical Plant and the Provost's office, according to John L. DeNyse, vice chancellor for administration and finance.

DeNyse is usually responsible for making the recommendation to the Chancellor to close UMass. "However, I was called for jury duty and unfortunately could not be here to make the decision," he said.

Chancellor Joseph Duffy was not available to make the decision due to the Board of Regents meeting held on campus yesterday.

"I reviewed the situation at 9 a.m., but felt that many people had already arrived and we would hold at least the morning classes," he said.

However, because of the weather conditions and the fact that plowing efforts could not stay ahead of the storm, school was closed at noon, Duffy said.

The decision to close the University is based on reports of weather conditions from the Physical Plant and traffic and road conditions as reported by the Department of Public Safety on campus, DeNyse said.

The Physical Plant receives its information on weather conditions from the Weather Service Corporation in Bedford. Predictions relayed to the Physical Plant this morning of 10 to 15 inches of snow, and a storm watch, were integral in the decision to close UMass, DeNyse said.

"Our patrols are in touch with everything as far as traffic and pedestrians in relation to the storm," Gerald O'Neil, director of Public Safety said, "We are able to respond to conditions which might happen."

The closing of UMass allowed for the parking lots to be properly plowed, he said.

"We try to make the decision before 5 a.m to get the word out over western Mass. radio stations," DeNyse said. "But this storm was not very predictable," he said,

Plan set to improve standards, boost enrollment for minorities

By KEVIN BOWE
Collegian Staff

The Board of Regents' goal is to increase the amount of minority students attending institutions of public higher education while improving the quality of the system at the same time, said Chancellor of Higher Education John Duff.

"I will bet my reputation that we will increase the minority enrollment (in public higher education)," Duff said at a conference held yesterday at the University of Massachusetts regarding issues occurring in higher education.

"The system (of public higher education) has not worked for the minorities. I don't want more of the same," Duff said in regards to the fact that UMass/Amherst has a minority enrollment of about three percent.

Under the Regents admission standards proposal, the public colleges and universities will be required to submit a detailed plan for affirmative action recruitment, Duff said.

Duff points to the fact that the University of California improved its admission standards but has also improved its minority enrollment.

The state college system in California has a minority enrollment of 26 percent as compared to the Massachusetts average of 3 to 5 percent, Duff said.

"California has higher standards with higher minority enrollments." Duff said.

"Access and quality (the twin goals of the Regents) are not exclusive goals; look at California," he said.

Much of the criticism of the Regents proposal, which will waive certain students because they are "culturally deprived".

First eruption triggers bigger eruption to follow

VANCOUVER, Wash. — Mount St. Helens erupted again yesterday building a new mound of lava on the 700-foot high dome in the volanco's crater.

There were no reports of explosions, mudflows or ash. Officials said they did not know when the eruption began.

The eruption was confirmed at about noon yesterday by geologists who flew over the southwest Washington volcano, said Thom Corcoran of the U.S. Forest Service.

Corcoran said a geologist in a fixed-wing airplane saw a new lobe of lava growing on the east side of the dome, but that ground crews had yet to confirm it.

On Saturday, the U.S. Geological Survey and the University of Washington warned that movement within the crater and gas emissions indicated Mount St. Helens would erupt within two weeks.

Iran launches offensive to reclaim lost territory

NICOSIA, Cyprus — Iran launched its "final offensive" against Iraq before dawn yesterday, retaking 100 square miles of Iranian territory and hurling tens of thousands of troops across the border in its biggest drive yet.

Iraq confirmed the offensive, but said it completely crushed two Iranian divisions that crossed into Iraq at Fakeh, about 180 miles southeast of Baghdad and 100 miles north of Basra. The aim of the offensive appeared to be cut the Baghdad-Basra highway by taking Al-Amara, 40 miles west of Fakeh.

Iraq said its forces killed 894 Iranians and took large numbers of prisoners. Baghdad communiques claimed that Iraqi warplanes and helicopter gunships flew 129 missions, "securing complete control of the skies over the battlefront, inflicting very heavy losses on enemy tanks and armor, and returning safely to their bases."

EPA official ousted documents guarded

WASHINGTON — President Reagan fired Rita Lavelle as assistant administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency yesterday, and guards with billy clubs stood outside her offices to bar removal of documents at the heart of a constitutional dispute between Congress and the Executive Branch.

The firing was announced by the White House as a brouhaha raged at the agency over whether Ms. Lavelle had quit or her resignation had been demanded by EPA Administrator Anne Gorsuch. Two of Ms. Lavelle's top aides also were fired.

Some of the documents being guarded in her office were among those subpoenaed by a House subcommittee. It was the refusal of Mrs. Gorsuch to turn over these documents which led to a contempt of Congress citation against the EPA chief.

Mrs. Lavelle's dismissal was disclosed in a one-sentence statement from the White House.

Refusal to meet terms land protesters in jail

WESTBORO — Two anti-war protesters who refused to sign a probation agreement after being convicted of trespassing at a military plant were ordered yesterday to serve the balance of their maximum 30-day prison terms.

Westboro District Judge William Brewin, saying the case had already taken up too much time, announced he would not press contempt of court charges against Scott Duffy and Theresa Guisti.

The judge ruled the demonstrators should serve 20 more days in jail for trespassing at GTE plant in Westboro, which developed the command control communications system for the MX and Minuteman missles.

Joined by two other people, the protesters poured their blood in the form of a cross at the plant Dec. 28 and held a prayer ceremony at the military supply facility.

Traffic hazards delay truckers plan to strike

STURBRIDGE — Striking independent truckers in Massachusetts have pushed back their plans one day — to tomorrow morning — for a convoy to Boston to bring their story to the people.

"The postponement is due to the safety factor and the weather conditions," said Richard Butler of Boston, a leader of the truckers, after meetings yesterday. "We have to allow them time to clean up the roads."

Butler said his group does not condone violence and added: "This convoy has been organized with the aid of State Police to help avoid any problems with traffic in Boston. We are businessmen, and are trying to make a point."

Court officer's action halts rape conviction

BOSTON — An unauthorized statement by a court officer negated a 1981 Middlesex Superior Court rape conviction yesterday and is expected to result in a new trial.

The Appeals Court acted in the case of Warren Donovan, who had been sentenced to 4-to-10 years in state prison on the rape charge. An assault and battery conviction had been placed on file.

The higher court said Judge Robert E. Hayes did nothing about the court officer's involvement at the time, compounding the error.

The court officer was not identified in the decision and his name was not immediately available from the coordinator in the office of the chief administrative judge of the trial court.

Natick police said the alleged rape occurred in that town in late 1980. The trial lasted four days and the jury spent parts of three days in deliberations.

Student run newscast set to roll next Monday

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

A live, student-run television news program scheduled to begin broadcast yesterday in the Campus Center was postponed a week due to "an internal problem," according to the program's director.

The half-hour program, planned to consist of local and national news and public service announcements, is being pioneered at the University of Massachusetts by the Union Video Center (UVC), which operates the television monitors currently broadcasting daily in the Campus Center.

Funded primarily by the Campus Center Board of Governors (BOG) through the Governor's Program Council (GPC), and by the Collegian, the UVC has been planning the project as part of several steps it has been taking in recent semesters to improve its service.

The president of UVC, James Nelson, said the delay resulted from uncertainty caused Thursday by the GPC when it opened a search for his replacement.

Nelson said the search was soon cancelled, however, when he met with GPC Coordinator Barbara Jean Curtis and BOG Chairman Ron Keefe to begin clearing up "communications problems" he said the two had complained of.

As a result of that meeting, Nelson yesterday completed for Curtis and Keefe a six-page "Goals and Objectives" statement for the spring, 1983 operation of the Campus Center cable system, and predicted the news program would be ready to begin next Monday. In his report, Nelson outlined the job descriptions and objectives he saw for himself and his assistants, and stated specific goals for UVC in both this and future semesters.

Keefe yesterday refused to comment on Nelson's status, while Curtis said the problem has been cleared up and that the classified ad she placed in yesterday's Collegian announcing the job opening would be removed.

"We are going to try and work it out," Curtis said, by "working more closely" with Nelson, who she now plans to meet with weekly.

Curtis, too, blamed the problem on "a lack of communications," saying it was "maybe the fault, a little bit, of both of us."

The UVC has already begun providing some news service in the form of printed messages through the use of a character generator machine purchased for them by the Student Activities Office. The UVC has also installed additional outlets in the Campus Center at the bottom of the escalator and outside the Blue Wall for two more monitors to be purchased for them by the Campus Center administration.

Now with his job secure again, Nelson said he "hopes that this thing (the news program) will really take off."

Nelson expected the program, scheduled for daily broadcast at noon from the UVC studio in the Student Union Building, will mostly emphasize world and national news, and include Collegian articles rewritten for broadcast. Public service announcements are planned to follow the twenty-minute news segment, Nelson said, and a future format for editorial comment is also being considered.

Ads blamed for rise in women who smoke

By ROBIN MANDEL
Collegian Staff

Cigarette smoking, more common among women than men, can be attributed to a form of rebellion against the male dominant society, said a valley Health Plan Educator, who runs smoking cessation workshops in the Amherst area.

Paul Davis said, "A psychological influence of advertisements is its ploy to equate smoking cigarettes with the independent woman." The ads state that an independent woman will choose the brand she wants, he said.

The liberated woman will even go as far as to view anti-smoking campaigns as yet another manifestation of male experts telling women what they can or can not do with their bodies, he said.

Ellen LaFleche, writer for the Women's Health column in the Amherst Bulletin, said Virginia Slims cigarette advertisements toy with the traditional sex role images of men and women. The Marlboro man riding the stallion through the mountain ranges with a cigarette clenched between his teeth gives the impression of ruggedness, whereas the Virginia Slims woman is beautifully dressed in silky and sensuous clothes with a cigarette between her slim and slender fingers.

"It is this type of influence that encourages women to start smoking," she said.

Davis said the most significant trend in the national smoking pattern is women are giving up the smoking habit at much lower rates than men. Women who quit smoking seem to be pre-occupied with the thought of gaining weight and therefore there is a strong rationalization for women to go back to smoking, he said.

"Men, on the contrary, do not seem to share in this weight obsession," he said. Davis said 44 percent of women over 17 smoke compared to only 32 percent of men who smoke. While the overall percentage of smoking is lower in women than in men, it has been proven that this is rapidly changing, he said.

According to the March 1982 edition of the Surgeon General's Report on Smoking and Health, cigarette smoking is the leading cause of death in today's society. This report stated while both men and women smokers face a great risk by smoking, women face an even greater risk by smoking and this danger is rapidly rising.

"An epidemic among men smokers have existed for many years; now it is being repeated among women," the report said.

Rochelle Weber, a medical doctor at the University of Massachusetts Health Services, said heart disease, lung cancer and ulcers are a few of the dangerous results to smoking. Raynaud's Syndrome, a condition when the blood vessels do not deliver blood to the fingers, is a common circulatory problem which women smokers often have to face. Women on the pill also experience a greater risk of disease if they smoke, she said.

Great Decision talks to center on Lebanon

The second seminar of the Great Decisions '83 series, entitled "Lebanon: Shattered State in the Middle East," will be held tonight at 8 p.m. in the Webster dormitory main lounge.

Panelists for the discussion will be Yusef Ibish of the Amherst College religion department, who spent January in Lebanon; Robert Haddad of the Smith College history department; Gordon Levin of the Amherst College American studies department and Fred Lawson of the Smith College government. Luther Allen of the University of Massachusetts political science department will act as moderator for the discussion.

Course in bartending moved back to UMass

A bartending course offered by the University of Massachusetts, scheduled to be offered in Springfield, has been moved to the UMass-Amherst campus.

The course, "Bartending, More Than Mixing Drinks," offered by the hotel, restaurant and travel administration department, will meet Tuesday from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. in the Chenoweth Laboratory.

Evening history course still open for students

A course entitled "A History of Forgotten Peoples" will meet every Tuesday, beginning tonight, from 6:30 to 9 p.m. in the lounge on the 19th floor of the Coolidge dormitory.

The course, which is still open to interested students, will deal with the histories of native Americans, African-Americans, working-class whites and other groups. The course is still open for registration.

Mentor Program to hold party for new students

A reception will be held for students participating in the Mentor Program at 4 p.m. Tuesday, Feb. 8 at Campus Center Room 1009.

The Mentor Program, which is administered by the New Students Program, matches faculty and staff members with first year students and new transfer students.

According to the New Student Program guidelines, staff and faculty mentors act as "supportive friends and adult contacts" for students new to the University. They do not act as faculty advisors.

The program is now in its third year and will involve 264 students and 170 staff and faculty members this semester.

Overloaded vehicle cited in auto accident

Amherst Police yesterday reported that six University of Massachusetts students were injured in an accident late Saturday.

The accident occured when the car driven by Scott D. Brown lost control and struck a sign pole at the intersection of North Pleasant Street and Governor's Drive, according to police.

All six passengers in the car complained of injuries, police said, and three were treated at the UMass infirmary. No information could be obtained from the infirmary.

Brown was cited for impeded operation because he was carrying five passengers in a car designed for four.

Police also reported that a car driven by Andrew Hamel was involved in an accident at the entrance of Brandywine Apartments on Meadow Street, at 1:15 a.m., Saturday.

Paula Paturnicki, a passenger in the car, was injured and transported to the UMass infirmary, according to police. No information was available from the infirmary.

Six minors nabbed for drinking

By E.L. BIRK
Collegian Staff

Two University of Massachusetts men were arrested over the weekend and charged with being minors in possession of alcohol after the police spotted them outside Dickinson Dormitory, police said. Both nineteen-year-old men were spotted at 9:57 p.m. Saturday as they were unloading two cases of chilled beer from their vehicle, Sgt. Frank Mazzei said. The officers were on routine patrol.

Another incident involving two cases of beer resulted in the arrests of two other UMass students. At 10 p.m. Saturday, police observed two men walking in the middle of Chadbourne Road carrying two cases of beer and obstructing traffic, Mazzei said. The men were charged with being minors in possession of alcohol and then placed in custody. Both are Webster Dormitory residents and both are 19 years old.

A third pair of men was arrested for being minors in possession of alcohol after police were called to the John Quincy Adams Dormitory lobby on Sunday morning, Mazzei said. The two, both Bridgewater State College students visiting UMass, were causing a disturbance in the JQA lobby and were warned twice by police to desist but were arrested at 2:19 a.m. after a student security worker hailed police. One of the pair was also charged with possession of a class B substance, qualudes, he said.

One arrest for driving while under the influence was reported over the weekend. A 20-year-old Field Dormitory resident was observed at midnight Saturday by police as he ignored the red traffic signal at the intersection of Governor's Drive and North Pleasant Street. The subject was finally stopped on Infirmary Way. He was also charged with failure to stop for a traffic control, Mazzei said.

Five plastic milk crates were recovered by police on Sunday after two students were observed carrying them, he said. The crates, valued at $35, were found on Route 116, according to the students, Mazzei said.

Meatballs from frozen hamburg

Funny how time flies.

I was laughing about it at eight-thirty the other morning while hacking apart a pound of frozen hamburg with a two pound cleaver. Luckily my room mate wasn't back yet, or he would have burrowed out of his cave with raccoon eyes and demanded to know what all the racket was. I would have told him (blushing), "Just trying to get this to thaw faster. I want to make meatballs."

Of course the meat didn't yield, and chips of frozen hamburg winged off the cabinets and walls, and I almost chopped off two fingers, so I ended my Galloping Gourmet performance. I would have to wait for the meat to thaw at its own pace. But I had to laugh, amused that I had begun the year with a bang. So to speak.

Steve Masse

Such amusement can be short-lived. Intersession is over. Vacation indeed. For some, intersession was just an excruciating stretch of not enough to do and not enough money to do it with. For others, it was okay for employment and some relaxation.

But now it's time to get back to the proverbial mill, and try once again to deal with that question which hangs over our heads like the Library of Damocles: "What are you doing for the rest of your life?"

Yes. That's the ultimate question around here, the cousin to the question, "What's your major?" (Which is the bastard half-brother to the question, "What, you still don't have a major?")

Such questions have caused sweat, palpitations, stomach disorders and many other ailments. But now there may be a solution.

If Dad thinks you'd make a good teacher, and Mom could see you in a nurse's outfit, and Uncle Sal wants you to be a carpenter, and Aunt Esther thinks you should be a lawyer or a dentist, and your summer job boss wants you full time behind the hotel desk, and your boyfriend wants you to marry him — take it all into account. Then drop a bomb on all of them, and take life into your own hands.

(No, I'm not suggesting you murder all these people just because you're undecided about your future. But for the sake of your future sanity, pretend they're all dead, and make your decisions with only yourself to answer to.)

Yes, Virginia, there is life after college. Trouble is, too many people see college as an employment agency instead of a learning center. We learn how to learn. How to be open to new discovery, to life, to employment, to marriage, to society. It's so easy to let other people's limitations limit us. If others want to see us as a product of our employment or "position" in society, why should we also be so crippled?

Drop that bomb.

Time passes whether we're ready or not. It brings new friends, and then blows them into the four winds. It forces us to make half-hearted decisions to please a computer. It makes us graduate and join the work (or unemployment) force. Time can tear true love apart when Career has become more important than People, and time can force false love into marriage, because marriage to somebody who is merely adequate seems better than temporary insecurity.

Are we afraid of having too many choices? Perhaps we are. When we make a commitment to learn, we pull the rug of security out from under ourselves. So why is it that while we're toe end up in the air, we grope at whatever might give us back some of that security?

Maybe we learn best when we allow ourselves to lock horns with insecurity, to befriend the unknown and embrace it instead of dreading it and avoiding it. Convenience is great, but risk is more fruitful. If we strive for convenience, we may avoid failure, but our learning is shallow. We never leave the straight road, we never spend a sleepless night wondering why the mosquito and the herpes virus made it onto Noah's ark. We never try to make meatballs out of the frozen hamburg of life.

Black history remembered

"If a race has no history, if it has no worthwhile traditions, it becomes a negligible factor in the thought of the world, and it stands in danger of being exterminated." These are the words of Dr. Carter Goodwin Woodson, spoken in 1926 while arguing for the first Negro History Week. Since that year the concept of the original week has grown and expanded. Many different types of educational institutions have some form of celebration. Here at the University of Massachusetts, due to the dedication of a number of people and organizations, we are fortunate enough to have Black History Month during February. This is a whole series of speakers, workshops, films, musical entertainment, and theatre, which commemorate and explain the Black experience in America, past and present.

Brooke States

Dr. Woodson was the moving force behind the establishment of Negro History Week. He was born in December of 1875, the son of former slaves. His family was both large and poor, and he was unable to attend school on a regular basis. Through self-instruction and perseverance, he was able to acquire a high school diploma in less than two years. He went on to gain degrees from Harvard University and the University of Chicago as well as others. He also studied and traveled abroad.

As a result of his education and experience, Dr. Woodson became convinced that the history of Black people was being distorted and ignored, and that it was vital to regain that knowledge. In 1926 he wrote, "Not to know what one's race has done in former times is to continue always as a child." To help reclaim Black history, Dr. Woodson and others helped found the Association for the Study of Negro Life and History in September of 1915. To further the publication of materials related to this work he helped start the publication of The Journal of Negro History.

As a result of this work and other peoples, the 1926 celebration was a great success, with many Black communities around the country participating. A number of white groups also began to pay attention to Black history, and asked for information about it.

The original dates for the week were to include the birthday of Abraham Lincoln, and the day that Frederick Douglass calculated as the date of his birth. Abraham Lincoln was picked for his role in the struggle against slavery. Frederick Douglass because of his achievements in raising the question of slavery. These dates are February 12 and 14 respectively.

Speaking of the problems and discrimination that Blacks faced in 1926, Dr. Woodson said: "We call this race prejudice, and it may be thus properly named, but it is not something inherent in human nature. It is merely the logical result of tradition, the inevitable outcome of the thorough instruction to the effect that the Negro has never contributed to the progress of Mankind."

There is considerable truth in this quote, and it is a good reason why whites should attend Black History Month's events. Racism has long been a curse in American society, both in it's subtle and blatant forms. It is also a tool and a method by which different groups are kept from uniting with and collectively struggling against broader social problems. Ignorance and a lack of understanding of other peoples and their cultures plays a large part in this. The reality of Black and White America are very different, but we all share a common stake in the future and destiny of this country. Blacks as a people and as individuals have made great contributions to the development of this country. It is understanding this that helps lay the foundation for disposing of the stereotypes that are presented by the cultural apparatus of society.

But it is also important to understand this history beyond the individuals, the George Washington Carvers, or Sojourner Truths. Black history is also the social history of a people, a large thread in the tapestry of the country's evolution, and a key to it's future. The long continuing struggle of Black People against racism, and for recognition of their achievements in all fields can teach us much about the history of the country as a whole.

In a time when racism is again on the rise, and new catchwords and stereotypes replace the old ones. It is more important than ever to be aware of what others are doing around you. Go to a Black History Month event if you get a chance. You might be surprised at what you learn.

Letters

True UMass fan harassed

To the Editor:

As most fans were leaving the Cage last Saturday night and moaning about the "one we almost had," I was harassed by a group of rude and very uninformed women. After the basketball loss by UMass to Rutgers, they asked me if I was "happy with myself" seeing that all of my obnoxious behavior went for not since UMass didn't win. They went on further, insulting me in every way, saying I was an embarrassment to the crowd and had no right to heckle the other team's players. In this letter, I would like to inform them and any others what college basketball is all about.

Last season, Coach Tom McLaughlin became the new head coach at UMass. He promised that he would restore pride in the team and excitement to the Cage. In following up on these promises, he has recruited an excellent group of players, and he started the "40 Minute Gang" in order to initiate excitement. The "40 Minute Gang" is sponsored by the team, and we are given a T-shirt for recognition. We were told by the coach to sit behind the opposing team's bench and be "wild and crazy," and do anything to disrupt the other team's thinking. We were also told to try to ignite the entire crowd, because a loud and clapping crowd can be a very important factor in a game's outcome.

These actions are not unique to our University. It is an accepted activity at college games, and most people, players and coaches know it. It's called the home court advantage.

As for my actions, I regret nothing. I am up on every basket screaming wildly. I try to get the crowd clapping to reach that thunderous level that 4,000 pairs of hands can reach. And I will continue to heckle the other team. I do this with no foul language or threats. The worst thing I might do is swear at a referee, but only when the whole crowd is complaining about a call, including the coach. If you don't think coaches swear at the officials, then you're dreaming.

I just hope the women who bothered me read this, but they probably won't because it is about basketball, which they obviously know nothing about. I have the right to do anything I want at a game, and I enjoy it. If it bothers you, then just don't come to anymore games. I heard that many were turned away due to Saturday's capacity crowd. I sympathize with those real fans who were denied admission when people like these were wasting good seats.

In closing, I ask that all "gang" members please wear their shirts and sit together at the next game so that no more ignoramuses try to give me a lecture.

Nuclear Madonna, a poignant illustration of world hunger and how the situation is exacerbated by exhorbitant nuclear war budgets and the misappropriation of money that could be spent to feed the world's hungry.

Mural on campus garage depicts relationship between hunger and bombs

By TRACY ROBBINS
Collegian Correspondent

If campus go-ers have been wondering about the large mural on the Campus Center garage, the following explanation should satisfy their curiosity.

The mural, entitled "Nuclear Madonna," depicts starvation in the form of two figures, mother and child, against a background of the world over a crossbones of nuclear missiles above an empty bowl. By so doing, the artist, Jamie Young of Northampton, has attempted to illustrate the main cause of world hunger is the nuclear arms race.

"The concern for my children's future prompted me to paint the mural." Young said.

"Seeing the state of world economy both bothered and upset me. Priority has been given to nuclear proliferation instead of clothing and feeding the starving nations of the world."

"Before I began the large mural, I designed a smaller one last year in Los Angeles. Seeing inner city conditions there and all over the country made me realize the need for action. Despair is everywhere," Young said.

Young searched the globe to find what she calls, "hot spots". "During the year that I was painting the mural concern was directed toward the Falkland Islands, the U.S.S.R., Cambodia, and South Africa. These were the geographical spots I felt were most pertinent."

"The mere existence of the "X" in the background of the mural takes food from the mouths of the starving people of the world. It "X's" them out of opportunity. The child comes first because he is our future. The next generation is the mother who mirrors despair because she can't feed her hungry child. Then the perspective moves outward to the world," Young said.

"I feel that people are more concerned with their own pocketbooks. They don't look beyond themselves to the billions of dollars a day spent on weaponry. That's absurd."

For sometime the mural had been hanging on an abandoned building in Springfield, but when the building was recently sold, the mural had to be moved. After contacting several organizations on campus, Ms. Young came to SPECTRUM to see whether they could provide temporary sanctuary.

"Spectrum had just determined to have a new focus, The social significance of Art, and Ms. Young's work seemed to express our focus exactly." said Charles Francis Carroll, managing editor of Spectrum.

Carroll feels that the mural should replace one of the paintings occupying the space above the escalators in the campus center concourse.

"The mural is a revolutionary work in a nonviolent way, and revolution through art is the only way to achieve world peace," he said.

The response to the mural from people on campus has been very positive. The picture in itself supports a world wide movement.

The artist herself had two children and is pregnant with a third. This mural mirrors her love for her family and the donation of her painting exemplifies Ms. Young's sincerity.

Carroll sees the mural as having the eternal quality of a masterpiece, and says, "Actions speak louder than words."

Announcements

GET CLOSER (Elektra/Asylum)
Linda Ronstadt

By DON NAREY
Collegian Correspondent

Linda gets closer

From torch ballads to covers of ancient rockers, the voice of Linda Ronstadt has weathered the storms of fickle record buyers for the past decade. Typically, the demise of her career has been predicted at least a dozen times since her initial breakthrough in 1974. Once again she takes the stand, this time with her latest project Get Closer.

If nothing else, Ronstadt can pull off a surprise, and that she's done with the title track. "Want love? get closer!" she belts out over a surprisingly basic thumping beat of three electric guitars. Veteran back up vocalists Rosemary Butler (of Jackson Browne's band) and Patti Austin, add a hint of the early 60's girl group sound. From there the listener follows a trek of colorful oldies and haunting ballads.

The singer moves swiftly into Jimmy Webb's "The Moon is a Harsh Mistress," a chilling ode to the hardship of reality, and she breathes life into another Webb song, "Easy For You To Say" where it previously hadn't existed. Kate McGarrigle's "Talk To Me of Mendacino" is handled with solid professionalism, yet with the loving care that only a true McGarrigle fan could extend.

Ronstadt doesn't let us get too contemplative, though; she confidently tackles the jazzy "People Gonna Talk." Coming in behind Jerry Peterson's stylish sax performance, she takes full command of this soulful oldie. Not to be overshadowed is a lively duet with James Taylor, "Think it's Gonna Work out Fine," and a dramatic example of just what she's capable of, "I Knew You When," on which the singer wails and whispers into an ocean of flashy melodrama.

Fans of the slick L.A. style of Ronstadt's past performances will undoubtedly embrace Roderrick Taylor's "Mr. Radio." Her former right-hand man Andrew Gold comes back to lay down a harmony as soft as a southern California breeze, and former Little Feat members Billy Paine (synthesizer) and Bob Glaub (bass) accent the song's mystical feel:

> "We listen in a room > through miles and miles of night > deep in the heart of the bible belt > in the golden radio light."

It's an unusual Ronstadt disc in the sense that there's no clear motif. Unlike Simple Dreams, an obvious tribute to California Rock or Living in the U.S.A., a fun recreation of the mythical gee-isn't-everything-great mood of the 1950's. Get Closer presents great diversity. It's fun, it's chilling. It's soft and sweet on "My Blue Tears" with Emmylou Harris and Dolly Parton, yet hard and decisive as on the title track. The common thread is the old solid voice amidst a gallery of musical shapes, leading us on, shying away, whispering, shouting, giggling and moaning. For the singer, it's one decisive move; for the listener, one fine experience.

Slumping wrestlers lose to Springfield

By STEVE FITZ
Collegian Correspondent

University of Massachusetts wrestling coach Rick Freitas knew that for his team to beat Springfield College, last Friday night, there would have to be some shifting in the UMass lineup.

The strategic move of wrestling 126 pounder Brian O'Boyle in the 134-pound class backfired on the Minutemen. O'Boyle lost a 13-4 decision to Springfield's Pat Hughes.

The major decision gave visiting Springfield a 16-0 lead after three matches, and they went on to capture a 37-9 victory over UMass in Boyden Gym.

UMass had a difficult time winning. 150-pounder Mike Bossi dropped a 9-5 decision to Springfield's Kevin Costagnola after leading 2-0.

UMass John Butto was winning 8-5 in the third period, of the 158-pound match, but Springfield's Rich White came back and tied Butto, 9-9.

The tie preserved a win for Springfield, it gave them a commanding 27-2 lead with only four matches remaining.

Senior 167-pounder Dave McEntee surprised everyone but himself in his match.

McEntee looked in total control when he used a cradle to put Springfield's Pat Allen on his back for a five point move in the first period. Allen, however, museled his way back to lead 7-5 at the end of the first period.

McEntee regained his composure and went on to win convincely by major decision, 17-8.

UMass' Scott McQuaide fought back to take the lead, 12-11, going into the final period after the Chief's John Gallo grabbed a 2-0 lead in the 177 pound class.

Gallo reversed but McQuaide countered with an escape to knot the score at 13. Gallo got the takedown but McQuaide reversed and put Gallo on his back to take a 19-15 victory.

Steve Lattizon, Springfield's 190-pounder, controlled UMass Mike Rodgers the entire match en route to a 10-0 major decision.

A forfeit at heavy weight by UMass made the score 37-9.

"They were obviously a better team. We shouldn't have moved O'Boyle up but we needed that win. We had some disappointments but McEntee and McQuaide wrestled well," said Freitas.

UMass' Scott McQuaide controls Springfield's John Gallo in last Friday's match at Boyden. McQuaide bent Gallo 19-15, but UMass still lost.

This past Saturday the Minuteman grapplers traveled to Boston College. UMass held an early 12-6 lead but the Eagles fought back and the match ended up on a 22-22 tie.

The Minutemen were able to tie despite forfeits at 142 and heavyweight.

Brian O'Boyle got a pin at 134 pounds and John Butto won by major decision in the 158-pound class. Dave McEntee, at 167 pounds, lost a close 4-3 decision.

The tie dropped UMass' record to 0-9-2. UMass travels to Harvard for their next match on Feb. 15. Their match against Central Connecticut yesterday was cancelled due to the snow.

Men gymnasts drop toughie to E. Stroudsburg

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

It was a disappointing meet for the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team as it evened its record at 3-3 after a 244.25-241.55 loss to East Stroudsburg on Saturday.

The Minutemen performed well, but a few mistakes and a little underscoring, according to coach Roy Johnson, kept the men down.

UMass started off by falling behind in the first two events. John Macurdy placed second in the floor exercises with an 9.25. According to Johnson, it was one of the best floor routines by any UMass competitor ever and it received one of the lowest scores.

The team had a disappointing pommel horse score as it had a total of seven falls off the horse. Still, Bert Mathieson took the top place with an 8.2.

Joe DeMarco and Lew Wingert put up 8.1 and 8.35 scores respectively to help UM take the still rings event. Co-captain Bob Goulart performed well and Mathieson won his second event with an 8.85.

East Stroudsburg won the long horse vaulting event by almost three points. Unfortunately for UMass, the Stroudsburg runway is short by nine feet and three UM performers had to rearrange their run. Macurdy hit his vault, however, and captured second place with a 9.2 scored.

The men were losing by almost six points at this moment but gained almost three points on Stroudsburg in the next two events. Mathieson, who won the all around with 51.35 points, placed first for the third time for UMass with a 9.0 in parallel bars. Steve Redington took the second spot for Stroudsburg with an 8.5 and Goulart was right behind him for UM with an 8.45.

The Minutemen also came through on the high bar but it wasn't enough to catch Stroudsburg. Macurdy won the top spot for UM with an 8.95 and Tony Sbarra took second with an 8.9.

UMass will travel to Southern Connecticut tomorrow night and Johnson is looking forward to an exciting meet if UM can work together and perform up to their potential. Although Southern is undefeated and has some top performers on its team, Johnson and the team are confident.

UM men skiers, NEISC leaders, are victorious again

By MATT LUCZKOW
Collegian Correspondent

CHARLEMONT, Ma. — After three weekends of tournament competition, the University of Massachusetts men's ski team remains in first place in the New England Intercollegiate Ski Conference. This past weekend, at Berkshire East Ski area in Charlemont, Mass., the Minutemen extended their league lead with two decisive wins in Saturday and Sunday's slalom races.

As host of the weekend events, UMass almost outclassed themselves by electing to set a dual-slalom course on Saturday.

"We wanted to try something fun and different (with the duals)," said ski coach Bill MacConnell after the race. "I think the head-to-head competition was good for the racers and real exciting to watch."

The two identical courses were not as difficult as the standard slalom courses and thus gave an advantage to the teams with the less-technical skiers. But nevertheless, UMass finished up front in 'the battle of the duals,' supported by some strong individual efforts and some great team skiing.

In the field of eight colleges, UMass took first place with a team time of 302.32 seconds (best 5 of 8 times). Trailing close behind and finishing in second place was Plymouth State College, at 304.84. Taking third place, with a time of 314.48, was Amherst College.

Doug Karwoski from Plymouth SC won the duals race with a combined time of 59.49 seconds (total of two runs). While Dan Conway (59.90), captain Brian Prindle (59.98) and Jon Segal (60.24) captured second, third and fifth place, respectively, for UMass.

On Sunday, the Minutemen dominated the slopes once again, with six of the ten UMass men finishing in the top 15 (out of 80 racers).

Winning the slalom race for UMass was captain Brian Prindle with a combined time of 69.02 seconds. Teammate Conway followed close behind to take second place in 69.08. Karwoski finished third with a time of 70.05. Also skiing fast for UMass were Jon Segal (71.21), Tim Enright (71.37) and Dave Rossi (72.03), who finished in fourth, sixth and eighth place, respectively.

The Minutemen travel to Loon Mountain, N.H. this coming weekend, where they will hope to win two, long-giant slalom races.

Wright shines at GBIM

By LAURIE FISHER
Collegian Staff

In conditions conducive for setting or improving individual performances, the University of Massachusetts men's track team did just that Sunday, establishing many of their top times this year at the Greater Boston Invitational Meet held in Harvard's stadium.

The preferred facilities attracted schools from all over New England and well known athletes, including one of America's premier distance runners Joan Benoit, from Athletics West.

Benoit was not the only one to perform exceptionally well. UMass's John Wright won the 60 yard high hurdles with a time of 7:24, breaking his UMass record of 7:30.

"I was not concentrating specifically on breaking the school record as much as running on a level where I should be," Wright said.

It was Wright's most consistent performance this year," coach Ken O'Brien said. "Its encouraging to know he has room to improve." And improve he must, to a time of 7:20, if Wright is to compete in the Nationals held late next month.

Another minuteman winner was 600-yard record holder, Brian Osborne who won the 600 yard event with a time of 1:12.5. Gregg Mader won the third heat of the 600 with a time of 1:14.9. Steve Hyder placed fourth in both weight events, including the shotput.

Two mile runner, Richard Doiron, ran well beyond expectations with a time of 8:47, which earned him fourth place.

"Richard highlighted the day, as he was expected to run about eight seconds slower. He has shown ability to run exceptionally well at this high level," O'Brien said.

W. hoop hosts Dartmouth

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team will attempt to break out of their long, eleven game losing streak when the Minutewomen host New England rival Dartmouth College, tonight at 7:30 p.m. in the Cage.

UMass received top notch performances from Nadine Jackson, Karen Damminger and Kelly Collins in Saturday's loss to Northeastern and look for more of the same tonight.

Professor defends South African trip

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

The ethics of a University of Massachusetts professor's trip to the racially distraught nation of South Africa was the topic of discussion last night called by a concerned student.

Lauren Murray, a plant and soil major who has worked with Dr. Robert T. Wilce for several years, said she felt his trip to South Africa was "a slap in the face to the goals of civility and education at UMass."

"I felt that if Dr. Wilce or the graduate student (who accompanied him) were black they would not have been awarded an opportunity like this," she said.

Wilce traveled to Johannesburg, South Africa last January with graduate student Andrew Davis to discuss his research concerning a "unique problem of a plant species gone wild" to the Sandy Beach Eco-System Congress. 33 nations were represented at the conference.

Wilce was also given the opportunity to travel within the country and visit five universities and a second congress due to overbooked airlines which gave him an additional 10 days prior to the congress and a week after in the country.

"I don't believe for one moment that going there supports the apartheid system," he said in response to the proposition that his trip was an endorsement of South African politics.

"I was interested to learn as well as to teach and tell others of a problem (in my field) common to the whole," he said. "I went as a scientist doing my thing."

Wilce said the scientific community needs to and should communicate regardless of political interests.

"Once you cease communication the whole system falls down. And that's what we did, communicate," he said.

Controversy was also raised over the $600 Wilce received from the Faculty Research Council to fund his trip. Wilce said, however, he knew of no opposition to his trip in the Council.

While in South Africa, Wilce was not oblivious to the effects of that country's government on its people, though his interest in the situation was only "human" and not political, he said.

"I do not consider myself an authority on South African politics," he stressed.

Wilce noted segregated beaches, restaurants and bars and the overall poverty of blacks in the country.

"It will take the best part of five generations, the next 100 years, for them (the blacks) to get educated to run the country. The country they get will be a shambles; they'll have a very hard time making ends meet," he said.

Peace activist says Soviet people fear US

By RICHARD NANGLE
Collegian Staff

An American peace activist who walked through Europe and the Soviet Union last year said in a speech yesterday on the University of Massachusetts campus the Russian people desperately want a nuclear freeze and believe the United States is the aggressor in the arms race.

Kent R. Larrabee, 65, a Quaker from Philadelphia, PA spoke about his nine month journey while presenting a slide-show depicting different events he experienced during his walk.

In February of last year Larrabee joined a 6,500 mile peace walk that began in Seattle, Washington on March 1, 1981. The group proceeded to walk through Scotland, England, France, Belgium, the Netherlands and West Germany. At that point, Larrabee said, the group tried to obtain visas in order to continue their walk through either East Germany or Czechoslovakia. When they were denied entrance to either countries they decided to create a peace camp and spend the winter on the Czechoslovakian border.

Rather than wait until spring to try and obtain another visa, Larrabee said he decided to walk north and enter the Soviet Union through Finland. He arrived at the border in September and after a delay which forced him to travel back to Hamburg, Germany to obtain a visa made his way to Leningrad.

"It is because of the threat of a possible nuclear war — which could happen on purpose or by accident — that the people who walked to Moscow got involved," he said. "People in the United States don't realize how much peace activity there is in the Soviet Union."

Peace groups have sprung up all over the Soviet Union, Larrabee said, and the groups are supportive of their government's party line, which he said they feel is to prevent war.

He said the Soviet people believe their government would agree to reduce all their nuclear weapons if the United States would. He added that Soviets believe the United States is the aggressor in the arms race for the following three reasons:

One reason is the United States was the first and only country ever to use an atomic bomb as an act of war.

Also, the Pentagon has repeatedly said using nuclear weapons can, in some cases, be justifiable.

Furthermore, the Soviet Union has said it will never use a nuclear weapon in a first-strike capacity. On the other hand, the United States has refused to make such a declaration.

"That scares the shit out of them too," Larrabee said.

Soviets can also justify their government's invasion of Afghanistan, he said.

"They feel there was danger of Iranian or CIA influence in Afghanistan. I hear over and over again that the Soviet government regrets invading Afghanistan and is looking for a face-saving way out," he said.

But the Soviet people are not necessarily happy with their government, although they have learned to accept it, Larrabee said.

"I think the average person on the street has learned how to accommodate the system," he said.

Larrabee gave another insight into the feelings of the Soviet people.

"Soviet people make a clear distinction between the American government and the people," he said. "They feel drawn to the American people."

Speaker refutes idea of blacks as a minority group

By GUS MARTINS
Collegian Staff

Tony Brown, host and executive producer of Tony Brown's Journal said last night in the Student Union Ballroom (S.U.B.) that people of African descent the world over are victims of bad information that is organized systematically.

"Some of the myths that we are subject to is that blacks have never contributed to world history, and that blacks can't learn when sitting next to each other in school," Brown said.

"Blacks don't name themselves, in this country they are labelled as a minority group," he said. "If you believe that the entire world begins and ends in the Atlantic to the Pacific Oceans, then we are a minority."

"But if you look beyond that you'll find that eight out of 10 people in the world are not white, and the leaders of OPEC are just as dark as you and I and they control the quality of life in the West," Brown said.

Brown said to be labelled a minority in this country is equal to being poor. But among the 30 million blacks in America the Census Bureau can find he said that they have an awesome power as a people and can be the solution to their own problems.

"The gross national product of black America last year was $160 billion," he said. "We spent $120 billion of that money on goods and services, we are the ninth largest market in the free world."

"We are not poor, we are a market in ourselves," Brown said. "If you took blacks out of America Dow Jones would have died last week."

"The only color of acceptance in America is green and we have got to learn to make our money work for us," he said.

Brown paralleled other ethnic groups such as the Jews, Poles, and Asians and said the money they make changes hands eight times before it leaves their communities, but the money in the black community is spent in a 180 degree fashion.

He said that in Harlem where there is two and one half million blacks, Asians have begun to dominate the Harlem fruit industry.

"We have to learn to love each other and to realize that groups are respected as groups and not as individuals," Brown said.

"We should realize that there are no black stars if the majority of us are persecuted for just being born black."

Brown emphasized that blacks are part of a majority group and should demand the respect accorded with those numbers.

"There are more blacks in the United States than there are Poles in Poland, or Canadians in Canada," he said. "Still we are labeled and considered ourselves a minority group."

"If you don't know where you have been, you don't know where you are going," Brown said.

"We are the best educated non-whites in the world today. We need to learn to use our resources for ourselves," he said.

Brown mentioned that black people enrich the lives of Americans everyday and much of it is shown in the language that comes from the black communities.

"Terms such as 'right on' and 'ripped off' were taken directly from the black areas in America," he said.

"For those of you who watch sports on T.V. know that last year there was no such thing as "high five", look what's happened this year."

"Our culture is so rich that when it becomes part of the mainstream it just evolves," Brown said.

Brown said that no one is capable of teaching blacks to learn better than blacks themselves.

"The 111 black colleges in America graduated more Blacks than the 3000 plus white schools do, we do it better," Brown said.

Brown said that there is nothing wrong with black people in America, "we just have to rid our minds of the awful confusion we have of ourselves."

Israel's Sharon is asked to resign

Leaders ruled at fault in Beirut massacre

JERUSALEM — An Israeli judicial commission on the Beirut massacre called for the ouster of Defense Minister Ariel Sharon yesterday, accusing him of "blunders" that set the stage for the slaughter of Palestinians.

The panel's explosive report, which also rebuked Prime Minister Menachem Begin, rocked Israel's political structure and touched off speculation about early elections — at a time when U.S. pressure is mounting for new Israeli concessions toward a Middle East peace.

Begin and his Cabinet met for two hours yesterday without a decision on Sharon's status, and scheduled another meeting for today.

The three-man commission of inquiry said Israeli leaders should have foreseen that allowing Lebanese militiamen into two Beirut refugee camps last September was an invitation to tragedy.

Hundreds of Palestinians were subsequently slain by the militiamen. An official Lebanese investigation has yet to bring any of the killers to justice.

"No prophetic powers were required to know that concrete danger of acts of slaughter existed," said the commission report.

It also called for the resignation of the head of Israel's military intelligence and condemned the miltary chief of staff. It accused Begin of showing "indifference" to the threat of a massacre in Beirut, but recommended no action against him.

Political uncertainty threatened to linger for days here as the Cabinet grappled with the devastating report.

Israel radio broadcasts report that Sharon was refusing to quit or accept an alternative Cabinet post. But a Cabinet source said almost all the 20 ministers, including Sharon, favored endorsing the findings.

The chairman of Begin's ruling coalition, Avraham Shapira, said after meeting with Begin, however, that the prime minister would not demand Sharon's resignation.

"It's hard for him to do such a thing," Shapira told reporters. "Anyone who knows the prime minister knows he is a noble man, and he respects 'Arik' (Sharon)."

The commission's recommendations are not legally binding, but they carry such moral weight that no government concerned for its image can ignore them.

Two parties in Begin's coalition that previously were against early elections are now willing to go to the polls if Begin so wished, their spokesmen said. They were the National Religious Party and TAMI, an ethnic party of North African Jews.

The small Moscow-aligned Communist Party, meanwhile, proposed a parliamentary no-confidence motion, to be debated next week.

The opposition Labor Party called for the resignation of the entire Begin government but said nothing about early elections.

Despite the commission report, Laborites fear that Begin would be returned to power by his supporters, who have never understood why Israel should be blamed for a massacre of Arabs by Arabs.

The Labor Party has taken a softer line than Begin on some of the major issues that block a long-term settlement of the Mideast conflict.

In Washington, the White House had no comment on the commission report, which it described as an internal matter. On Monday, President Reagan used some of his toughest language yet with Israel, saying it was unnecessarily delaying the withdrawal of its troops from Lebanon.

Yasser Arafat, chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization, said in Jordan Tuesday that the investigatory panel produced "important decisions," but that it should have included a "decisive condemnation" of the Begin government.

In Beirut's Sabra and Chatilla refugee camps, survivors of the Sept. 16-18 massacre were bitter.

Meese: Reagan may run

CAMBRIDGE — Presidential Counselor Edwin Meese III told a Harvard University audience last night that President Reagan has met his national agenda and would likely run for another term.

"I fully expect the President to run in 1984," Meese said. "I expect him to win re-election."

Meese was one of four speakers who analyzed the Reagan Administration's first two years in office. Among the speakers was Rep. James Wright, Majority leader of the Congress.

Wright, who gave Reagan an "A" in communication, but a "D" in economics, called Meese to task during the roundtable discussion for the Administration official's comments on Social Security.

Earlier in the evening, moderator Richard E. Neustadt said many presidents made their mark in their third year in office. Citing one example, he said, "Where would Franklin Roosevelt have been without Social Security?"

Meese then quipped, "I don't know where Franklin Roosevelt would be without Social Security, but I know we would have been a heck of a lot better off without it."

Wright, in later rebuttal, questioned Meese about the statement.

"I hope that was a jest," he said. "There are 36 million Americans in that program, and nothing has done more to create peace of mind."

Ex-UMass president takes Wesleyan job

BOSTON — Robert Wood, one-time U.S. Secretary of Housing and Urban Development and ex-president of the University of Massachusetts, said yesterday he had accepted a professorship at Wesleyan University.

Wood, who also served two stormy years as head of the Boston public school system from 1978-80, said he was happy teaching at UMass Boston for the past two years, but the opportunity at the Middletown, Conn., school was "too good to pass up."

The political scientist said he would use the Henry Luce professorship to research the "use and misuse of experts in public policy and problems of accountability and responsibility." The position, which includes teaching responsibilities, becomes effective July 1.

Wood, 59, of Boston was undersecretary and then secretary of HUD from 1966 to 1969. He was director of the joint center of urban studies for Harvard University and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology from 1969 to 1970, when he resigned to accept the presidency at UMass.

He led the state university from 1970 to 1977, then said he "lost his head" and accepted the job as superintendent of the Boston school system on Sept. 7, 1978.

Hitachi pleads guilty to industrial espionage

SAN FRANCISCO — Hitachi Ltd., one of Japan's largest industrial companies, pleaded guilty yesterday along with two employees to charges that they conspired to send computer secrets stolen from IBM to Japan.

In exchange for the company's plea and payment of a $10,000 fine, the federal government said there would be no further criminal charges against Hitachi, its officers or employees stemming from the highly controversial industrial espionage case.

Hitachi's board of directors authorized the guilty pleas, company lawyer Peter Fleming said.

Hitachi's top management still maintains it "had no knowledge" of a conspiracy.

No presidential run for Arizona Rep. Udall

WASHINGTON — Rep. Morris K. Udall of Arizona has decided not to seek the Democratic presidential nomination, knowledgable sources said late yesterday.

Udall was to announce his decision at a news conference in Washington today, the sources said.

A member of the House since 1961, Udall ran an unsuccessful campaign against Jimmy Carter and other Democrats in 1976, narrowly losing a number of primary elections to Carter, who went on to the White House.

Cape Cod CC wants union affiliation switch

HYANNIS — Teachers at Cape Cod Community College said Tuesday they are backing a movement to switch their affiliation to the smaller Massachusetts Federation of Teachers from the Massachusetts Teachers Association in a statewide election March 8-10.

"The MTA has never gone to Beacon Hill and exerted its muscle on behalf of the community college people," Joel Feigenbaum, a math teacher at Cape Cod Community College, said. "The MTA has not delivered the goods for higher education."

Higher student age at Boston public colleges

BOSTON — The average age of public college students in Boston is climbing, as more young men and women are seeking higher education after spending some years in the workforce, according to a state report yesterday.

The report filed recently by the Board of Regents disclosed also that women outnumber men at the University of Massachusetts-Boston and the Bunker Hill and Roxbury community colleges.

At the university, the average age of a student is 27, and 51 percent of the student body is women. Also, 16 percent are married and 14 percent are from minority groups.

Neil Harrington, a Regents staffer, said that college women now outnumber men statewide and nationally, although he said precise figures were not immediately available.

Brzezinski advocates foreign policy activity

BOSTON — Zbigniew Brzezinski, a former White House advisor, said yesterday he believes President Reagan needs to become much more active in foreign policy problems if he wants to stave off big trouble in three key areas of the world.

"I have become deeply concerned by the trends I see," he told the World Affairs Council of Boston. "We need to become much more active in moving to either avert serious problems or to protect debilitating situations."

Brzezinski, former National Security Advisor to President Jimmy Carter, said the problem areas are East-West relations in Europe, Central America and the Middle East.

"The change in the Soviet leadership under Yuri Andropov signifies a shift in the political center of gravity in the Soviet system," he said. "The political power is now shared by two of the most significant elements, the secret police and the army."

Brzezinski said this means the Soviets internally will aggressively root out corruption and externally will make imaginative efforts to weaken American ties with western Europe and with mainland China.

Gays demand action in closed door meeting

By CRIS SCHUSTER
Collegian Staff

Protesting the inefficient handling of threats and assaults on the gay and lesbian community and the lack of sensitivity of the press towards homosexuals, a coalition of gay groups met last night with the mayor of Northampton and the District Attorney.

The meeting was closed to the press to protect the identities of the gays and lesbians who have been targets of arson threats, property damage and assaults. Two women raped in Northampton last fall have been directly connected with the attacks on lesbians, said Joseph Lamott, a spokesperson for the coalition and the coordinator and public affairs officer of the Pioneer Valley People's Gay Alliance.

The newly formed coalition of gay groups in the Valley, has "pulled together around this issue of harassment and sensitivity of the press," Lamott said.

The threats have allegedly been coming from an Amherst-based group calling themselves Stop Homosexuality Unity Now (SHUN). Lamott said SHUN is probably similar to the group UTOPIA which last fall sent threats to homosexuals.

"The meeting will be the first exchange of information and the opening of a door," Lamott said. The meeting was closed so "there would be a more honest and open exchange" with the mayor, Lamott said.

"The police department has a particular way of handling rape cases that has to be addressed," Lamott said.

Members of the People's Gay Alliance at the University of Massachusetts will be attending the closed meeting and and plan to announce their support for all gay groups. The PGA has had some problems but it is unknown whether it can be attributed to SHUN, said Kevin George, treasurer of the PGA.

A press conference will be held in Northampton today by members of the coalition to announce what happened at the meeting last night. Women who were assaulted and who have received the threats have been invited but it is unknown whether they will attend.

Town selectman race is already heating up

By E.L. BIRK
Collegian Staff

The April 5th Board of Selectmen elections for two three-year seats has engendered some controversy recently as one would-be candidate is disturbed by a recent turn of events.

Vincent O'Connor, Town Meeting member and tenant's rights advocate, was a candidate for one of those seats until Monday afternoon when he withdrew from the race after an "organized sector" of the community opposed him in what he termed a politically motivated attack on his personality.

"The nature of their comments were about me and not my politics," he said.

"I have a temper and I get angry on some issues but on the whole, I've been a responsible town servant," he said. "You can't say I was incompetent."

O'Connor refused to specify which residents or which organizations were opposing him but did chide another candidate, Joanne Levenson, for her behavior.

"Ms. Joanne Levenson categorically stated to me on Wednesday (Feb. 2) that she would not run for the board," he said.

Levenson is director of off-campus housing for the University of Massachusetts.

O'Connor issued a prepared statement before last night's Board of Selectmen's meeting in response to a story published in last night's edition of The Daily Hampshire Gazette in which candidate Levenson is quoted as saying she considered O'Connor's withdrawal a possibility and also speculated on his reason for withdrawal.

"We could have defended each other against political attack," O'Connor said in explaining his and Levenson's reputation as liberals.

Instead she listened to people who said she could get one of the seats by attacking him (O'Connor), he said.

O'Connor said he will support current selectmen Allen Torrey and Fred Steinbeck over Levenson because they embody the characteristics necessary for a person to hold public office.

"There is a minimum that a public official has to have," he said. "His word has to be good and it has to be his own. So when they take a final position you know it's their own."

Graduate Student Senate approves fall fee increase

By RAY BEAUCHEMIN
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Student Senate (GSS) of the University of Massachusetts last night unanimously approved a proposed semester fee increase of 15 percent for the fiscal year 1983-1984.

The proposed increase of $3.50 will raise the current semester fee from $26 to $29.50, a hike primarily the result of an increase in the transit service fee.

"If it weren't for Reagan's cut to mass transit, we would have no problem. That's where the increases have come in the last three years," said Jack Delmond, president of the GSS.

The Reagan administration has cut by 30 percent federal funding for mass transit over a period of four years. The original fee from the UMass Transit Service was $10 per student per semester. The new fee of $22 will be stabilized over the next five years, Delmond said.

The GSS last year charged students $18 and the year before, $15. For '83-84, the senators propose a charge of $21. This will leave a hike of only $1 for the transit service in '84-85.

According to Delmond, the Undergraduate Student Senate raised its transit fee all at once to $22, "But we didn't. We decided we could do it gradually," he said.

The GSS was able to increase the transit portion of the fee in $3 increments because of a $30,000 to $40,000 reserve that had accumulated over the years.

Delmond said it would be unfair to graduate students to sit on the excess money and charge the full hike, so the senate decided to gradually increase the fee and absorb the difference between the actual transit cost and the proposed fee by using the surplus money. The reserve has since run out.

The proposed budget for next year of $194,714, Delmond said, is less than last year's budget despite the transit increase and state mandatory full-costing, an estimated $3,000 increase.

GSS Treasurer Paul Weiss said a line item hearing for individual group funding will be held March 11. Current recipients are asked to complete budget requests and attend the meeting to make their recommendations. The senate will have the final vots.

The GSS also heard a presentation from the Alcohol Education Program of the UMass Health Services concerning new programs it is developing and named Wasyl Matveychuk chairman of the search committee for the Director of Institute of Research and Director of Academic Support Services.

Journalist discusses his fear of libel suits and litigation

Pulitzer-prize-winning author Tracey Kidder who won wide distinction for his book on the creation of a computer, The Soul of a New Machine, spoke at the University of Massachusetts yesterday on the problems of writing about real people.

Fiction writers, in some respects, have fewer worries than non-fiction writers, he said.

"They can sue you if you make them angry enough," he said. As a free lance journalist, Kidder said the chilling effect the threat of court action can have on him is "fierce."

"I have felt chilled from time to time," he said eliciting a tide of chuckles from the 40-member audience comprised of faculty members and students. Kidder, however, said his attorney charges $1,000 each day he is involved in litigation.

"You can put your money in your wife's name or you can be careful," he said. "If what you write about is true and you can prove it, it'll cost you (to cahllenge a libel suit) and you'll win" and then you will have that satisfaction, he said.

A lot of people are afraid of journalists, it's fair that journalists have some one to be afraid of, too, he said.

Though authors are not constantly hindered by libel suits, angered people he writes about don't always have to be a problem.

"If you tell your story accurately and don't jam in too much judgemental prose," he said, "they'll be happy in the end."

Speaking from his experience writing Soul of a New Machine, Kidder said when writing about corporations, the corporate heads often want to reserve the right to give final approval of a story before it is published. That desire for prior restraint, he said, forces an author to weigh between the degree of control he retains over his work and the degree of access a company will allow him.

Kidder's next beek is in the works. Presently, it is in the form of a series of articles on atmospheric science including ozone depletion and acid rain. Kidder resides in the Pioneer Valley.

Regents again discuss admissions standards, union merger attempts

Controversial proposed admissions standards once again drew dissent at a meeting of the Board of Regents at the University of Massachusetts yesterday morning.

The proposed standards which would require a minimum combined SAT score as well as graduation above a certain class rank from high school for admission to a Massachusetts public college were described as discriminatory by Charles Bodhi of the Upward Bound Program.

"There is a great deal of concern within the minority communities that these standards would have an undue impace on those groups," he said. The groups Bodhi specified included minorities and single parent families.

Regent's Chancellor John Duff responded to Bodhi's statements with the assurance that no Regent would allow any discriminatory practices to stem from the minimum standards.

Members of the University Secretary's Association, a clerical workers union, also attended the final meeting and posted pamphlets around the Campus Center accusing the Regents of unethical union bargaining practices. The union contends the Board of Regents is attempting to cripple the union's power by combining it with similar unions on other public college campuses in Massachusetts.

Chancellor Duff again said the board's motivation for combining the union was to run a more efficient system by cutting the number of bargaining units to one instead of one for each campus.

UMass police arrest minors with alcohol and auto vandalizers

Two University of Massachusetts students were charged with being minors in posession of alcohol, police report. While patrolling lot 44, police spotted the two students, who are residents of Brown dormitory carrying alcoholic beverages, at 1 a.m., Monday, police said.

Police report $100 worth of damage was done to a 1982 Oldsmobile yesterday morning. Two rear mirrors were pulled off the car while it was parked in lot 49.

Amherst police report a Pioneer Valley Transit Authority (PVTA) bus struck guard rails while it was crossing Route 116 at 10:20 a.m., Monday. No one was injured and the bus was removed by the PVTA repair crew in 15 minutes.

A 10-year old Amherst boy was uninjured after he was hit by a car yesterday morning as he ran across College Street, Amherst. The driver was not charged after he hit Joseph Casanova, of 186 College Street, according to police.

Unproduced scripts are wanted by theatre dept. for audience scrutiny

Unproduced scripts are being considered for the sixth season of "Theatre-in-the-Works," a developmental program for playwrights jointly sponsored by the theater department at the University of Massachusetts and Commonwealth Stage, Ltd.

"Theatre-in-the-Works" is designed to help playwrights who have unproduced plays that could benefit from a workshop production.

The program gives playwrights the opportunity to work with a director for one week, and rehearse with professional and experienced actors during a second week. At the end of the second week, the play is performed twice for audiences who discuss the play after each performance.

Each playwright receives an honorarium of $300 a week for two weeks plus travel reimbursement. Playwrights are responsible for living expenses, but the company does provide inexpensive housing.

Unproduced scripts should be sent with a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Virginia Scott, Resident Dramaturg of the "Theatre-in-the-Works" program, at the Fine Arts Center before February 15. The four plays chosen for production will be announced on May 1.

Is There Life After College?

Phoenix Mutual assures you we have a fine future for you in life insurance. With all the variety, challenge, and rewards you could ask for.

Our beautiful, strikingly modern home office building was the first two-sided office structure ever built. Standing on the banks of the Connecticut River, it's still one of the landmark sites of Hartford.

Certainly, it's no ordinary building. But then again, Phoenix Mutual is no ordinary insurance company. If you're looking for a rewarding career, you'll find us a very good place to work.

BIG ENOUGH TO COUNT. SMALL ENOUGH SO YOU COUNT.

We're one of the twenty largest life insurance companies in the U.S. and steadily growing. So we can offer you security and steady progress. At the same time, we're not too big to not care about every employee. Our training programs are very specific and very extensive. They include intensive programs at nearby campuses, as well as self-study courses and on-the-job training. All company paid, of course: you earn while you learn.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR ACTUARIAL STUDENTS AS WELL AS DATA PROCESSING PROFESSIONALS.

The range of our activities may surprise you. If you're interested in figures or almost any aspect of insurance, we are seeking (and train) actuarial students to enter a formal program offering rotating job assignments affording exposure in most departments along with company paid study time. Our Data Processing Department also seeks highly motivated individuals to enter 3 months of intensive study in basic data processing techniques.

HARTFORD: SMALL-TOWN CHARM, AND BIG-CITY SOPHISTICATION.

Mark Twain, who lived in Hartford, said "You do not know what beauty is if you have not been here." Just 2 hours from New York or Boston, this pleasant, warm, relaxed city has taverns, discos and night clubs. The opera, ballet, symphony, 48 public parks, fine shopping and dining all make it an enjoyable area to live and work in.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Squeal Law is contradictory

It's called the "squeal law." In a ruling by the Department of Health and Human Services, all federally funded family planning agencies will be required to notify the parents of minors (17 and under) if their children are receiving prescription birth control methods from those clinics. Unless it is blocked by the Congress, the new ruling will take effect February 25th. Politically, it is characteristic of the contradictory policies of the Reagan Administration, an administration which time and time again has shown its lack of compassion for those individuals dependent on the government for essential services. In the short-run, the effects of such a ruling will be devastating.

John F. Hudson

According to the Family Planning Council of Western Massachusetts, in a recent poll of those minors receiving birth control devices from federally funded agencies, 25 percent indicated they would stop going to the clinics if the ruling took effect. Yet only two percent of these individuals would stop having sex, the other 23 percent apparently taking their chances and running the risk of unwanted pregnancy. In a recent address Mr. Reagan indicated he thought the new squeal rule would discourage promiscuity among teenagers, a problem which he apparently views more pressing than the idea of nuclear war on the plight of the thousands of unemployed and homeless in this country. The poll directly contradicts this dubious assumption.

Perhaps the President feels as though the programs themselves are ineffective, prime examples of a bloated bureaucracy serving its employees better than its clients. Again the numbers prove the President wrong. The Planned Parenthood Association, the largest of the family planning agencies in the U.S., points to a recently published study which points to the undeniable effectiveness of providing birth control methods to teenagers. In 1979, over 400,000 unwanted pregnancies were averted by the services of family planning agencies all over the United States.

On an economic level, Reagan and those in the Department of Health and Human Services should realize what this figure means. Less unwanted pregnancies translate into less social problems. It means less children in the Aid to Dependent Children program, less mothers on welfare assistance less tenants in the rent subsidy program and less mouths to feed with the food stamp program. The President sincerely believes less government is essential, yet the ruling could have the effect of straining the already overburdened workloads of numerous federal and state social assistance agencies.

In a related development, the American Civil Liberties Union is planning on filing suit as soon as the new ruling takes effect. They claim the rule arbitrarily violates the constitutionally guaranteed right-to-privacy. Again, another contradiction comes to light in the Reagan Administration's policies; in this case their belief that the government should get off the backs of the people. Ironically, the new ruling now invites Uncle Sam directly into the bedrooms and backseats of thousands of American teenagers. It is a case of the government dictating morality, a morality based neither in compassion nor logic. Many claim the influence of the New Right has diminished the morality angle of the ruling clearly eminated from these circles of political power. Score one for the New Right.

The final, and most ironic part of the new ruling, is its inherent sexism. Unlike the only male birth control method, condoms, those methods which must be prescribed are those used exclusively by women. The I.U.D., diaphragm and the pill must be prescribed by a doctor, thereby causing only the parents of teenage girls to be informed of their daughter's so called "promiscuity." Thus, teenage boys need not worry about their own access to birth control methods. Theoretically, this means the ruling will not reach half of all those it intends to reach. It tacitly approves of male promiscuity while condemning a females right to take part in sexual relations. Other than representing a throwback to the fifties in its ignorant view of teenage morality, it indicts the Administration as a tool of the sexist, backward moralist "preachers" who have desperately called for a halt to our national moral decay. Score one for the "Ozzie and Harriet" morality.

In an interesting sidelight to the whole problem, Peg Heckler, the former Congresswoman from Massachusetts, is about to take part in confirmation hearings concerning her nomination as Secretary of Health and Human Services. During her tenure in the House of Representatives, Heckler vocally opposed the "squeal rule." Since her nomination, nary a word has been heard from Mrs. Heckler. Score one for political arm-twisting and the tragic lack of backbone on Heckler's part.

The new squeal rule is a larger indication of the haphazard, arbitrary way in which the Reagan Administration develops social policy. Devoid of compassion for the poor, respect for the constitution or a true understanding of the America of today, Reagan and the Department of Health and Human Services are living in the past. Unfortunately it was a past of backroom abortions, illegitimate outcasts and a morality based on ignorance rather than compassion. Wake up Mr. President, its 1983 — or is it 1984?!

Letters

ASL letter filled with errors

To the Editor:

We would like to take this opportunity to clarify some of the misinformation in Joanne P. Giorgio's letter (CASIAC credit for signing? February 2, 1983). We have been working with CASIAC for some time toward the goal of having American Sign Language (ASL) accepted in fulfillment of the foreign language requirement. While we support Ms. Giorgio's basic premise, we feel ASL should be approved because it satisfies all the criteria applied to any foreign language and NOT because it is the language of the "handicapped population."

ASL is the 4th most used language in the United States and is the primary language of over half a million deaf persons. Although signs and gestures from ASL have been adapted for use by members of multihandicapped populations, it is the language of the deaf, many of whom consider themselves members of a cultural minority within American society.

For this reason, the motivation for learning ASL should be no different than that for learning French, Swedish or any other foreign language. For a person to undertake the study of ASL to "help the handicapped" is as insulting to the deaf population as it is to Hispanics when someone decides to take up Spanish with the same paternalistic desire to help the "disadvantaged."

Ms. Giorgio states that courses in ASL also examine the culture and history of the handicapped. They do not. They examine the culture and history of the deaf population. She also states that ASL "can be understood by signers all over the world. Knowing signs can make learning about other societies easier by being able to communicate with people of all countries who know sign language." This, unfortunately, is completely false. ASL is American Sign Language, the language used by deaf Americans. It is a discreet, independent language that has no more connection with any other language than it does with English.

Throughout her letter, Ms. Giorgio reiterates that knowledge of ASL is helpful to those working with a "handicapped population." It is obvious to us that she is referring to those who, because of physiological and/or mental disabilities, cannot receive or express verbal language.

Since ASL has been irrefutably shown to meet all of the requirements set forth by linguists to define a foreign language, we feel CASIAC should judge its acceptance on this basis alone and not on well-intentioned, but irrelevant pleas for "more communication with the handicapped."

Comic offensive to women

To the Editor:

We wish to discuss the topic of your comic strip "After the Fall" of February 7. We feel that the theme which you tried to express was deeply offensive to women who continually strive to promote social equality.

Through your characters, it is obvious that you have never contemplated or researched the role of women in contemporary American society. The female's first exclamation leads to the delusion that women will bring up the issue of social (in)equality whether or not that issue is in context. Your sarcastic "humor" serves to perpetuate the stereotype that feminists are extremists. Moreover, the way in which the male character reacts (by sobbing over the wheel) reinforces the absurdity of the woman's anger. Your portrayal of how a woman reacts to sexism is shallow and ignorant.

From past experiences with this problem in the Collegian, we have noticed cartoonists will argue that they bring social issues into the limelight through their strips in order to enlighten their peers. In reality, these types of cartoons which are (or are not) meant to "educate", often serve to promote the stereotyping of particular groups or individuals — by precisely those readers who should be educated.

This comic strip is a reflection of the larger problem that UMass cartoonists have limited themselves to constantly recycling the same three themes of "sex and drugs and rock'n'roll."

Two diverse majors under threat

To the Editor:

A consolidation of the Food Engineering and Food Science and Nutrition departments has been proposed, effective March 1, 1983. We, as Food Engineering students, must write to oppose such a merger.

Financial savings have been given as one of the major justifications for the merger. However, no such long or short term savings have been demonstrated.

While the merger vastly affects the students, until recently, little input from the students has been sought or well-received. We feel that this is important to the community.

Columnists, new writers invited!

Student aid a political football

Last December a group of 40 students called Students Advocating Financial Aid (SAFA) traveled to Washington, D.C. for the purpose of reminding their congressmen and senators that continued financial aid is a necessity — not an easily removable luxury. SAFA's performance in Washington merits a personal applause by this admittedly conservative writer.

Financial assistance for college students should not become a political football. It is, however, a wise investment in our nation's future. If the government can help bail out Lockheed and Chrysler with loans — why isn't the same urgency felt on Capitol Hill for helping those who will be shaping our future? If our government can afford to bail out large and vital private companies — why then is it so reluctant to maintain a sensible level of funding for future college students? Granted, one man's idea of what a sensible level of funding may be an entirely different level to another — but do wholesale cuts have to be made without any consideration of the long-range effects?

The loans for Lockheed and Chrysler were properly justified for economical and defensive reasons. Our economy could not sustain the massive loss of jobs and defaults if those two companies folded. Furthermore, we need the parts and planes they produce for our national defense.

A similar argument for justifying continued support for college financial aid for our national economy and defense can be established. Wouldn't it be a waste of our youthful talent if a sizeable number of prospective qualified students were discouraged from attending higher educational institutions because badly needed funds weren't available? Where else are we going to train future top-notch Chief Executive Officers in the private sector, and top-notch Admirals and Generals for our defense?

Since our economic structure and defensive needs are becoming increasingly complex, we need the highest number of qualified people possible to fulfill these needs. But, we're not going to find ourselves able to fulfill these needs if we allow an unnecessary constriction of available funds to occur.

Some conservatives argue, and rightly so, that the college loan and grant programs have been continuously abused by those who are undeserving, (prison inmates receiving BEOG/Pell Grants) and those who are not repaying their loans. Some detractors of college aid even go so far to say the programs should be scrapped because of the abuses, or at least greatly reduced to the barest minimum level imaginable. Their anger and disgust, albeit justifiable at the moment, must also be tempered by a lack of haste. Let's cut out the abuses — not the programs en masse.

Let the government go after the abusers like the graduate from Harvard Medical School who while never missing a payment on his Mercedes-Benz somehow or another managed to disregard his obligation to his creditor. But we too, as taxpayers, are his creditors. Surely, if the government can find a way to justify attaching strings like draft registration to college aid (highly discriminatory against males!), it can also find ways to make the "dead beats" pay — and pay dearly for their arrogant disregard of their duties and responsibilities as citizens.

Gutting an investment program for our future because of the acts of a few irresponsible and selfish people is not the way to solve the problem. Buck-passing, finger pointing and demagoguery won't save nor should be used to condemn college financial aid. But getting the students, (through their respective organizations), government leaders and bankers together wouldn't hurt in the least. It's a start instead of a retreat.

The students whom I had the pleasure of traveling to Washington with, were by no means a group of glossy-eyed liberal dreamers. They were pragmatic and hopeful, yet realistic. When SAFA returns to Washington this semester, just remember that a handful of students are not only trying to improve the economic lot of nearly 80 percent of the enrollment here at UMass; but they are also helping students of all walks of life and political persuasions across the nation.

Walter Lippmann once wrote in 1957 that "...the support of education — by the localities, the states, and the federal government — is like the support of the national defense. It is a public and patriotic duty which this generation owes to the next." What was written over twenty-five years ago is still true today. Lippmann gave his views during the Sputnik era; yet his views seem to gain more importance and significance insofar as the future of higher education is concerned in the 1980s. We live in a more perilous period, and the need for more qualified people in all sectors of life cannot and should not be understated and ignored. It still remains our "public and patriotic duty" to provide the best education for the greatest number of people. In order to do this, some government help and good faith assistance is needed. (So is a good faith effort on the part of the students to repay their obligations.) We cannot forget life is often a two-way street.

If SAFA and other similar organizations remain successful in maintaining a sensible level of funding for college aid; many people will owe a great debt of gratitude for the strong and selfless efforts of a few.

Strange semester at UMass

This semester just doesn't feel right.

Maybe it doesn't feel right because the weather lately has been so unusual. While I'm real glad that my house on Malibu Beach didn't wash away, I can't seem to coordinate an accumulation of my personal wealth with enough snow so I can go skiing. But as an out-of-state student from New Jersey, I know damn well that New England winters are supposed to be bitter cold with eight inches of snow falling every night, and school cancelled at least three days a week.

I suppose there are a lot of reasons for the sense of misplacement I keep getting whiffs of it as I resume the daily trudge back and forth across campus. Over and over and over again. The same paths that I have been traveling since Freshman year. Some are even paved now. But I don't miss the mud on the cuffs of my pants, nor do I miss the water sloshing around in my shoes.

Classes are another fairly reliable indication of the peculiar status of my life right now. First of all, they've all got these big, high numbers that I was led to believe only hyper-intellectuals took. But people have let me take them! And the faces that turn around to stare at me when I walk in at my customary four-minutes-late arrival time aren't the faces of lifeless strangers, but classmates I have agonized with through all the prerequisites necessary before mounting this academic pinnacle. But these people don't hesitate to give me shit about my traditional tardiness.

I am not spending every waking minute in the tower library poring over some obscure text written in minute print so I can write my undergraduate thesis. Nor am I so tuned-in to the vibes of UMass that I can blow millions of brain cells away on a wild night without once thinking about how my unconventional lifestyle will affect my cumulative average. But when I was a freshman, every senior I knew fell into one of those two categories. Did I miss something?

Now I live in the foreign town of South Amherst. Which is not to be confused with the foreign town of Orchard Hill. As a Southwest baby for three years, I have left the world of the sandbox for that of the sand trap. But I miss being able to sleep until a half hour before class and making it there only four minutes late.

I now have friends that are on their own and earning a living. They have entered into the same Real World that is dangled before our greedy jaws like a placebo-carrot, a just reward for our collegiate efforts. The Marketing major is selling silverware to farmers in Iowa, the Animal Science major is working in a pet shop, and the Journalist is in line for the bathroom at the local hole-in-the-wall. But the corporate world promised to be ready for me and my colleagues. They promised to be sitting at the edge of their seats, breathless, waiting for the fresh insights and educated opinions of me, the College Graduate.

While I was home over intersession, I attended a birthday party my parents held for a good friend of theirs. I anticipated a staid, pompous affair with lots of talk about new tax laws and the increasing difficulty of finding a really good place to get tires rotated. But they talked, and laughed and gave gifts from Spencer's that I thought weren't sold to anyone over twenty, and were just generally human. I've been to some parties here at UMass that can't claim as much.

My guess is that, in time, things will feel right again. The snow will come, but this time it will be in April. I'll be scrambling to get into "Eats 100" as I suddenly realize that without another "E" core, I won't ever graduate from this place. The seniors I know now still fall into two categories: those with cars and those without. Someday I will leave Amherst and enter into another foreign country like Idaho, where I will probably earn a living as a B.A. in English by correcting the grammar of urban graffitti. And eventually, I, too, will be able to have a generation gap with my children.

Now that's a routine I can handle.

Students more materialistic

Are American college students getting more materialistic? According to a recently released report on the attitudes of first year college students, this year's freshmen are more materialistic and less reformist than any class ever surveyed in the 17-year history of American Council of Education's annual report.

The figures paint a dark picture for the political future of the United States. Almost 70 percent say that "being well off financially" was "very important" while in the halcyon days of 1967, the figure was only 44 percent. A similar amount of this year's freshman class think that financial gain is a "very important" reason for attending college.

Freshmen have also grown more conservative. While they are more supportive of national health care and abortion, fewer are in favor of busing to achieve racial balance in schools, and only 35 percent are in favor of affirmative action in college admissions. About one in five surveyed thought environmental clean-up or community-action programs do any good, even fewer say they would want to "influence the political structure."

If you want a good example of this political inaction as reflected by those figures, you could look at the nuclear freeze movement. Only after the town councils, church groups, and veterans of the various sixties struggles (the people who never did put down their placards) got actively involved in the movement did the students join in. The same could be said about the Central America debate. Instead of initiating political action, today's students have just been following the lead of others.

Are we guilty of just hanging back and watching the political parade pass by? Are we more self-centered than our older brothers and sisters that brought the Vietnam War home to the campuses and put it to an end? I think that it is still premature to sound the death knell for campus politics. There still are a hard-core group of people that are politically active. But if we are to affect social change, we must do more than let them do the blocking for us while we wait for the right time to join in. The campuses have traditionally been a spawning group for political change, but lately things have been too quiet.

If we really are going to get more politically active, the time is overdue for people to get off their collective butts and do something. Should we just be a reflection of the status quo, interested only in our self-interests, or should we make our voices known to the people governing us? All you have to do is pick up the newspaper, and you'll see plenty of reasons to get involved. We still have the power to change the world, we have only just forgotten how to use it.

For live music, it's a classic

To the Editor:

When it comes to going out for a live concert, classical music has it all over rock and roll. No? Look. Here's 9 good reasons why it's true.

1. Classical music is not performed at Madison Square Garden, Shea Stadium, the Boston Gardens, or any other non-acoustical hockey rink.
2. I never get frisked at the door going in to see classical music.
3. The ushers at classical concerts are all smaller than I am, speak quietly and politely, and are easily intimidated.
4. At the orchestra the person in front of me rarely stands on their chair, or gets on someone's shoulders — blocking my view for three hours.
5. No one pukes on me at classical concerts.
6. During quiet woodwind sections no one comes up to me at the Philharmonic, loudly offering to sell me pure mescaline, 95 percent cocaine, or the very last of Owlsley's acid. (All out of the same two pound baggie.)
7. "ARE YA HAVIN' A GOOD TIME?", "LET ME HEAR YA SAY 'YEAH'", or "IT's GREAT TO BE BACK IN...uh...BOSTON" was never screamed by Leonard Bernstein or Eugene Ormandy.
8. The orchestra plays well without strobe lights, fire flashes, lasers, stageprops, or 120 pounds of cocaine for the band.
9. The orchestra does not tell me to buy their latest album.

CAFE AMARETTO SWEEPSTAKES

How to be a romantic and kiss next year's tuition good-bye.

GRAND PRIZE: One student will win a free full-year's tuition. SECOND PRIZE: On each college campus, one winner will receive $50 towards a romantic dinner for two. SPECIAL BONUS: On Valentine's Day, the first 100 students who bring their entry forms to their campus bookstore will receive a red "silk" rose.

OFFICIAL RULES 1. NO PURCHASE NECESSARY. To enter, complete and deposit the Official Entry Form in the Cafe Amaretto entry box at your participating College bookstore. 2. Alternate means of entry: If you do not wish to, or cannot, visit your participating bookstore, you may mail your completed entry to: Cafe Amaretto Sweepstakes, Dept. 060, P.O. Box 17, New York, NY 10046. In addition, print the full name of your college on the lower left hand corner of your mailing envelope. You may also enter by handprinting your name and complete address and the words: CAFE AMARETTO on a 3" x 5" piece of paper. 3. Enter as often as you like, but each entry must be sent by first class mail (one entry per envelope) or deposited separately. Mechanically reproduced entries. All entries must be deposited by March 7, 1983 and mail entries received by March 11, 1983 to be eligible. Drawing will be held on April 15, 1983. 4. The Grand Prize is one year's college tuition for one person. The Grand Prize winner will be selected in a random drawing from all entries received prior to the deadline by Marden-Kane, Inc., an independent judging organization whose decisions are final. Prize payment will be made in the winner's name directly to the college or university at which he/she is registered. Payment will be made upon submission and verification of documents identifying the winner as a registered student, as well as required invoices for tuition payment. In the event the winner is a college senior and does not expect to enroll in a graduate program, tuition for the current year will be reimbursed. Taxes, if any, are sole responsibility of winner. No transfer, exchange or substitution of prize. Grand Prize winner will be notified by mail and will be required to sign an Affidavit of Eligibility and Release. Odds of winning the Grand Prize depend upon the number of entries received. 5. From each participating college, one winner of a $50.00 gift certificate for a dinner for two will be selected in a random drawing. Odds of winning depend upon the number of entries received at each college. 6. Special bonus: 100 handcrafted roses will be handed out at participating bookstores on Valentine's Day, February 14, 1983 to the first 100 students that deposit their entry forms that day. 7. Sweepstakes open only to registered college students, 18 years of age and older, who are residents of the United States, and are from participating colleges, except employees (and their families) of General Foods Corporation, its affiliates, subsidiaries, agencies, and Marden-Kane, Inc. Void where prohibited by law. All federal, state and local laws and regulations apply. 8. All winners will be notified by mail provided the winning participants are available at the addresses shown on their entry blanks, or have furnished sweepstakes officials with the proper forwarding address prior to the date of the drawing. 9. For a list of the Grand Prize and gift certificate winners, mail a stamped, self-addressed envelope to: Cafe Amaretto Winners, P.O. Box No. 226, New York, NY 10046.

Saturday, February 5
Guiding Star Grange Hall, Greenfield

By DOUGLAS MUISE
Collegian Staff

A lot of people have got some truly erroneous conceptions of what hardcore punk is all about. They see it as a patently violent and amoral sort of thing. And boy, when they first catch sight of that mad ballet of slam dancers at the foot of the stage: "My word, those youngsters are hurting each other!"

But they've got it all wrong. I wish such people could have been at the Guiding Star Grange (yes, there is a display case chock full of 4-H trophies in the corner) Saturday night because hardcore really isn't like that.

The show was billed as "all ages" meaning (yes) that just about any and everyone could get in. Alcohol and cigarettes were not allowed in the hall so there was a total absence of any beer-inspired machoism; the kids behaved themselves. And there was a major diversity of them to be found: a lot of spiky, leather-jacketed folk, a lot of skin heads too, but also a large portion of regular kids in jeans and T's who were just out to hear the music and have fun.

A grange hall seemed the idea place for the event to happen at — so unpretentious and so remotely located that you knew everyone in the place had an honest interest in the show. And honesty was really the word for the evening. The air was one of undeniable community and sharing. I felt that I was truly at the primal roots of some burgeoning underground movement. Something like — "We're all in this together. We've all got teachers, presidents, and attitudes we all hate so let's talk about it!" The ambiance was just that incredible.

The slamming was as expected: fast, frenetic, furious. There were people everywhere climbing, stage-diving, squirming, bouncing, flying all over the place to the chainsaw rhythms of whatever band was up at the moment. But it was cool. No one was getting hurt and everyone was having fun.

There's this stigma associated with slamming that's unjustified. Sure it looks violent enough, violent as hell with all of those bodies careening off of one another. But look closely. When someone dives off of the stage, there are always arms outstretched to catch him, to break his fall. If a dancer should stumble in the midst of the pit, he is immediately helped to his feet by his fellows. Should a body rocket to the perimeter of the ring, he is always gently directed back towards the center. Violent? Heck, non-violence it seems to me is what slamming is all about. And the sense of camaraderies in the pit is definite. These kids are not directing their aggressions at one another, but pooling them into one collective tumble of anger. Slamming is a means of diminishing that tension adolescence so often encourages, in an athletic, yet harmless manner. A friendly, reciprocated slam into a buddy is a lot less painful than slamming into a brick wall or actually pounding into someone on the streets. The aggression is always going to be there and slam-dancing is a pretty good means of release.

The same philosophy holds true for the people on stage. The medium is the message you might say, but somehow I don't think so. These kids are tired of the bullshit and just want to live sincere, sober existences —

"See this tattoo?" said the lead singer of DYS, "This 'X' here means that you don't need to smoke or drink to have a good time!"

Contrary to popular belief, hardcore does — in its own way — face up to a lot of issues pressuring today's youth: Reaganomics, gun control, the threat of nuclear war, draft registration, even that math teacher you hate. This is all relevant stuff.

The majority of the bands played amateurish, but thoroughly inspired sets — most of the groups being composed of kids in their teens. Stand-out sets, however, were provided by the likes of the Junior Hostesses (more of a dance band than a hardcore one), All White Jury (the vocalist with the mohawk was wild!), and Deep Wound — all from Western Mass.; and DYS and the F. U.'s — both from Boston.

Midway through the Junior Hostesses' set, however, something went wrong. The hall's light was dashed on as the band stopped playing. Someone grabbed the mike and announced that people were being caught bringing in alcohol and that, as a result, the bands might not be allowed to play the grange again.

Well, by the time the F.U.'s (the final band) reached the stage, the announcement had been made that the people who run the grange were going to let the bands come back. The crowd became estatic as the slamming was resumed with renewed intensity.

Western Mass's hardcore scene may not compare, as of yet, with LA's or DC's, but it's definitely happening. And the kids have really got the right attitudes to make it work.

Gabba, gabba, hey!!! Great news for people who like to walk through corridors without stepping on bodies. After last weeks Phil Collins fiasco (who will ever forget the Campus Center Corridor littered with sleeping carcasses at 8:00 in the morning?), UPC has changed the locations for Ramones tickets sales.

Tickets will still go on sale Thursday, February 10, but they will not be available at Union Records. That is to say, Union Records will not be selling Ramones tickets. Tickets will be sold at TIX, the Fine Arts Center Box Office, and For the Record, in Amherst Center. UPC has also announced that the group, Shrapnel, will be the opening act.

UMass dominates the Big Green

Minutewomen snap 11 game losing streak in upset win

By ADAM NAZIMOWITZ
Collegian Staff

A balanced scoring attack, good defense and an effective full court press helped the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team snap an 11 game losing streak as they won their first game since December 14 in defeating Dartmouth College, last night at the Cage, by a score of 75-67.

Five different UMass women scored in double figures led by Wendy Ward's 21 points and six steals. Also contributing to the winning effort were Karen Damminger with 14 points, six rebounds and five steals; Nadine Jackson with 11 points and 10 rebounds; Barbara Hebel with 10 points, four rebounds and three assists; and Kelly Collins with 10 points and four rebounds.

Dartmouth College was led by Ann Deacon's outside shooting which resulted in 24 points, and the inside game of Jayne Daigle who finished with 16 points and 11 rebounds.

UMass opened up the game with a man to man defense while Dartmouth utilized a zone defense. UMass came out strong with a tough defense and good hustle to go out ahead early. They began to use a full court press which worked well and resulted in quite a few Dartmouth turnovers and Minutewomen baskets. Some unselfish play and the inside game of Nadine Jackson helped UMass keep the lead throughout the first part of the first half.

The only time that Dartmouth seriously threatened the Minutewomen was in the first half when they began to hit their shots and penetrate the UMass press to take a one point lead. But, Wendy Ward scored six straight points as she took command and paced the Minutewomen for the rest of the game as they went ahead for good.

UMass led at halftime by a score of 40-32, and held that comfortable margin through the second half as Dartmouth just could not cut into the UMass lead. They tried a press, but the Minutewomen remained cool and penetrated it pretty easily, and that was a big factor in the game. UMass created 30 Dartmouth turnovers while turning over the ball themselves only 13 times.

There was obviously a different and more confident feeling in tonight's game as the Minutewomen played their kind of game with few mistakes and 45 percent shooting. They were out rebounded by Dartmouth by a count of 45-41, but also stole the ball 16 times to Dartmouth's nine.

The game was played before a crowd of 100 in the Curry Hicks Cage and was broadcast live on WMUA. Karen Damminger and possibly some other members of the team will be live on the air tonight, Wednesday from 6-7 p.m. on Sports Cafe broadcast live on WMUA 91.1 FM and hosted by Elliot Kalb. You can talk to the players by calling 545-2876.

The win brings the Minutewomen's record to 5-17. Their next game will be on Saturday at Maine-Orono, before returning home next Wednesday to face Central Connecticut in the Cage.

League leading Bruins on the road to a Stanley Cup

By GEORGE MARTINS
Collegian Staff

Good news is all that there is to report on the progress of the Boston Bruins. During this time span the team compiled a record of 12 wins, 1 loss, and 2 ties and currently have the best record in the National Hockey League.

The Bruins haven't changed their style of play all year and that is the reason for their consistent success. That style consists of tenacious forechecking and unselfish play by the forwards which makes life easier for the defense. The defense, which is led by Ray Bourque, keeps the slot clear and makes life easier for Pete Peeters, who is the best goalie in the league.

There have been changes in the Bruins lineup in the last month. Luc Dufour, a 19 year old rookie from Quebec, has replaced Terry O'Reilly on the line with Tom Fergus and Bruce Crowder. O'Reilly has been lost for the season due to a knee injury that he suffered during a game in Minnesota.

Another rookie, first round draft pick Gord Kluzak, is finally getting a regular shift replacing Randy Hillier who is injured. Also, Marco Baron has been called up from Baltimore to be the backup goalie and Mike Moffat was sent down.

The Bruins lead the Adams Division, the toughest in the league, by ten points over the second place Montreal Canadiens. The Canadiens are starting to feel the effects of a pre-season trade with Washington in which they traded their two best defensemen, Brian Engblom and Rod Langway to Washington for forward Ryan Walter. The days of Montreal as an NHL powerhouse appear to be over, yet they should do well enough this year to finish in second place. The Buffalo Sabres and the Quebec Nordiques will battle for third place.

The Patrick Division, the second toughest division in the league, are led by the Philadelphia Flyers. The Flyers have not felt the loss of Pete Peeters due to the tremendous play of goalies Pelle Lindbergh and Bob Froese. The Flyers hold a comfortable lead over the second place New York Islanders.

It appears that time has caught up with the Islanders. The team is pretty much the same squad that won three straight Stanley Cups. What has changed is the rest of the league, it has improved greatly and the Islanders haven't. They still have extremely talented players such as Mike Bossy and Bryan Trottier but they don't have the depth to win their division. They will have to battle the young Washington Capitols for second place. The New York Rangers, who are outrageously overrated by the media, will finish in fourth place.

In the two remaining divisions there are only three teams that have a real chance of going anywhere; the Edmonton Oilers, the Chicago Black Hawks, and the Minnesota North Stars.

The Oilers have a wide edge over Calgary in the Smythe Division. They have super talent in Wayne Gretsky, Paul Coffey, Glenn Anderson, and Mark Messier, and have a durable goaltender in Andy Moog.

The Black Hawks and North Stars will battle for first place in the Norris Division. The Hawks are the surprise team in the NHL. They have been recieving outstanding goaltending from Murray Bannerman. The scoring has been spread around, as is necessary for a good team. The North Stars are an explosive scoring team but are weak on defense.

The regular season has but two months remaining and then the quest for Lord Stanleys Cup, the Holy Grail of hockey, will begin. Anything can happen when the playoffs begin, as witnessed by the fact that the Vancouver Canucks, a very weak team, made it to the finals last year.

Look for a Stanley Cup final between the Bruins and the North Stars. They are the two best teams in hockey.

Mermen top UVM, face UNH

Why settle for just one, when you can double your fun, right? The University of Massachusetts men's swimming team would certainly say "Amen" to that as they successfully created double-trouble last Saturday at the Boyden pool by virtue of their 64-49 victory over the University of Vermont. Earlier in the day, the women swimmers had cruised past Rhode Island in the same pool.

Chris Porter was the main man for UMass in this one as he had a direct hand in Minuteman victories in three events. Porter won the 50-yard freestyle in 22.54 seconds and the 100-yard freestyle in 49.64. He then teamed up with Brian Spellman, Rich Plunkett and Samuel to register a win in the 400-yd. freestyle relay in 3:21.66.

Other UMass triumphs came in the 400-yd. medley relay, 200-yd. freestyle, and the 200-yd. backstroke. Mark Surettee, Tom Lowery, Spellman and Plunkett combined forces to win the relay in 3:46.80. Spellman won the victor in the freestyle with a time of 1:51.75. John Mulvaney swam his way to victory in the backstroke, registering a time of 2:07.08.

"We changed the lineup a little bit, but the kids swam pretty well," said UMass swimming coach Russ Yarworth.

The swimmers' next meet is tonight, Wednesday at 7:00 p.m. versus the University of New Hampshire in the Boyden Pool. They also have meets against Amherst and Central Connecticut remaining before the New England Championships March 3-6 at Springfield.

Women skiers undefeated

By MATT LUCZKOW
Collegian Correspondent

CHARLEMONT, MA. — The University of Massachusetts women's ski team maintained their undefeated status in the Women's Intercollegiate Ski Conference by winning both slalom races this past weekend at Berkshire East ski area.

In the dual-slalom race on Saturday, the Minutewomen outmatched their opponents with a total team time of 194.40 seconds (best 3 of 5 — individual times). Plymouth State College came in second place at 206.70 and Brown University took third place with a time of 206.89.

Winning the head-to-head competition, was UMass sophomore standout Sue White who clocked a combined time of 63.33 seconds (total of 2 runs). Stephanie Shumway, from Brown, finished second at 63.50, while UMass co-captain Theresa Collins took third with a time of 64.57. Senior Leslie Dale (66.50) took 6th place and freshman Lisa Luczkow (69.53 took 11th place, while Sue Levy, Laurie Webber and Diana Swain captured 17th, 18th and 20th place respectively for UMass (out of 50 women racers).

UMass posted a team time of 229.84 for first place, while Brown took second (251.71) and Plymouth SC finished third (252.90).

Winning her fifth race of the season and leading the way for UMass was White, who had a combined time of 74.20 in the slalom. Shumway (76.17) took second for Brown. Also finishing in the top ten for UMass were Collins (77.24), Dale (79.43) and Luczkow (81.76), who came in third, fourth and eighth place respectively.

At this point in the competition season, the women's ski team stands alone on top of the WISC league with a 6-0 record.

The skiers will head to another tournament at Loon Mountain this weekend to compete in two giant-slalom races.

200 gays and lesbians tell officials to make Northampton safer for them

By LISA MOSLEY
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — Due to a recent wave of harassment and violence directed toward lesbians in the area, more than 200 members of the gay community crowded Tuesday night into Memorial Hall for a meeting with city officials.

Mayor David B. Musante Jr., police officers Michael Wall and Frances Sweeny, and Hampshire District Attorney W. Michael Ryan attended the meeting.

Several representatives of Northampton's gay and lesbian community discussed what happened at the meeting and made public their demands to city officials at a press conference held yesterday at Thornes Market.

Demands that were met at the meeting included the establishment of a task force by the mayor in conjunction with representatives of the gay community.

Although no city officials attended the press conference, prepared statements were issued from both the mayor's and district attorney's offices.

According to Musante's statement, "violence or threats of violence to any sector of our community because of people's race, religion, national origin or sexual preference cannot be tolerated." According to panel members at the press conference, the mayor only said he would look into their demand that he endorse an ordinance prohibiting discrimination on the basis of race, sex or sexual orientation.

When asked if she was satisfied with the mayor's response, one panel member, who requested that she be identified only as Angela, said, "there is a possibility that some progress will be made. I'm skeptical."

Most of the panel members refused to be photographed or identified by their last names. All the women on the panel were victims of the recent violence and harassment.

Although the wave of harassment has forced many gays into anonymity, Joe Lamott, spokesperson for the Pioneer Valley People's Gay Alliance said, "it is extremely important that we be visible."

Lamott also said "increased public awareness and education" will be deterrents to violence and harassment.

The women said they felt the media has contributed to the present atmosphere of oppression and homophobia. One woman who identified herself as Emma said no legitimate news medium would question the rights of other minorities, but they do misrepresent homosexuals.

"Gays and lesbians have been depicted as perverts and dangers to the family," Emma said.

Although Tuesday's meeting was closed to the press, Donald Houghton, acting editor of the Daily Hampshire Gazette, was present to respond to allegations that editorials and letters printed in that paper created a climate that encouraged the current harassment of lesbians.

Demands relating to the Gazette included a public retraction and apology from Maureen Fitzgerald for her misquote of the mayor's aid Marcia Burrick, a meeting with legality of libelous statements made in the Gazette's letters and editorials and a discontinuation of Joseph Sobran's column.

Panel members said these demands were not dealt with by Houghton at the meeting, but they hope to establish another task force with Gazette representatives.

The task force established by the mayor and members of the gay community, which Lamott described as being "in its infancy," will deal with the following demands:

The mayor must publicly endorse the Lesbian and Gay Rights March to be held in Northampton in the spring.

The women said they felt the media has contributed to the present atmosphere of oppression and homophobia. One woman who identified herself as Emma said no legitimate news medium would question the rights of other minorities, but they do misrepresent homosexuals.

There must be public acknowledgement that the harassment of the lesbian and gay community is not separate from the harassment and mistreatment of other oppressed groups in the Northampton area.

There must be sensitivity training for city officials and the police on issues of racism, sexism, homophobia and other forms of oppressive behavior.

Because of the threats of arson were directed at the lesbian and gay community, the establishment of strict fire codes which require smoke detectors in all buildings must be established and enforced.

Despite progress, panel members say they are still afraid. In a closing statement from the meeting they said, "those of us who have already been directly threatened fear what will happen next. We are beginning not to ask 'will something worse happen,' but rather, 'what form will the attack take?'"

Panel members were asked if they felt any safer now they had met with city officials. They unanimously responded, "We feel less safe!"

Trustees vote to approve plan to raise fees

By MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — A controversial Trust Fund Management Policy, which will cost University of Massachusetts on-campus students at least $66 next year, was approved yesterday by the UMass Board of Trustees.

The policy implements "full costing," a concept which requires each of the fee-based trust funds, such as Housing Services or the Campus Center, to pay its share of central costs, including accounting services provided by the University.

The only member of the Board of Trustees to oppose the policy was Jim Murphy, Student Government Association president and student trustee from the Amherst campus.

Maryanne Samaha, student trustee from the Boston campus, voted in favor of the policy, which will have less impact on the Boston campus because there are no dormitories or dining commons there.

A task force was established more than a year ago to study the problem of "full costing." Because trust funds are supposed to be self-sufficient, some administrators expressed concern that most trust funds received many central services without charge.

An earlier version of the Trust Fund Management Policy was rejected by the Trustee Committee on Budget and Financial Affairs in November. At that time, budget guidelines were issued to trust fund managers instructing them to prepare budgets without including full costing.

The policy passed yesterday requires that each trust fund set aside 2.4 percent of its total budget to be given to the campus to pay for central services. Many trust funds also pay for certain direct services, such as labor by Physical Plant employees or fee collection by the Bursar's Office.

The Trust Fund Management Policy outlines "budget procedures and processes," including information required in budgets, the fee approval process and processes to create new fees. While the policy requires that each trust fund "bear a share of the costs of central services," it also permits the UMass president to waive that portion of the policy in cases of undue hardship.

Fee impact unclear

By MARK J. WELCH
and PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

The Trust Fund Management Policy approved by the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees yesterday will cost students over $100 each, but the exact impact is still uncertain, according to several campus administrators and student government leaders.

A memo from UMass President David C. Knapp to Trustee Stanton Kurzman last week estimated the total three-year impact of the policy at $104.18, for each student, but some figures used in that total were questioned by trust fund managers.

Of last year's fee increases, $35.69 went to pay for the charges established by the policy. An additional increase of $30.36 this year and $38.13 next year will be added, so that in the 1984-1985 school year, $104.18 of student fees will go to pay for the policy's effects.

Additional fee increases, due to inflation, will also be charged to students.

If the policy had not been approved, fee increases would have totaled just $35 above the $2867 now paid in student fees (excluding tuition).

Dining commons costs, which would not have been increased next year if the policy had not passed, will increase $26 for the 14-meal plan, according to financial manager Jim Weaver.

Ann Koski, assistant director for finance of Housing Services, said she was unclear about most aspects of the full costing policy.

"It seems kind of hurried — there seems to be some questions as to the figures involved," Koski said.

Housing Services had requested an increase of $30 in the dormitory fees if full costing were not passed. Koski was unsure how much extra the fee would be increased, but said there would be an increase if the policy passed.

Al Rufe, financial manager and assistant director for athletics, said he did not include the policy's impact in his $4 fee increase request (from $59 to $63), but said he wasn't sure if the policy would result in an increase in the fee or a decrease in services.

MX committee gets more time for decision

WASHINGTON (AP) — A presidential commission struggling to find a basing system for the MX missile acceptable to both Congress and the Pentagon was given an extra month yesterday to search for a consensus about the embattled nuclear weapon.

"I'm hopeful the commission will reach a consensus, but I am not at the point of saying whether that will be possible," said Brent Scowcroft, head of the Commission on Strategic Forces.

The 11 member panel, appointed Jan. 3, was due to present its recommendations to President Reagan on Feb. 18. Scowcroft said the new deadline will be near the end of March, but that the exact date is not fixed.

He said more time was needed to obtain information on technical issues, and to consult with Congress, which has rejected the two basing systems Reagan has proposed in the past.

"Look, the program has been in difficulty, said Scowcroft. "What we are trying to do is arrive at a solution which will achieve the kind of acceptability of the leadership of the government in both houses that will enable our strategic programs to go through."

The delay also puts off a presidential decision until after the March 6 elections in West Germany, where deployment of U.S. medium-range missiles is a key issue.

Some government officials said privately they were worried that a controversial decision on the MX might undermine Chancellor Helmut Kohl, the leader of the center-right Christian Democrat coalition, who favors deploying the new medium-range nuclear missiles.

Anti-nuclear protesters were dragged from the road in 10 Downing St. while Vice-President George Bush met with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. The visit was the last of Bush's European tour to convince leaders of Western nations that America sincerely wishes to reduce nuclear arms.

Bush says NATO nations are 'united'

LONDON(AP) — Vice President George Bush, nearing the end of a seven-nation European tour, said yesterday he was "optimistic" about his talks with Allied leaders and found them "united on behalf of the NATO alliance."

Bush said in the last major speech of his 12-day trip that "rumors of the death of our alliance have been greatly exaggerated."

The vice president traveled to West Germany, the Netherlands, Belgium, Switzerland, Italy and France before coming to Britain. He said he came to "consult" the allies, counter strong European anti-nuclear sentiment and criticize "one-sided" arms reductions proposals from the Soviet Union.

In speech after speech, Bush stressed what he called the "moral" value of President Reagan's "zero-option" proposal.

The proposal says the North Atlantic Treaty Organization will scrap plans to install 572 U.S.-made Pershing II and cruise missiles in five Western European countries starting theend of this year if the Soviet Union dismantles its missiles arsenal in Eastern Europe.

At the same time, Bush asserted that the zero option, endorsed by NATO, was not a "take-it-or-leave-it" proposal and that the United States would "explore any reasonable Soviet offer" at the Geneva arms reduction talks.

Bush, who spoke to the Royal Institute of International Affairs in London, also sought to dispel suggestions by anti-nuclear groups that the United States is preparing to fight a nuclear war.

Sharon asks to be removed

JERUSALEM (AP) — The Israeli Cabinet yesterday reviewed a damaging judicial report on the Beirut massacre, and an official who attended the meeting claimed Defense Minister Ariel Sharon urged the ministers to remove him from office as recommended by the commission.

The Cabinet ended its second emergency session in two days after 3½ hours. It did not announce any response to the suggestions made by the commission that investigated the Beirut massacre, but scheduled a third session for this afternoon.

Sharon was quoted in several news reports as refusing to quit his post and insisting that Begin would have to fire him.

But a senior official, who refused to be named, said Sharon proposed that the Cabinet formally ask for his resignation.

The official said Sharon told the ministers to ignore the commission's recommendations for punishing military officers criticized in the report.

He added that specifics — names, dates and places — on about 50 or 60 alleged incidents were being referred.

Hotline for homeless draws large response

BOSTON — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis said yesterday more than 300 people have called a new homeless hotline either to seek shelter from the cold or to offer help to those forced to live on the street.

Dukakis said that of the more than 300 calls, "55 percent have sought emergency shelter, 30 percent anticipated needing shelter very shortly and 15 percent have wanted information or offered assistance."

Pat Kennedy, a spokeswoman for the state Welfare Department, said that most of the calls have been from the Greater Boston area and all but a very few have been from single people.

"So far, we've got relatively few a long way out. Some are from as far west as Worcester and some are from the North Shore area," she said.

Mass. doesn't qualify for drunk driving aid

BOSTON — Despite its tough new drunken driving law, Massachusetts doesn't qualify for federal money aimed at rewarding states that crack down on drunks behind the wheel, a state senator said yesterday.

Sen. Louis P. Bertonazzi, D-Milford, chairman of the Senate Post Audit Committee, said because of technicalities in the federal program's regulations, Massachusetts' new law failed to qualify.

Bertonazzi said he has asked the state's congressional delegation to seek changes in the federal program, which was enacted in December, to make Massachusetts eligible.

Bertonazzi said if the state were elibible, it would be getting $990,000 this year to fight drunken driving.

To qualify for the money, states must pass drunken driving laws that meet federal requirements.

Massachusetts' law, which took effect Sept. 1, several months before the federal program was approved, failed in several areas.

Complaints pour in new bottle deposits

BOSTON — About "50 or 60 complaints" of alleged violations of the state's new bottle deposit law were referred to the attorney general yesterday by Environmental Affairs Secretary James S. Hoyte.

Brian Hardy, an aide to Hoyte, said violations of the law carry a maximum penalty of a $1,000 fine.

The law requiring returnable nickel and dime deposits on beer and soft drink containers took effect Jan. 17, and the environmental office has received thousands of "inquiries, a good number of those alleging violations," Hardy said.

Market reports strike not slowing deliveries

CHELSEA, Mass. — While scores of truckers took part in a statewide convoy to protest planned increases in federal excise taxes, officials at the Chelsea Produce Market reported truck deliveries were near normal levels.

"The early part of last week did see a slowdown of arrivals into Boston," said Richard Tavilla, a co-owner of P. Tavilla Inc., a wholesaler at the produce center that serves the greater Boston area. "As of the beginning of this week things eased off quite a bit."

Dukakis recommends more money for cities

BOSTON — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis will recommend about $151 million in new state assistance for the cities and towns in his budget to be filed with the Legislature March 2 if, as expected, he keeps his campaign promise on local aid.

State Sen. Gerard D'Amico said yesterday he understood about $151 million in new aid would be recommended by Dukakis, noting the governor's campaign pledge last fall to provide communities 40 percent of the state's revenue growth. "We've been told" that 40 percent of the growth comes to about $151 million, he said.

Financial aid, spring concert topics of Senate meeting

Financial aid hurt by poor economy

By TIM MacPHEE
Collegian Staff

Citing diminishing federal resources and the rising costs of education as the major roadblocks to student aid, Art Jackson, financial aid director, outlined his goals to the Undergraduate Student Senate last night.

"It is very important that students don't wait until the last minute for views to be heard. If financial aid is a political football, we are now in the play-offs with the superbowl upcoming," Jackson said.

Jackson also discussed new proposals affecting financial aid including the proposed cut-off of aid to students who have failed to register for the draft.

"On the federal level, a new proposal would change the concept of financial aid funds. Grants, loans and work study programs would be combined into one Pell Grant program," Jackson said.

He explained that this proposal would eliminate forms of aid including loans, Regents scholarships and working programs, some in existence since 1954.

Jackson said that active lobbying is probably the single most important way for students to make themselves heard.

Jackson said that he and other aid officers are fighting the federal regulation requiring financial aid candidates to file a statement confirming their registration for the selective service.

"Because of this law countless numbers of class action suits will occur. It may even be discriminatory on the basis of sex and age," he said.

Jackson outlined steps that students could take regarding the law.

"Students should become informed about the measure. They should also contact local and federal legislators about it. We should be informed, organized and proactionary about it, not reactionary," he said.

Jackson said that by contacting legislators, the bill may not be repealed though it may be revised or delayed.

Jackson also pointed out that aid to minority students is down.

"The move by federal administrators for aid to black colleges is an increase of $8 million to these colleges, but planned at the same time is a $29 million cut from other programs," he said.

"I still come up with a negative number," he said, "even though I don't have David Stockman's calculator on my desk."

Jackson concluded by saying that we have to become more self-reliant on ourselves and future alumni.

UPC seeks funds for stadium show

By TAMI BORTON
Collegian Staff

The Union Program Council (UPC) announced at the Undergraduate Student Senate meeting last night that they will present a proposal to underwrite a spring concert to be held in Alumni Stadium.

The proposal will allow UPC to encumber expenses of financing the concert through senate trust funds, according to Lisa Potter, senate treasurer.

The senate has guaranteed funds for the concert in the past, but suffered a $110,000 deficit at the concert held in the stadium two years ago, due to increased security and reduced attendance.

"The proposal will be presented to each of the senate members by next week," Bill Prichett, talent coordinator said. No artist was announced for the concert.

Continuing efforts to build the State Student Association of Massachusetts (SSAM) were announced by Michael Ferrigno, University of Massachusetts staff member for the organization.

"We want to ratify the constitution, which would address the quality and cost of education in the state, on as many campuses as possible," Ferrigno said.

The majority of the 28 community colleges, state colleges and universities approved the constitution and the revised copy is being presented, Ferrigno said.

If ratified, community colleges would pay $100, state colleges, $200 and universities would pay $300 to open a bank account for SSAM, he said.

The organization will address the right of everybody to a high quality, low cost education and student input to state decisions on higher education.

"We are particularly interested in getting a student on the Board of Regents," Ferrigno said. The Soloman amendment, which requires draft registration prior to college admission, will be addressed by the SSAM, he said.

Senator Paul Tsongas will be guest speaker at a SSAM meeting Friday at Framingham State College, Ferrigno said.

Student Government Association president Jim Murphy announced possible intentions of sueing the State Board of Trustees for trust fund losses thrugh the full-costing proposal.

In other business, Rents and Fees committee chairman Mitch Gaslin announced a meeting to review student fees to be held Monday in Campus Center Room 101 and Tuesday in Campus Center Room 804.

Emphasis on transcripts in admission process

By JIM FINKLE
Collegian Staff

The high school transcripts of applicants to the University of Massachusetts are the most important indicators used by the admissions office in determining which students are accepted into the University, according to a UMass official.

Yesterday Umass Director of Freshman Admissions David G. Taggart said while the admissions office requires applicants to submit Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) scores, he places the emphasis on high school transcripts.

"There is no specific cut off statement in terms of SAT's and class rank," Taggart said. "I am much more interested in looking at the entire four year transcript. We would expect the SAT's to support the profile from the transcript."

High SAT's may not offset low grades whereas high grades may offset low SAT's," according to a statement in the 1983 freshman application.

Under State Board of Regents proposal, to set minimum admission standards for state colleges and universities, students applying to UMass must have either a combined score of 800 and a high school class rank in the upper 40th percentile of their class, or a combined SAT score of 850 and a class rank in the upper 60th percentile, for acceptance.

The proposal allows state institutions to waive a certain percentage of students from these regulations, but thosestudents must be accepted into programs designed for educationally disadvantaged students.

In the case of admitting educationally deprived students, Taggart said "We are looking for any indication that a student has the motivation to succeed on this campus."

From educationally deprived groups of students, we are looking at motivation and development of educational maturity as strong indicators of potential success," Taggart said.

"In-state students with high school ranks at least in the top 40 percent of their class in college preparatory programs, and with SAT's at least in the low to mid 400s each (verbal and math) can be reasonably confident of admission," according to the 1983 freshman application.

"However, because there are other variables involved in the admission process, these are not absolutes," the application states. "There are no minimum cut-offs based either on class rank or SAT's, nor are there any automatic acceptances", it states.

A third part of the Regents' proposal, which would be phased in over a four-year period, would require students to take a minimum number of mathematics, science, foreign language and social studies courses to gain admission to the state's colleges and universities.

"I am very much in support of that part of the proposal," Taggart said.

Of 14,000 applications for admission expected to be filed at UMass next fall, the University will have approximately 4,1000 vacancies, according to the freshman application.

Amherst theatre group teaches local women

By LAURA SHANAHAN
Collegian Staff

Committed to making a statement about women's lives, the Women's Community Theatre in Amherst is a non-profit organization which devotes itself to giving women the opportunity to learn about all aspects of theater production.

The fact that the group is all women is a strong statement toward their commitment, said Sarah Dreher, a board member at the theatre.

The theatre's plays are "mostly an exploration of women's relationships, different from the media's stereotype," said Dreher, "in a (more) positive light than when you turn on the T.V. set."

Approximately two plays are produced each year. Each play is performed four or five times and one night is reserved exclusively for an all-women audience.

"We've built up a good following. We have one performance for women only and it's always packed," she said.

Dreher, a psychologist and writer, has been with the Women's Community Theatre since its inception in 1974 when she, with other women involved with International Women's Week, presented a review of plays produced exclusively by women. Realizing they enjoyed working with theatre, they progressed with the concept of an all-women theatre climaxing in the founding of the Women's Community, she said. Dreher is the only original member still involved with the theatre.

The Theatre's next production, "Hollandia 45" written by Dreher and directed by member Lis Brook, is scheduled for performance in May. The play centers around a retired Army nurse who lives out her remaining life by reliving her memories of when she was stationed in Hollandia, New Guinea during World War II. Dreher said she was inspired by a retired friend of her grandmother's.

Conflict in "Hollandia 45" arises out of the retired woman's need to be left alone and her niece's desire to see that she becomes more involved with the family. Dreher said she wrote the play in answer to her own feelings. She said she believes older people should be able to live out their lives the way they want to.

In addition to performing, Women's Community Theatre has also held playwriting contests and broadcasted a radio play on WMUA in Amherst. Future events include additional playwriting contests, a theatre festival and organizing a satellite distributing company.

After the May production, the Theatre is planning on presenting two plays in June written by member Susan Vick and a musical in October centering around a women's theater group in the process of producing a play.

First day of fall classes falls on Jewish holiday

By LISA MARIE CANTWELL
Collegian Correspondent

The Jewish members of the University of Massachusetts community are faced with a problem concerning registration next fall, because the scheduled first day of classes falls on the highest Jewish holiday, Rosh Hashanah.

"It will be a real mess for many students," said Hillel representative Debbie Propper. Rosh Hashanah, according to Propper, is the equivalent of the Christian Christmas holiday.

The first day of the Jewish holiday begins at sundown Sept. 7 and ends sundown on Sept. 9. The main problem foreseen is that students who go home to spend the holiday with family, will not have the same opportunity as others to add/drop classes. Jewish faculty members will also be forced to cancel classes.

Letters and proposals have been sent to both the Chancellor's office and the Space and Calendar Committee, by organizations including the Jewish Faculty Committee, Hillel Office and the Civility Committee.

Judy Davis, head of the Civility Committee, said the committee is "concerned with the details, but also with a larger message."

Letters to the Chancellor suggested classes be postponed until the following week. Another proposal advised placing an administrative freeze on the add/drop period.

Assistant to the Chancellor Bonnie Strickland said she recently received the proposal to change add/drop and she "suspects it would be the easier of the alternatives."

Klause Kroner, faculty chairman for the Space and Calendar Committee said the issue was under discussion.

"We have not taken any firm action or made any decisions," Kroner said.

A Space and Calendar Committee meeting is scheduled for Friday to discuss the issue further. According to Kroner "something satisfactory will come out of it."

UMass to host conference

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Correspondent

A New England Regional Conference of the United States Student Association (USSA) will be hosted by the Public Policy Committee of the Student Government Association at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst on April 15-17 at the Campus Centeer.

The USSA is a "national lobbying group that networks state student associations together," according to committee member and UMass undergraduate Student senate member Jane Johnson.

Walter Mondale has been invited to appear as keynote speaker for the three day event but he has not committed himself yet, according to Public Policy Committee chairperson Sheila Sullivan. A tentative agenda, sent out to 207 schools this week, also lists workshops and a panel discussion as activities for the event.

This will be the first New England Regional Conference of the USSA, according to Sullivan, who is also a member of the undergraduate senate and is the only New England Regional board member of the USSA. She also holds a seat on the ten-member National Board.

Although there is still "a lot to be done," said Sullivan "topics have been worked out and most people who are doing workshops have been selected." Workshops will focus on financial aid, State Student Associations, civil rights, lobbying and legislation, students and the military, and other current student issues.

Students to lobby for Jews in Russia

By GLEN GOLDSTEIN
Collegian Correspondent

Some University of Massachusetts students will be deserting their classes Feb. 22 and 23 to lobby in Washington, D.C. for the release of Soviet Jews held in Russia.

More than 700 students from the East coast will gather in Washington to meet with their senators and representatives.

The program, sponsored by Brandeis University, sets up appointments for students to speak with representatives from their home states said Debbie Propper, program director of Hillel.

Hillel, a Jewish student organization claims this issue is not only for Jewish people.

"This is a human rights issue," Propper said.

Hillel's Soviet Jewry Committee will be seeking money from the Student Government Association (SGA) to help pay for food and transportation for the trip.

"We believe that this trip will benefit the student community in lobbying skills and knowledge of human rights issues," Propper said.

"I learned more about Washington from going lobbying last year than I ever learned in school," Propper added.

The group received about $250 from the SGA last year, Propper said. They are hoping to receive more this year, she said.

"Some of the Jews have been jailed. As soon as they apply for visas, they lose their jobs. Then their children have to go to work to earn money for food," Propper said.

Typewriters stolen from Hills South

By RAY BEAUCHEMIN
Collegian Staff

Two thefts of more than $1,000 were reported to the University of Massachusetts Police Department Tuesday. Both incidents involved typewriters reportedly stolen from offices in Hills South Building.

At 10:19 a.m., the Special Education Department reported the disappearance of a typewriter valued at $1,000 and a digital clock worth $200. The incident occurred between Feb. 4 and Feb. 7, but was not reported until Tuesday, said Sgt. Frank Mazzei.

Perpetrators gained access to the special education office by removing a screen outside a window that was unlocked, Mazzei said.

The second larceny involving a typewriter was reported at 3:50 p.m. The typewriter, taken from Hills South sometime in mid-January, was not reported because the typewriter was believed to have been borrowed, police said. Access was gained through an unlocked door, Mazzei said. The machine was also worth $1,000, he said.

No suspects are being held in either case.

A minor carrying a case and a half of Budweiser beer across Massachusetts Ave. was arrested at 9:20 p.m. Monday for being a minor in possession of alcohol.

A 20-year old UMass student was arrested shortly before 8:30 p.m. Tuesday at North Pleasant and Fearing streets and charged with operating a motor vehicle without a license, failure to stop for a red light and having no registration. The operator gave the police a false name which was subsequently checked by police, Mazzei said. No charge was filed for assuming a false identity.

Vincent Price to haunt UM as DVP guest in March

By VICKI A. SPAGNOLI
Collegian Correspondent

Vincent Price will perform at the University of Massachusetts on March 7 as one of the Distinguished Visitors Program's (DVP) scheduled appearances for the Spring semester.

Price, whose career has encompassed the Broadway and London theaters, Hollywood films, American and British radio, and the worlds of art and literature, will present a one-man performance of "The Villain Still Pursues Me (A History of Villainy)" at 8 p.m., March 7 in the Fine Arts Center (FAC).

According to Tamar Leibowitz, DVP Chairman, tickets will go on sale today in the FAC box office. He said the admission charge will be $2 for Five College Students, $5 for the general public and $4 for senior citizens.

While at UMass, Price will instruct a theatre workshop and will give an art history lecture.

On the day preceding Price's performance in the FAC, the DVP will sponsor a Vincent Price film festival. Movies to be shown will be "The Mask of Real Death", "Theatre of Blood", "The Pit and The Pendulum" and "The Raven."

Other upcoming appearances include Francis Moore Lappe, author of "Diet for a Small Planet" on Feb. 16 in the Student Union Ballroom with free admission. Theo Ben Gurirab, representative of the Southwest African Peoples Organization(SWAPO), will present a program on the "International Crisis of Namibian Independence" in late March or early April.

Joey D's closed for good; owner files for bankruptcy

By PAUL DESMOND
Collegian Correspondent

Joey D's club and restaurant, which closed at the beginning of January and is currently for sale, apparently may not be open again for some time.

Steve Duca, former manager of the once-popular nightspot, said there are no prospects right now for the sale of the club.

The club's owner, Joseph DiNatale, has filed for bankruptcy which means the liquor license for the establishment stands protected against revocation.

"Normally, the Amherst Selectmen hold a meeting for every restaurant that closes to discuss the nature of the license and why it should not be revoked," said Amherst Selectman Edith Wilkinson.

But when bankruptcy is filed, the license automatically is protected against revolution because is a factor in bankruptcy proceedings, according to Mary Yarrow, secretary to the Selectmen.

Yarrow explained that anybody who buys the restaurant will have to pay some "incumbencies" before the liquor license can be transferred from DiNatale. Incumbencies may include back property taxes and meal taxes.

In order for a liquor license to be transferred, the Selectmen must first approve the transfer, Yarrow said. Then the application is sent for review to the Alcoholic Beverage Commission in Boston, where it is determined if all back taxes have been paid. If any are not paid, transfer of the license will be refused.

For now, "the license is intact with the business," according to Duca.

Still, sale of the establishment does not appear imminent since, as Duca said "right now it's tied up in a legal matter."

Poll pressure keeping Reagan from social issues, panel says

By MARY BALDWIN
Collegian Staff

His pollsters made him do it.

Reagan has kept away from the New Right and its insistence on social issues after his pollsters told him the majority of voters would be put off, said a member of a panel discussion held Tuesday night in Northampton.

Members of the panel "Stopping the New Right's Attack on our Rights," discussed ways to stop the Family Protection Act and anti-abortion laws and amendments.

Panel member Allen Hunter, scholar on the New Right and a visiting professor at Hampshire College said, "Reagan hasn't been pushing social issues because it does not do him any good."

Hunter said he doesn't think Reagan will use the executive office to push abortion and social issues. He said he thinks many politicians will center around economic issues instead.

"That means I think the New Right will be less able to push politicians into anti-abortion sentiments," he said. "They have found that when you stand up for abortion, you do better than if you wilt at the issue."

"The only issue Reagan did come out for is school prayer because it is the one issue that a majority of people support in this country," he said.

Hunter warns, however, that administratively many people from the New Right have gotten jobs so it is possible for them to do a lot of damage without legislation.

"The New Right's position on abortion is a minority position just as the position of reproductive rights groups," Allen said. "Most people are ambiguous."

Patricia Hennessey, attorney and director of Hampshire College Civil Liberties and Public Safety Program spoke about what is known as the Squeal Law which requires any clinic such as Planned Parenthood receiving Title X money to send a registered letter to the parents of any patient 17-years-old or less after 10 days of prescribing birth control.

"The significance of this legislation is that it is the boldest move made by the administration," she said. "It may be a crumb thrown to the New Right."

"Most women and parents' groups opposed this," she said. "The family planning council in Massachusetts is filing an injunction against these regulations."

"Since post 1973, pro-choice has been responding to attempts to restrict abortion by the New Right," she said.

Hennessy said these laws are geared towards forcing women to ask permission of spouses, judges or parents to have an abortion.

Terry Starr-Klein, chairperson of the Massachusetts National Organization of Women (NOW) Legislative Task Force and a member of the panel spoke about anti-abortion legislation.

"If government control of a woman's body isn't big government, what is?" she said.

"Our right to choose is in trouble in this state. We need mobilization now," she added.

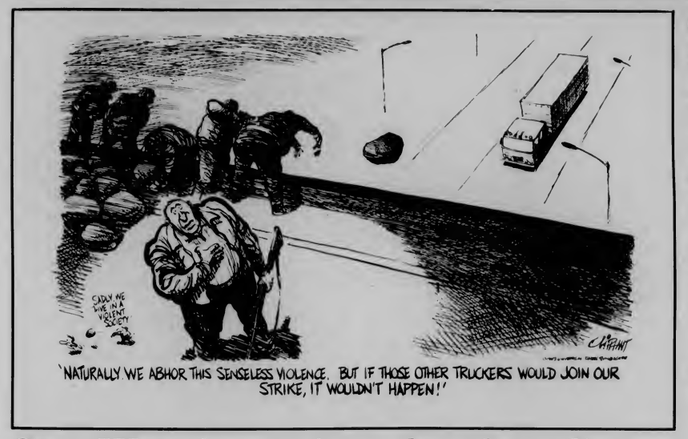
EDITORIAL/OPINION



Star Wars becoming a harsh reality

This year's defense budget is approximately $231 billion and it is supposed to increase to around $300 billion next year. Our tax money is paying for MX, Cruise and Pershing missiles. We are also paying for the research of laser beam weapons and anti-satellites.

This may not have a direct effect on any of us right now, but it is indirectly affecting all of us. For those of us who are concerned about the survival of this planet it is very threatening to realize the course that technology is taking in this country.

Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger and his buddies at the Pentagon are not only planning for war on earth but war in space. The movie Star Wars is beginning to lose its science-fiction like quality, in light of what is going on in our space program.

Betsy Kraft

The fiscal 1983 Department of Defense budget for Space, for the first time, exceeds NASA's budget. NASA, which is supposed to be our civilian space program, is supporting the Space Shuttle; the new toy of the Air Force.

The future of NASA's space science programs such as planetary science and gamma-ray astronomy seem to be in trouble. While the civilian government agencies are becoming limited in their participation in decision-making regarding space, the military intelligence agency is gaining control.

Recently, an article in the UMASS publication, Contact, discussed professor Hajime Sakai, of the Physics and Astronomy department, who could not attend a meeting of the Society of Photo-Optical Instrumentation Engineers (SPIE); where he was to present two papers. His research was being sponsored by the Air Force but it had no direct military application. He was denied the right to attend the conference by the Pentagon. Universities are supposed to foster learning and academic freedom, and should allow for the exchange of ideas between scientists and countries. Because of the limits imposed on academic freedom by Pentagon-sponsored research, it does not belong at UMASS or any other university.

Since the Reagan Administration has been in control of this country there seems to be a trend toward the increased militarization of our schools as well as our civilian space program. In 1973, UMASS got 8 percent of federal funding from Department of Defense sources. By 1982 it was up to 13 percent. Haven't you noticed that there are more ROTC posters around lately? The Collegian had an ad in Monday's paper that asked, "What do you want from college?", and the answer was management training through ROTC. Learn how to be a military leader while your education gets paid for.

It is becoming increasingly difficult for many people to attend school, with the cut backs in grants and loans. The general state of the economy; recession and unemployment is making money a rare commodity these days. But there seems to be plenty of federal financial aid through ROTC.

In July the House and Senate voted to deny non-registrants of the draft, all financial assistance including pell grants, guaranteed student loans and college work-study. Our legislators are trying to coerce young men to sign over to the government, thus supporting our foreign interventionist policies, by threatening to take away their education. Also people who can't afford to go to school and can't get jobs; often the minorities in this country, are finding no other alernatives except to register or volunteer for the army.

Militarism is on the rise, along with The New Right and the Moral Majority. If we look around us we can see the increased militarization going on right here at UMASS as well as in the world that exists outside our campus.

The abundance of financial aid available through ROTC, and the conversion of NASA facilities are two examples of the path this government is taking. Increased awareness of the situation is the first step in trying to change the direction of this path.

Co-ed bathroom policy a mess

My R.A. just informed me that the coed bathroom policy is going to be enforced in my dorm this semester. I was surprised, but I should have expected it.

I tried to explain the issue to my father during intersession, but I had trouble. He couldn't understand why students had created such a controversy over such a silly issue or why anyone would want coed bathrooms anyway.

The second part was easier. I explained the practical problems: in many dorms, there's just one bathroom per floor, which means someone has to take a flight of stairs. In some dorms, the stairs are littered with broken glass and the lights often don't work.

Mark Welch

I noted that moral beliefs have changed somewhat since he went to college, but I said I believed people should have an option to choose their own moral values within reason. And if I used a coed bathroom for eighteen years before college and will resume after, why not now? I also suggested that keeping men and women seperated could lead to an unhealthy image of the other sex as alien or inferior (or superior).

Then I tried to explain that the issue wasn't even just about coed bathrooms. The problem, when the huge protest and occupation of Whitmore happened, was that students were just told the policy was changing but had no input into the change.

The chant was "IN-PUT, IN-PUT," not "Bathrooms" or "Coed," at least while I was there. Everyone can understand that different people want different living options. Some people would prefer to have coed floors but single-sex bathrooms, just as some would prefer totally single-sex living. I think those options should be available, but I think other options should be available, too. And I think students should have input into the living options from which they are forced to select.

I'd like to choose between completely single-sex dorms, coed dorms with coed floors and bathrooms, coed dorms with coed floors but single-sex bathrooms, and coed dorms with single-sex floors. Two of those options aren't available.

If the University — or students — want to change the number of options, I think everyone concerned should be asked for their opinions. No pretense was made, when coed bathrooms became an issue, that students had been involved in the decision process.

Trying to make a point, I asked my father whether students should protest if a policy on hair length were passed. In my opinion, if anyone has an option to decide, without asking me, whether the bathroom in my home should be single sex or coed, then nothing stops them from regulating the length of my hair. Both are moral issues, but neither has anything to do with my education.

I didn't convince my father, but we understand each other now. At the time, I thought the problem was settled: I thought the policy would be legally in effect but wouldn't be enforced.

When a friend said his dorm was enforcing the policy last spring, I thought it was an exception. I suspected worse when another friend told me the enforcement had begun in the fall. And now my dorm.

Of course, the change doesn't affect me personally. I'm on the floor with a male bathroom. Since two of the floors in my dorm are coed and two are all-female, my bathroom will be half as crowded as last year.

Fewer than fifty men will share two bathrooms with twelve toilets and six showers, while over a hundred women will use two bathrooms with nine toilets and five showers. To make matters worse, women must walk a flight of stairs just to dump their rubbish, since the trash barrels are in the bathrooms.

A friend of mine suggested that the single-sex bathroom policy might be part of a plot to phase out coed living and revert to single-sex floors. I don't know about that. In part, I agree with my father that the whole thing was a silly issue — coed bathrooms seem trivial if you compare them to world hunger or nuclear war.

But even if you ignore the moral questions, legal concerns and the issue of student input, this system just doesn't make sense here.

What are our parking fees for?

To the Editor:

The snow storm of Monday, February 7, 1983 inconvenienced many. Although I can appreciate the efforts of the snow removal teams and the Administration as a whole, I, as a student, am dissatisfied with the lack of the concern for student parking.

On Tuesday, February 8, 1983, the day after the storm and after Lot 21 had been plowed, I found my car buried behind three feet of packed plowed snow; the result of the actual plowing of the lot. I was trapped in my parking space. Why wasn't the snow removed instead of packed behind my car, and hundreds of other cars, too? What is the $25, and higher parking fees used for? The convenience of student parking is one that is paid for and should be serviced. The plowing was done in vain, and cars were forced to remain stationary. Futhermore, once I expressed my complaint to two sargents among others at the UMASS Police Department, they offered me no solution, no advice, and viewed my complaint as an imposition.

As a member of this institution, I adhere to the rules and regulations set forth by the University, including assigned parking. In turn, I expect to services paid for to be rendered, and receive cooperation from University Officials.

Black Affairs

The fight to be educated has historical base

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

When the Negro was forcefully brought to America in the 17th century he was thought of as an inferior being with a sluggish mind. Whites believed that they were a superior race and perpetuated this belief through their religion, and also enslaved the Africans in what has been one of the worst subjugations in history. This was also the origins of racism as it is known today throughout the West.

After proclaiming their freedom and becoming American citizens, Shites set out to make the lives of the ex-slaves impossible and incidently this was also about the same time that the K.K.K. emerged. Their first attempt was segregation.

Throughtout the South, blacks confronted the psychological ordeal of being separated and the living conditions where they lived was terrible, a startling contrast to the huge slave owner massion that were built by the blacks themselves, and without blue prints even.

As expected in a racially divided country as in the United States, blacks were not granted the opportunity to educate themselves with the skills and abilities necessary to make their own way in society.

Whites did not want to take the chance of providing education for blacks, perhaps fearing a rebellion once the ex-slaves became educated.

Education was the one aspect in the lives of blacks that cried out for improvement. Education, is the method by which cultural and social values are preserved, and the American school system was not doing anything to preserve the history of blacks.

On the contrary, textbooks often, if not always failed to mention black's role in history and gave a false sense of superiority to whites.

The American school system has always been white-oriented and aimed at middle-class pupils. The system is set up in such a way that results in an incapablility for black students to adapt to its ideals, and leaves the ground open for cultural differences; a disadvantage for blacks during exams.

However, blacks have fought back against the obstacles whites had set up in their path to education. There have been many innovations in education like the departments of Afro-American studies in the regular curriculum of colleges, universities and some high schools. The enrollment of black students in higher learning institutions have increased since the 1950's to almost double.

In education and all other areas where the white man has failed, blacks have taken their own initiative to be remembered, and to educate themselves in order to promote and preserve the richness of the race, even under the most unusual and brutal of circumstances. We have the example of Dr. Carter G. Woodson who did not recieve any elementary education, but educated himself and became the Father of Black History. In 1916, Woodson issued the Journal of Negro History with the purpose to publish further findings on Negro history.

The purpose of researching the history of their ancestors was to leave an essense of the past for the generations to come.

Black Chicagoan's in position to settle vote

Dr. Manning Marable
From The Grassroots

In several days, a decisive test of political power will occur in the most segregated city in America-Chicago.

The current mayor of the sprawling industrial and financial center is Jane M. Byrne, whose mentor was the late city boss Richard J. Daley. Byrne was swept into office in 1979 over the corrupt Democratic machine, with a resounding mandate from the Black community on the South and West sides. Within a matter of months, Byrne mended fences with some of her old antagonists, and began to pursue fiscal, educational and social policies which smacked of red-neck racism.

Elements of the old Daley coalition, rooted primarily in the white ethnic neighborhoods of the city's southwest side, have united behind the former boss' son, Richard M. Daley. Daley has won the support of an unlikely coalition of corporate interests, white trade union leaders such as Ed Sadloski of the Teamsters, and a number of the city's Democratic ward committeemen. Former Vice President Walter F. Mondale has recently announced his support for Daley, to the surprise of many white liberals and many more Black leaders.

The third Democratic aspirant in this month's primary is a Black Congressman, Harold Washington. One of the Houses of Representatives' most articulate and progressive members, Washington is attempting to put together a coalition of Black working class, middle class and poor people's organizations, combined with a much smaller group of left and liberal white forces ranging from the Democratic Socialists of America to progressive trade unionists. Of the three candidates, only Washington has presented a program which will benefit the interests of poor and working class people which when translated into Chicago terms means the overwhelming majority of Blacks. It is obvious that Washington is certainly the most qualified person in the field, but in a racist society, political credentials mean next to nothing. Just ask California's Tom Bradley.

Washington's candidacy raises two decisive questions which illuminate the entire legacy of Black Power and the 1972 Black Political Convention held in nearby Gary, Indiana.

First, can Washington overcome the city's powerfully entrenched political machine? This is an organization, after all, which illegally "collected" the votes of thousands of dead residents and threw Illinois' electoral vote to John F. Kennedy in 1960, thus helping to determine that year's presidential race. Jane Bryne knows every political trick from old man Daley's book. According to the New York Times, "when thousands of Chicagoans answered her plea to turn in bottles of possibly contaminated Tylenol capsules to police last fall, many thought they were merely helping the investigation. But their addresses have also turned up on the Mayor's campaign mailing list."

Second, can Washington's campaign rally the support of the majority of Black Chicagoans? Theoretically, Washington could win with a minimum of white votes. As of last week, the registration lists counted 650,000 Black voters in the city. Normally, the total number of votes cast in a Democratic primary for mayor is about 750,000. Thus, if at least 8 out of 10 Black votes are cast for Washington, and if the Congressman is able to garner at least 10 percent of the white vote, and if the Black voter turnout is heavy — he will win.

Chicago's one million plus Black population is long overdue for Black Power. If we seize the opportunity and use the ballot, we may begin to build a permanent power base in the heartland of Northern segregation.

Dr. Manning Marable is Director of the Race Relations Institute, Fisk Univ., Nashville, TN.

Maya Angelou shares some poetry and insight at Mount Holyoke College last month.

Poet notes significance of poetry in black history

By AUGUSTO MARTINS
Collegian Staff

For those who had the privilege of being home during intersession also had the misfortune of missing one of the most talented and versatile entertainers of our time.

Maya Angelou, the poet, actress, singer, activist, writer, and possesor of one of the most receptive personalities entranced a capacity crowd at Chapin Hall at Mount Holyoke College.

Touching on a broad range of topics Angelou's main thrust was urging people to read black American poetry.

"If there is one thing I advise you to do is to read black American poetry, it's exquisite, delicious and beautiful," she said.

Angelou cited the historical significance of black American poetry and it's revolutionary nature to reject the image cast upon black people in America.

"For much too long we wore masks," Angelou said. We were taught to laugh when we didn't tickle and to scratch when we didn't itch."

The reason for this behavior, or dual personality said Angelou was a matter of survival, or as she said was to "stay alive."

Angelou mirrored a fact that becomes all the more recognizable during this month of historic recognition, that any people who have been devoid of the power of their legacy will remain ignorant.

She recounted an experience of some twenty years ago when she was in Europe to perform with some of the best Classical and opera singers of the day. She said she felt out of place because she had only limited training in that musical idiom.

Finally, the conductor who was from the Soviet Union asked her if she knew any gospel numbers. Suddenly she felt very comfortable, she not only knew gospel, but was born, reared and raise a baptist.

She sang a gospel number acappella to the 4500 people who were in attendance and when she finished they rose to give her one of the loudest standing ovations she had ever heard.

"What was it," Angelou asked? "My people were illiterate when the Declaration of Independence was signed, but look what they gave me, a universal gift of art, and through art, love."

The entire evening was filled with poetry, social commentary, laughter, and a stage presence so warm and affectionate that no further proof is needed to demonstrate that the power of legacy flows through us all.

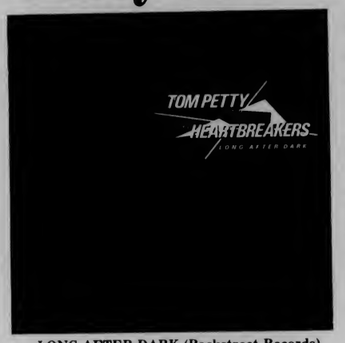
Petty's no heartbreaker



LONG AFTER DARK (Backstreet Records)
Tom Petty and The Heartbreakers

By DON NAREY
Collegian Correspondent

Early T.P. fans who've wondered what fame and fortune would do to our aimless rebel need not worry. Petty pushes as hard as ever on Long After Dark. Taking nothing for granted, Petty stomps and sways through his tales of love, searched for, let go, and misunderstood. In this period when enthusiasm gains more critical respect than does sheer talent, one who fuses the two is indeed a rarity. Tom Petty takes full advantage of his professional resources while understanding that the essence of rock music is the raw energy that emerges from it. The enthusiasm that set his early hit, "American Girl" afire kindles Long After Dark to a apex of rock fever.

The most concrete piece of rock on the album is the opening track, "One Story Town." From the age of James Dean, this pledge to "breakin out" and finding a better way reminds us of what early rock was all about. It's theme is nostalgic, though it's style is completely Tom Petty's calling from a frustrated youth and ultimately showing how little things change. The album's single "You Got Lucky" echoes the cool confidence of "Breakdown," but it's city-slick feel is the result of more sophisticated musician ship which, in this case, is bright and innovative. The other single "Change of Heart" is Petty at his heartfelt best. He pushes his voice as a dedicated musician demanding the most from his instrument, Stan Lynch's drums guide the band as a tight organized unit and Petty's own back-up vocals makes for a thundering result.

Against the backdrop of these outstanding performances, the only truly mediocore number shows with glaring clarity. Wedged between the stylish "You Got Luck" and the boisterous "Change of Heart" is the bad seed, "Deliver Me." It gets off to a great start, but then lacks the gutsy style that brings Petty's songs to life. It's really not a bad song, but had he pushed himself a little harder it may have been raised to the caliber of the rest of the album.

"A Wasted Life," the last track, is a shining statement of the artist's versatility. The song might have been right at home on an old Mamas and Papas' record, yet the distinction of Petty's own style brings it to a class all it's own. He handles it with a fine vocal softness that sets it apart from anything else he's done. The total surprise of this touching call to a friend drifting into oblivion augments it's impact.

A student of his art, Petty branches out only slightly on Long After Dark. Staying close to what he fully understands, and has in part created, he polishes his craft, wading occasionally toward a sea of directions in which he may expand. The tales he tells remain rather simple, leaving room for his constantly improving songwriting and growing style in arrangement and production. Most importantly though, Petty's passion for the music has never been relaxed. He still sings from the heart, calling from the Saturday night streets of a youth where not all fit exactly into place. He'd like us to believe, it seems, that he's not fallen victim to the laziness of super-stardom, that he still feels the backbeat in his blood and believes in rock 'n roll heroes. The record shows, he's pretty damn convincing.

Live Wire

by Dave Chevan

Having finally settled in for the new semester, I opened my newspaper to check out the weekend club situation, and do I have great news. Not only are there some incredible acts in town, but some of them are free! I've got quite a few acts to talk about so let's get started.

Tonight looks a bit slow with only two exceptions. Jason's in Easthampton is hosting a new group, Cruise Control, and Hangar One will feature Through the Doors with special guests the Pleasure Dots.

Friday night is so crowded with great acts, I don't know where to begin. First, and foremost, UPC is sponsoring a free concert in the Cape Cod Lounge. Appearing will be a superb jazz drummer, Ronald Shannon Jackson. Jackson has worked with some of the biggest names in modern jazz, and many trade magazines have begun calling him the best jazz drummer alive. However, if rock is your forte, you can choose between the Stompers at the Rusty Nail performing their tribute to the state of New Jersey, or the Atlantics at the Bluewall. Best Bet: Sheehan's Cafe, featuring Vast Ed Vadas and his 12-Bar Symfunny.

Saturday night also features a freebie. Nigel Coxe will perform a tribute to Eubie Blake in honor of his 100th birthday this week. The show starts at 8:00 in Benzanson Recital Hall. Coxe has been working very hard on this show and it promises to be very good. After the show you can head over to the Bluewall for Saturday night's best bet: J.B. Hutto and the New Hawks. The blues is where modern music got its start and Hutto is considered the foremost Chicago style slide guitarist alive. Tickets are only $3 and that's a bargain at twice the price. Other shows Saturday night include: Max Creek at the Nail, Tirebiter at Hangar One, and First Rate at the Wok.

And now . . . (drum roll please) . . . the winner of last week's trivia contest is . . . Janice Hagemann. Janice has won an exciting new release from RCA, featuring the golden throats of Daryl Hall and John Oates. Janice, you can come by the office and pick up your prize anytime.

The ever popular Atlantics will play at the Blue Wall on Friday.

The answers to last week's Name the Rockstar Contest were: 1. David Bowie: David Jones 2. Iggy Pop: James Osterberg 3. Stevie Wonder: Steveland Judleins 4. Ringo Starr: Richard Starkey 5. Rick Berlin: Richard Kinscherf 6. Elvis Costello: Deckland McManus 7. Rick James: I forget 8. Elton John: Reg Dwight 9. Bob Dylan: Robert Zimmerman 10. Pig Pen: Ron McKernan

This week's quiz is a bit easier. Once again, please submit all answers by 12:00 noon next Wednesday. Good Luck!

1. What famous, influential musician turned 100 this week?

2. What Beatles album nearly had pictures of mutilated dolls on it?

3. What famous rock star went to art school with Brian Eno? (Hint: He wrote a song about the generation gap.)

Def Leppard makes a heavy metal compromise on Pyromania

PYROMANIA (Polygram)
Def Leppard

By YANETT PENA
Collegian Correspondent

When Def Leppard's first album, "On Through the Night," came out, they were acclaimed as the best of the "new breed" of heavy metal acts from England. But that was three years ago, and two albums later, they sound like a bunch of AC/DC clones. Don't get me wrong — I still like these guys, I just wish they'd be more original.

Their latest album, Pyromania, is an example of one of the many ironies in life: it's very commercial, the guitar riffs basically all sound the same, and they've included too much keyboards. Despite all this however, I found the album enjoyable.

The opening cut "Rock, Rock (Till You Drop)" sounds practically identical to recent AC/DC stuff, from the guitar playing to Joe Elliot's Brian Johnson imitation. "Photograph," the album's current single, is quite melodic and is probably being spun around on AM station turntables. "Stagefright" begins with the roar of an audience and is the only "fast" tune on the record.

The rest of side one is pretty much the same: strong guitars played at a moderate pace with similar rhythms, dripping with overpowering backing-vocals (remember Queen?).

The second side is more acoustic, especially "Foolin" and "Rock of Ages" which is dull and too slow. "Coming Under Fire" and "Action, Not Words" have good melodies (do I hear some variation here?), but "Billy's Got A Gun" has got to go; the keyboards are overbearing, the anti-gun lyrics are boring and pretentious, and the closing sounds like the record is being played backwards slowly.

There's nothing wrong with trying to make a few bucks, but the overall commercial quality of Pyromania is disappointing. Def Leppard seems to be compromising their music with every album. They've even neglected a decent prominent guitar lead on this record; most of it sounds like background fillers. No wonder guitarist Pete Willis left.

So why do I still find this album appealing? Because behind all that polished production there lies some good melodies. Although you won't find any "headbanging" material here, at least the songs aren't as wimpy as Triumph's or REO Speedwagon's.

Besides, bassist Rick Savage is always nice to look at.

Todd Rundgren as the tortured artist.

The ever popular tortured Todd effect

THE EVER POPULAR TORTURED ARTIST EFFECT (Bearsville)
Todd Rundgren

By TOM VINCENT
Collegian Staff

Todd Rundgren presents The Ever Popular Tortured Artist Effect, an album solely performed, produced and engineered by Todd Rundgren. Avid Runt fans would know that this isn't something new. Ever since his departure from The Naz, Todd has performed, and produced several solo albums as well as albums for a group he fabricated called Utopia. He has also done mucho producing for groups like Meatloaf, Patty Smith, Grand Funk, New England, and the Psychedelic Furs to name a few. My question is, where does he find the time?

The album cover (obviously related to John Lennon's artistic hardships) poses Todd dressed as John Lennon. There is little or no correlation that I can see between the cover concept and the material on the album. Although Todd has been known to write Beatlesque type tunes, I think the point he's trying to drive home is the old story of the public not appreciating, or understanding an artist's work, or point of view, and maybe John Lennon is a symbol of that.

The overall content is good. Good, that is, if you're not familiar with what he has done in the past. My first impression of the album was that Todd sold us short. He comes up with a big cover concept, but doesn't follow through with the music. Maybe Todd has finally realized that people will still buy his albums regardless of whether they have deep meaning or not.

Don't get me wrong, there is still some meaty stuff here. He does a great cover version of an old Small Faces song called "Tin Soldier" almost verbatim. His own material, the comical "Emperor Of The Highway" which pokes fun at motor heads and the danceable "Bang On The Drum All Day" show off his excellence in producing and engineering, but all this together doesn't make the record monumental enough to call it a great album, at least not compared to masterpieces like Hermit Of Mink Hollow, or Something - Anything

So what kind of album should we expect from a workaholic? Maybe I shouldn't be so critical of a one-man show. After all in the last year alone the poor lad released two Utopia albums, toured, produced Forever Now (the latest Psychedelic Furs album), and this recently released solo album. Anyone with that type of ambition deserves some credit. However, if Mr. Rundren keeps going at this pace his next album may be entitled The Ever Popular Tortured Todd Effect.

Beverly Hills and the civilized world will never forget them.

Men gymnasts lose third straight

John Macurdy a bright spot

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

It was another frustrating night for the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team on Tuesday as it lost to Southern Connecticut State College 264.25-243.50 to record its third loss in a row.

The slumping team was not as disappointed with the loss as it was with its performance. The Minutemen started the season off well with three victories in their first four meets but things have tumbled down hill ever since and coach Roy Johnson is bewildered with his squad's inability to hit its routines.

"I was disappointed with their performance," Johnson said. "I don't know why these guys can't just go out and do their routines. I'm almost dumbfounded in a way."

UMass would have had a difficult time defeating Southern Connecticut even if it were top notch in its performing because SC is currently undefeated and has a number of top gymnasts on its squad.

Although UMass performed well overall in the floor exercises, SC came up with some strong performances to capture the event by three points. However, UM did have the highlight of the exercises. 1982 floor champion John Macurdy took first in the event with a 9.55 which beat the score of Southern's Matt Biespiel, a U.S. National Team member, who scored a 9.5. Macurdy is tied for fifth place in the NCAA East with that score.

The pommel horse event was very frustrating for the men. The best the Minutemen could do was a fifth place finish by Bert Mathieson with an 8.6. The team totaled 36.05 for the event.

"I don't know what I'm going to do about pommels," Johnson said. "That hurts when your scoring is that low. We should be doing 40 (points) in pommels."

The Minutemen continued to have a loss of concentration in the still rings and vaulting events. Co-captain John McGonagle, still rings specialist, had some problems with his routine and scored an 8.6 which got him a fifth place finish. McGonagle is currently third in the NCAA Eastern gymnastics leaders with a 9.65.

The UM team had some trouble landing on its feet in the vaulting event. SC had no trouble at all as the team scored a 47.45 total which broke the old school record of 46.05 established in 1980. Mike Guzman led the way for Southern with a 9.85 which also broke a school record of 9.75.

Macurdy took sixth place for UMass with a score of 9.05 which placed behind the five SC performers.

The parallel bars event was a close one as Connecticut began to run out of steam. Biespiel was still going strong, however, and took the event with a 9.5. Mathieson followed behind Biespiel in second place with an 8.85 and Willie Stevens placed fourth with an 8.5.

The Minutemen overcame SC in the high bar to win the event. Biespiel finished first with a 9.4, and had an all around score of 54.25. Mathieson, who scored 51.35, placed second with a 9.0. Macurdy took third with an 8.9 and Lew Wingert scored an 8.75 for a fourth place finish.

"They've got to just keep working," Johnson said. "They're a little young yet in their routines."

The team's next meet is this Saturday at 2:00 p.m. at Cortland State.

Men's hoop taking its act to the capitol tonight

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

It's hard to leave home, especially when home has been so good to you.

But, the University of Massachusetts will have to fly or die away from the Curry Hicks Cage nest to play against George Washington University tonight as the Minutemen take on the Colonials in the nation's capitol (Washington D.C. for you non-geography students) at 8 p.m.

The local team, which has appeared to come of age during its past two games, must now see how well it can fare without the screaming fans that helped to make the Penn State win and the Rutgers thriller so exciting.

UMass will be led by this past week's Atlantic Ten Rookie-of-the-Week, John Hepmel. Hempel, who has been overlooked as the top rookie all season long despite several 20-plus point games, finally got the nod for his two 12 point performances against Penn State and Rutgers.

Hempel knows as well as anyone what the value of playing in the Curry Hicks Cage is.

"The crowd helps keep you going," the 6'7" freshman said following the Rutgers game. "It keeps the intensity going knowing that there are 5,000 maniacs screaming for you."

Another key performer during the recent surge of UMass hoop has been the leadership of Edwin Green. Green, who has really become a surprising bright spot in the Minutman lineup, hit for 15 points (and 10 rebounds) against Penn State and 10 points (many from the outside) against Rutgers.

Head coach Tom McLaughlin sees the GW game as a chance to see just how far his team has really come.

"I think we're gonna have to look at Wednesday night when we play George Washington to see if we keep up the intensity," McLaughlin said.

In all probability, the starting lineup of the past few games will remain intact for tonight's contest. Green will handle things in the middle, Horace Neysmith and Hempel will play at the Forwards, and Ron Young and floor leader Donald Russell will be in the backcourt.

Unfortunately for Minuteman basketball fans, WMUA will not be carrying the game, but you can hear all the action on the Minuteman Network (WHMP 99 FM).

Is there life outside of the Cage? The Minutemen certainly hope so.

Student feesrun the Athletic Department

By JUDY KELLIHER
Collegian Correspondent

Every semester undergraduates are faced with the inevitable task of paying tuition. Tacked on to that are a number of non-optional fees. Each year there seems to be an increase on some part of the bill. One of these expenses is the athletic fee.

Did you ever wonder what you were really paying for? Does paying this suddenly transform you into a varsity athlete? Wrong. It might be worth your while to know where your hard earned money is being distributed.

The athletic fee covers almost all the operational costs of the athletic department. On the surface, to unaware persons, this may not sem like such a big deal. But in reality it's incredible to know what the athletic fee involves. From the stadium debt, to the membership dues of the NCAA, to athletic injury care, the athletic budget requires a substantial nest egg.

Undergraduates do not directly have to pay to view any revenue generating sports, like basketball and football. A small portion of the athletic fee enables you to just flash the old I.D. card and attend any athletic event on campus. Within any given contest a whole host of expenses exist. Unfortunately, the junior varisty coaches, the officials and the ticket takers aren't there out of the goodness of their hearts. Uniforms, office and medical supplies, sports information press releases and student employment all fall under the athletic fee budget.

There is something prestigious about saying you're associated with a college that has a successful athletic program. Even a moderately successful athletic program retains some sort of status for the students.

There is no denying that in order to have a wide variety of athletic programs (which UMass does), a substantial amount of money is required. This is all made possible by the athletic fee budget. It must be understood that the fee is required of every undergraduate. Therefore, it's important to be aware of its role in lessening the financial burden of the athletic program.

Society has allowed athletics to become part of our everyday lifestyle, whether as spectators or participants. For spectators athletics has become a social phenomenon. It is not likely that a university can ignore such a happening. The old cliche "a healthy body, a healthy mind" is appropriate for participants in the athletic program.

How many times on a Saturday night have you looked for something to do? One alternative is to attend some athletic contest. Understand that the social aspect of athletics is an important mix with academic life.

Overall, know what the athletic fee supports. But more importantly, know that a well funded athletic program can enhance the lifestyle at UMass.

Intramural apathy rampant?

By TONY BETROS
Collegian Staff

The intramural program has gone through many changes over the years here at the University of Massachusetts, but perhaps none as major as the actual enrollment of the students themselves. Over the semester, we will be examining this issue, seeing whether enrollment has gone up or down, and determining the future of the intramural program in this school.

To use an example, lets start out with the sport of wrestling. In 1961, there were 47 entrants. As the 60's went by, wrestling continued to grow, reaching 218 people in 1967, 418 in 1969, and an all-time high of 542 in 1970.

Since 1970, however, enrollment has declined — drastically. Only 121 people enrolled in 1981, 78 in 1982, and only 50 so far this semester. What are the reasons for such a decline? Answers could range from poor communication by the department to lack of interest by the students. Is this the direction of intramural sports in general? Or does it vary from sport to sport? More to come in upcoming articles.

Speaking of wrestling, entries for this semester are being taken until Monday, Feb. 14. The weigh-in will be one week later, and matches start on the 22nd. Practice will be avasilable Tuesday and Thursday from 6-7 PM. Lets see more than fifty people this semester, or else we may not see wrestling, period.

In other intramural news, while the Minutemen continue their quest for the Atlantic 10 crown, the men's 5-on-5 intramural basketball league is in full swing. Looking for their fourth straight victory will be CQ-4, and with returning players like Garry Pearson, Dwane Lopes, Grady Fuller, and others, they will be tough to beat.

Ice Hockey will start up again this

Broadway Joe won't play Canton this year

By ELLIOTT KALB
Collegian Staff

Joe Namath. Say the name slowly in front of a mirror so you can see how majestically it rolls off the tongue; as befitting one of the greatest to ever play professional football.

I'm sure many of today's sports fans can remember the perfect dropback style of passing Namath employed during his 13 seasons in the NFL.

Over last weekend, five new members of the Pro Football Hall of Fame were elected. Paul Warfield, Bobby Mitchell, Sid Gillman, Sonny Jurgeson, and Bobby Bell were elected into the Hall. Joe Namath was not.

Joe Namath was the only one of the six finalists up for election in the complex balloting used by the Hall of Fame election committee, not to be voted in.

This is clearly an asinine situation: Broadway Joe, a man synonymous with football, with the New York Jets, with Broadway, class, and bravado. On what basis could the 29 member committee (a news media representative from each of the 28 NFL franchises plus one representative of the Pro Football Writer's Association) not elect Namath?

Statistics: Even with knees that were held together with Elmer's Glue and rubber bands, Namath passed for 27,663 yards, more than eight other Hall of Fame quarterbacks. He threw 173 touchdown passes, as many as four other Hall of Fame quarterbacks.

Championships: Super Bowl III belonged to Namath and the Jets. As 17 point underdogs to the Baltimore Colts, Namath guaranteed a victory and delivered, 16-7. How many Super Bowls did Fran Tarkenton or Sonny Jurgenson win? Zero. Namath was a winner.

Historical Significance: The American Football League (AFL) merged with the established NFL only one year afer the Jets and Namath put the infant league on equal footing by beating the NFL champions.

More than that, Namath set a standard for future quarterbacks to follow. In the mid 70's, when the Jets were a bad team, Namath still put fear into the other team's defenses. More than any one single player, Namath could make a bad team play adequately; an adequate team perform miraculously.

No one read defenses better or picked up the blitz better. No one was a fiercer competitor. At the end of his career, he tried to bring the Rams over the hump for one more championship, but his knees decided otherwise.

Broadway Joe played for Bear Bryant (B.J. and the Bear) at Alabama, and Bryant's death two weeks ago has put the Hall voting in perspective for Namath.

"I'm flattered that I was considered," said Namath to reporters as he added, "Winning a championship was always all I wanted to do and I was fortunate enough to have accomplished that."

I have no plaque or speech or banquet to present to Namath. There will be no press releases or television coverage to trumpet the announcement. There is just the knowledge that for me (and millions like myself) Namath contributed to some wonderful memories.

Joe Namath would be a unanimous selection in my Hall of Fame.

TRIVIA: Name the only football players who played in a Super Bowl game and are now enshrined in pro football's Hall of Fame.

Editors Note: Responses should be left at the Collegian Sports Desk. The person who names the most will be the winner.

Beacon Hill agriculture summit held at UMass

By TAMI BORTON
Collegian Staff

The state Legislature's Joint Committee on Agriculture and Natural Resources chose the University of Massachusetts to host a program held here yesterday and Wednesday because it is "the flagship of the state's higher education system," said Representative William Nagle, D-Northampton, committee chairman.

"The University is very helpful to us as legislators because it provides unbiased information on various topics of concern we don't see in politics," he said.

The Program for the Agriculture and Natural Resources Legislative Committee, held Wednesday and Thursday of this week, is the second such program held at UMass.

"The committee requested their program be held here because the topics they wished to cover are a carbon copy of the College of Food and Natural Resources," said Joseph S. Larson, chairman of the forestry and wildlife management department and member of the program's steering committee.

The program provided a chance for legislators to find out the extent of work being done in several areas of concern and was a source of ideas for their districts.

"I am enthusiastic about finding students from our area to study its growth, as was done at UMass," said Rep. Forrester Clark, (R-Hamilton).

"This program piqued my imagination on things in my own district and in voting on appropriations," he said. "and a a Republican, I am very happy to see value for the dollar in the topics researched at the University and ideas presented."

Nagle said, "The wealth of knowledge presented to us hit upon some prime areas of concern, such as hazardous waste and agricultural land use. I would highly recommend the University resources for similar programs with other committees."

Staff people from the legislative committee presented the College of Food and Natural Resources with topics they wished to have covered, Larson said. "The program was a 'show and tell' of our research, a lot of which directly supported research of state agencies," he said.

The agenda included talks and displays on environmental, agricultural and rural issues such as The Economics of Hazardous Waste, the Role of Soil Morphology in Waste Disposal and the Extension Local Government Program.

In the future, the joint committee hopes to invite faculty and students from the college to Boston to present information on problems which might come up, Nagle said.

"My only regret is that we did not have more time," Nagle said. "I hope to make the program an annual event."

Colorado's Hart schedules UMass appearance

By E.L. BIRK
Collegian Staff

Potential 1984 Presidential candidate Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., is scheduled to speak at the University during the first week of March, a spokesman from Students for Gary Hart said yesterday.

Bradley Jacobs, co-president of the newly-formed Recognized Student Organization, said he expects Hart to announce his presidential candidacy Feb. 17.

The subject of Hart's lecture is unknown but 20-year-old political science major Jacobs said Hart will speak some time between 10 a.m. and noon on March 4, in the Student Union Ballroom. Hart's UMass appearance is to be his only Amherst area campaign stop, Jacobs said.

If Hart announces his candidacy he will be in the company of Sen. Alan Cranston, D-California, who announced his candidacy two weeks ago. Cranston became the first officially registered presidential contender with that announcement.

In accordance with RSO regulations, the Hart supporters had to have a stated purpose before the RSO office would accord them recognition. Jacobs said, "We're interested in working for the best candidate for president and feel that to be him."

Without specifying details, Jacobs said Hart's major platform planks will include arms control, tax reform, military reform and energy policy.

Hart has been heralded by political spectators in the press as a presidential hopeful. His possible candidacy became more certain after Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., disqualified himself this fall from any consideration as a presidential candidate. Other strongly-suspected potential candidates include Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, former Vice President Walter "Fritz" Mondale and former Fla. governor Rubin Askew.

Spokesmen for Students for Gary Hart said they will staff a table several times weekly on the Campus Center concourse to distribute leaflets and solicit support for Hart.

If Hart enters himself as a candidate, one of the first official actions by local political activists that will test his popularity April 9 when the Massachusetts Democratic Party will hold a straw poll in its Issues Convention. California democrats already held a preference poll in which favorite son Cranston won support.

When bad things happen, feelings count

By RICHARD NANGLE
Collegian Staff

When someone is suffering mental anguish over a personal tragedy he doesn't want to hear from a sympathetic friend that it was God's will, he wants to know that the friend cares about his feelings.

That was the basic message put forth by Rabbi Harold Kushner, author of the bestseller "When Bad Things Happen to Good People," to a crowd of 250 people last night in the Cape Cod Lounge of the Student Union Building at the University of Massachusetts.

Kushner, whose congregation is in Natick, said he was inspired to write his book when his son Aaron died of a rare disease known as progeria. Progeria is the rapid aging of the mind and body. Aaron died of old age when he was 14, Kushner said.

"When I tried on myself all the reasons I used as a rabbi I found it didn't work," Kushner said. When tragedy strikes people are more interested in defending God than in making the anguished person feel better.

Kushner said mankind suffers from a belief that all men are terrible sinners and deserve whatever bad things happen to them. He said we must adjust our thinking in order to realize that God is not all-powerful and does not decide who suffers and who prospers. He added that any God who did make such decisions would not be worthy of anyone's worship.

"I don't believe we do God any favors when we take all the misery...in the world and say it was God's will. I believe bad things happen to good people because we are free to choose what kind of lives we want to lead," he said.

If you believe human suffering is God's will, Kushner said, when you see a blind man you should kick him.

In order to hlep people understand that God has made an "open ended" and imperfect world Kushner asked two questions.

"Can you forgive people for not being what you need them to be and love them anyway?" he asked. "Can you forgive God for making an imperfect world?"

Kushner said he can still believe in God because "I'm always seeing ordinary people do extraordinary things.

"The longer you look at the past the more helpless you feel. (When tragedy strikes) don't ask why. Ask 'What am I going to do now?' "

Union head tells truckers to get rolling after eleven days

WASHINGTON (AP) — Leaders of independent truckers called a halt yesterday to their violence-marred protest strike after they won assurances from nearly three dozen congressmen that their complaints would be examined.

"You have to be realistic," Michael Parkhurst, president of the Independent Truckers Association, said at a news conference interrupted by shouts and heckling from other truckers who said the 11-day strike should continue.

Acting at Parkhurst's urging, thousands of independent truckers parked their rigs Jan. 31 in protest against increases in truck taxes and road-user fees voted by Congress shortly before Christmas. But in recent days the strike appeared to be crumbling as growing numbers of truckers returned to the highways. One trucker was killed on the first day of the strike.

"We are officially asking independent truckers ... to get back to work as soon as possible," Parkhurst declared after a three-hour meeting of about 40 regional representatives of his organization, which claims 30,000 members.

Rising from the audience, George Sullivan, head of a rival organization called Independent Truckers Unity Committee, shouted that many truckers disagree with Parkhurst.

"He's got a piece of paper that's not worth the paper it's written on," Sullivan yelled.

Sullivan, who claimed to represent more than 35,000 truckers, including most of the steel haulers, said later that his committee would decide this weekend whether to continue the strike.

Other truckers, angry over Parkhurst's announcement, said they did not regard the protest as over.

During the strike, Parkhurst had said repeatedly that protesting truckers would return to work only if Congress repealed the tax and fee increases. But he said yesterday that the commitment from the congressmen was the best that could be achieved.

Parkhurst said that a letter being circulated in Congress by Rep. Douglas Applegate, DOhio, seeks a legislative review of the tax and fee boosts with the aim of making them more equitable for independent truck drivers.

Adolescent video junkies support addiction by crime

TOKYO (AP) — Addicted to Pac-Man and other video games, some young denizens of Japan's video arcades are turning to crime to support their habit — with a professionalism police hardly expected from "boys in short pants and baseball hats."

In Tokyo, four groups of 36 boys aged 8 to 13 were apprehended for breaking into homes and shops and stealing cash, valuables or merchandise in order to "spend lavishly in videogame arcades," according to a police official.

The police report did not mention motives, but officials say some boys, discouraged by the rigid, competitive Japanese school system and having few outlets for recreation, spend long hours in video-game centers — a habit that can be very expensive.

In early February, police in the northern Japan city of Sendai discovered a gang of five boys aged 10-11 whose criminal patterns, they said, resembled adult, organized crime.

Using bicycles, the five would scout a likely-looking house, car or shop. After throwing a stone through a window to see if anyone was inside, some of the youths would act as lookouts while a chosen "breaker" entered to steal money or valuables.

Investigating what they thought was a ring of professional thieves, police caught one of the five and discovered the criminals were "boys in short pants and baseball hats," according to a Sendai police official.

In 30 burglaries in four months, the boys netted 9.57 million yen ($39,800), the official said. They hid the money in a forest, and spent it "lavishly" at local video-game arcades, he said.

While police were trying to solve the wave of thefts, the gang's free-spending ways drew the attention of another group of nine boys, who demanded and got more than $2,600 from the first group for keeping silent.

Tax boost foreseen to accompany deficit

SPRINGFIELD — Senate President William Bulger said yesterday new state taxes — including a boost in the sales tax — might be needed to fill a possible $300 million revenue shortfall in the state's 1984 fiscal year budget.

"Rather than wait for chaos and deprive people of bare necessities, maybe we should face the fact that something in the area of sales tax is needed," Bulger said at a press conference following a speech at Springfield Cathedral High School.

Bulger said he has heard indications that $250 million to $300 million might be needed to cover state expenses in the fiscal year beginning this July.

He said the extra funds would be needed to cover Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' campaign pledge to increase local aid and to handle a switch in funding for the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority from a calendar year to a fiscal year.

Federal busing policy criticized by Bulger

SPRINGFIELD — State Senate President William M. Bulger charged yesterday that the federal court supervising Boston school desegregation "has presided over the total destruction of the school system."

Addressing a model student senate at Cathedral High in Springfield, Bulger accused federal courts of "overstepping their bounds" and impairing the balance of power in government.

"The American people don't want to turn lawmaking over to paternal guardians," he said. "Legislators are elected to debate and argue on behalf of their constituents, and compromise to make effective laws that are the will of the people."

He cited the Boston school busing case as an example of what he characterized as court abuse.

Duke appoints Dorsey as press secretary

BOSTON — James Dorsey, press aide to U.S. Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., and a former United Press International reporter, becomes Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' press secretary Feb. 16, Dukakis announced yesterday.

Dorsey, 38, of Boston worked for UPI for 12 years, eight of them covering the Massachusetts Statehouse, before going to work for Frank in January 1981. He said he will be paid about $40,000 in his new job.

Dorsey succeeds Gerald FitzGerald, Dukakis' press secretary during the governor's election campaign last year, who resigned Feb. 1 to take a job as an assistant district attorney in Bristol County.

Dukakis described Dorsey as " a talented and extremely capable person (who has) worked on both sides of the fence," as a reporter and press secretary.

Teen wants to pose; 'Playboy' mag willing

BILLERICA — The editors of Playboy magazine will take a look at a photo of a high school senior who wants to pose for a spread in the magazine and wants her ambition mentioned in the school's yearbook.

Loretta Martin, 17, has complained that Billerica High School wouldn't let her mention her desire to be a centerfold under her yearbook picture.

That came to the attention of Dan Sheridan, a spokesman for the magazine, who says he personally will take her picture to photo editors at Playboy. Miss Martin cannot legally pose nude until she is 18.

Miss Martin said she has retained a lawyer from the American Civil Liberties Union to help her.

Woman finds second skeleton in her home

STAFFORD TOWNSHIP, N.J. — A woman cleaning a house she recently purchased to open a thrift shop found that the previous owners truly had skeletons in their closet.

Josephine Hogan, who bought the house here early last month from the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, said she was cleaning a stairwell closet on Tuesday when she opened a long box and found the bones.

It was her second discovery of a skeleton in the house, she said. Earlier, she had uncovered a set of bones in an elaborately decorated casket.

This time, however, there was no warning about the contents of the box, because it did not resemble a casket.

"This to me was more frightening than the first," she added.

Both skeletons are professional models with the bones wired together for use in instruction and research, authorities said.

The bones are used in secret rituals by the Odd Fellows fraternity to show that life doesn't last forever, said Carlton Myers, the organization's state grand secretary.

Jury to resume duties in Widow vs. Ware

NORTHAMPTON — A jury deliberated 2½ hours yesterday on whether to find the town of Ware negligent because police officers didn't detain a teen-ager who minutes later was involved in a fatal car accident.

Hampshire Superior Court Judge Raymond Cross, who began hearing testimony last week, sent the jury home at 4 p.m. The jurors will resume deliberations Friday at 10 a.m.

Debbie Irwin, 23, a widow from Ware, filed a $1 million civil lawsuit against the town, claiming police who stopped the teen-ager should not have let him drive because he was drunk.

The defense contended there was no proof the teen-ager was drunk and said police officers were just doing their job in letting 19-year-old Donald Fuller go.

Fuller, a Monson resident, was stopped after he pulled away from a nightclub about 2 a.m. May 15, 1978. Police said he didn't appear intoxicated, so they let him go.

A few minutes later his car bounced off a telephone pole and collided with the Irwins' car. Fuller, Mrs. Irwin's husband, Mark, 19, and their 18-month-old daughter, Misty Jane, were killed.

"It was Mother's Day, and my family ended in a split second," the young widow testified last week.

Charges against Murphy; SGA post remains empty

By GLEN GOLDSTEIN
Collegian Correspondent

A petition has been filed against University of Massachusetts Student Government Association (SGA) President Jim Murphy charging him with failure to perform his duties by Randy Chapman, assistant student Attorney General.

The petition asks the University Judiciary to order Murphy to appoint a Student Attorney General.

Chapman said he may file a class action suit against Murphy on behalf of the student body.

Chapman was unanimously recommended by the Attorney General Search Committee to fill the job last semester.

"For personal or political reasons, Murphy will not appoint me as the attorney general," Chapman said.

Murphy is not required by the SGA constitution to appoint the person that the search committee recommends. However Murphy is required by the SGA constitution to appoint an attorney general "within one month after his/her (the president) election," according to the SGA constitution.

Murphy was supposed to appoint someone at the last Student Senate meeting of the Fall '82 semester, Chapman said.

Murphy appointed Elizabeth Hill as Acting Student Attorney General when Craig Colbath resigned from the Attorney General job last May.

"No one complained when Murphy didn't appoint someone to the Attorney General's job within the one month period. That doesn't make it right; that doesn't legitimize it," Chapman said.

"There's nothing in the constitution that says, 'If you can't find an Attorney General you like, then appoint an Acting Attorney General,'" Chapman said.

"I think that Murphy's failing to appoint an official Attorney General shows disrespect for the Student Senate. The students are being wronged here," Chapman said.

Chapman has filed a writ, I consider it a 'sour grapes' attitutde on his part. I think that Randy's behavior is childish," Murphy said.

"I am not planning on appointing anyone to the position of Attorney General," said Murphy. "I feel that it would be a gross disrespect to the person I would appoint and the next SGA president."

Each new SGA president may keep the current Attorney General or replace them with someone new, Murphy said.

A Writ of Mandamus was filed with the University Judiciary. The writ instructs a student official to perform his duties as prescribed by the SGA Constitution.

"I have good reasons why the search for an Attorney General took so long," Murphy said.

Students overcharged on Campus Center fee

By DAVID SUMMERSBY
Collegian Staff

In this semester's first meeting of the Campus Board of Governors (BOG), BOG Chairman Ron Keefe said last night that students were overcharged approximately $140,000 last year when they paid their Campus Center fee.

Instead of receiving this money back, Keefe suggested, students could see it applied towards the new full costing policy.

Keefe said that last year the Campus Center fee that all students paid went up $9 from $79 to account for a fringe benefit reserve cost.

But this reserve fund is now not likely to be used and John L. Denyse, vice-chancellor for Administration and Finance at the University, had agreed that if such a situation arose the students would be refunded the $9 amounting to almost $140,000.

Under the current plan, however, the Campus Center Administration is seeking to take the $140,000 and use it to help pay off Campus Center Trust fund reserve costs. Keefe said he feels this is wrong.

"We want the Campus Center fee lowered and we want to find other ways to generate money for this reserve. Students also pay the debt service for the building as well as other costs and we really want to minimize costs all around," he said.

Under the new Trust Fund Management Policy passed Tuesday by the UMass Board of Trustees, all of the University fee-based trust funds, including the Campus Center, are required to set aside 2.4 percent of their total budget to be given to the campus to pay for central services. With a total budget of approximately 14 million, the Campus Center will have to set aside roughly $336,000.

Keefe said he will be meeting with Denyse and Campus Center Director Bill Harris sometime next week to drum up a solution of where this money should come from. "We are trying to get everything tied up as soon as possible," Keefe said.

Although Keefe wants the fee lowered back to $79.00 for next semester, he feels that students will probably be charged about $4 towards full costing on the Campus Center fee making the total fee around $83.00.

In other business, Keefe said that the issue of creating a Computer Center within the Campus Center is currently on hold because there has been no agreement on what room to put it in.

Campus mail employees cite personnel shortages as Cupid approaches

By ERIC LEHAN
Collegian Correspondent

After 11 years with the University of Massachusetts Campus Mail Service, Ed Mokrzycki said he has little respect for the Administration's handling of the mail services.

"It's unreal," said Mokrzycki, after returning from his route to the central mail room in Goodell. "We haven't got the personnel. I can't take a day off because no one else will do my route."

Most of the mail service employees have been at the job for more than 10 years and are entitled to certain amounts of vacation time in accordance with the policies of their union, the Massachusetts Teachers Union.

The UMass mail service handles approximately 4 million pieces of United States and campus mail each year with only eight full time employees.

"Without student help we'd have a hard time," said Richard Clarity, director of the mail service. "We're down several positions from five years ago."

The mail service employs 10 work study students in the central mail room as well as a student from each dormitory to sort the dorm's mail.

The mail service offers a service to the various UMass departments whereby the postage fees from a department's outgoing mail are billed to the respective department's account. This service requires much time in weighing each piece of mail and assigning over $500,000 worth of postage fees to the correct accounts each year.

A $14,000 Pitney Bowes computer system was purchased last year to speed up the process but has not been put into operation because of "bugs" in the machinery and a lack of employee training.

The campus mail has been accused of unreliability by some students, but Clarity said the percentage of mishaps is quite low considering the volume of mail handled. Rarely does "some combination of unforseen circumstances" result in misdirected mail.

Because of the transient student population, re-addressing mail is another time consuming problem. An IBM terminal was purchased this month which matches a local address, a permanent address, and a student number to any student's name. This significantly speeds up the re-addressing process which had previously been done with printouts from the Registrar's Office.

Near Valentine's Day the volume of campus mail "increases by about 300 percent," Mokrzycki said. Usually, campus mail can be delivered the next day depending on the delivery times at the particular dorm.

But for those students wishing to send a letter to the object of their desire, it may be too late now for Campus Mail Service to deliver it by Monday.

Duke holds over King aide as mass transit agency chief

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis said yesterday he will keep James O'Leary, a holdover from the King Administration, as general manager of the Boston-area mass transit agency.

Dukakis told the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority's Advisory Board that O'Leary will stay on the job at least until his contract runs out next spring, and longer "if things work out."

O'Leary took over the MBTA from Barry M. Locke, who now is serving a jail term after a conviction on bribery-conspiracy charges.

"This has not been an easy four years for the 'T,'" Dukakis told the advisory board. "I think Jim O'Leary deserves an enormous amount of credit."

Asked whether O'Leary will remain as MBTA general manager during his four-year term as governor, Dukakis said, "He is general manager and, assuming things work well, he's going to continue to be general manager. If they don't...we'll both be practicing law."

O'Leary told reporters after the meeting that his job would be impossible without the support of Dukakis and state Transportation Secretary Frederick Salvucci.

"Prospects for some real improvements at the MBTA are very much at hand," O'Leary said.

Dukakis has said repeatedly that the MBTA and other forms of mass transit are vital to maintaining the economic strength of Massachusetts.

Dukakis said he frequently takes the Green Line to work from Brookline because it is important for the governor to use the transit system to show that he believes in it, and that it is "not just something for those who can't afford better."

Dukakis also urged the advisory board to act quickly to put into effect an arbitrator's award that granted members of the Carmen's Union a phased-in 19 percent pay raise retroactive to January 1981 and effective through March 1985.

The arbitrator also upheld a management rights provision O'Leary put into effect after the Legislature in 1980 approved a new law strengthening the hands of MBTA managers.

Levenson bills self as only liberal in selectman's race

By NANCY GONTER
Collegian Staff

Joanne Levenson, the University of Massachusetts Off—Campus Housing director, said she will be the only "liberal" candidate in the race for Amherst Town Selectman.

Former Selectman candidate Vincent O'Connor withdrew from the race on Monday afternoon, leaving only Levenson, former town manager Allen Torrey and incumbent Fredereck Steinbeck to vie for the two vacant seats in the April 5 election.

O'Connor withdrew because he feared the race might "end up in the gutter," according to a prepared statement issued by O'Connor at Monday's Selectmen meeting.

Levenson said that she decided to run for Selectman because she thought the other candidates running would not address some issues that she thinks are important to the town.

"I have a deep concern that town residents should become more active in town government and the community,"she said.

"Students are residents too. It's important that they get involved in town government. Because of the low vacancy rate, students are getting used by the big realtors; they are paying an unfair price for housing," she said.

Levenson, who has lived in Amherst 12 years and been involved in local government for five, said yesterday she had no doubt that she is "the liberal candidate."

Everywoman Center offers support groups for women

Support groups for women wanting to share their experiences, hopes and fears in different areas of life are being offered this month by the Everywoman Center at the University of Massachusetts.

"A Divorce and Separation Support group" will be meeting for eight to 10 weeks at the Everywoman Center. The group is for women considering going through a divorce or separation or who have recently been divorced. Call Prudence Grand at the center for more information.

"Life Transitions Support Group for Women Over 40" will run for eight to 10 weeks to help women deal with life changes occuring during and after the middle ages, such as career changes, children leaving home, separation, divorce and financial struggles. For registration and more information, call Prudence Grand at the center.

"Support group for Women in the process of Coming Out as Lesbians" will begin meeting Feb. 14 at the Everywoman Center. Women in the process of coming out are eligible for the group. The group meetings will be an opportunity for women to share their concerns, fears and joys about coming out. For registration, call Pat Hanrahan at the center.

"Eating Problems Support Group" will meet beginning Feb. 28 at the center. Issues that will be discussed include compulsive eating, starving and stuffing, food deprivation and family relations. Only women with eating problems are eligible for the group. For more information, cll Prudence Grand at the center.

"Support Group for Underemployed Women" will be offered for eight weeks and will meet from 7 to 9 p.m. Tuesday nights at the center. The first session will begin Feb 15. The group will focus on what underemployment is and is not, coping with the stresses of underemployment and helping individuals feel comfortable with their present life circumstances. For more information, contact Gerda Kunel at the center. For more information about any of the support groups or about any of the other services provided by the Everywoman Center, call the center at 545—0883.

Collisions aplenty for UMass cops

Police report that a car driven by Martin S. Yeboah, 22, of 44 Southwood Apartments was involved in a collision with a car driven by James E. Owers, at 9:25 a.m., Wednesday. Damage to both cars was estimated at less than $200, police said.

The windshield of another car was reported shattered by a snowball shortly after midnight Thursday, police said. The driver of the car was not identified. One of three people standing on North Pleasant Street threw a snowball at the car, police said. No charges have been made in the incident.

A window valued at $21 was broken in Baker Dormitory yesterday, police reported. The window was broken by an unidentified man after a resident refused to open the locked back door for him, police said.

A typewriter that was reported missing on Tuesday from the Special Education Department in Hills South Building was found in a department cabinet.

Amherst Fire Chief Gerald A. Sanford's car sustained more than $500 worth of damages after a truck backed into it at 6:20 p.m., Wednesday, Amherst police reported. The car was parked in its traditional spot in front of the Fire Station in Amherst center when the truck driven by Emmanuel Papacostas, 32, of East Hartford, Conn., struck it, police said.

Police report that a car driven by Stephen Kirissy, 27, of Laconia, N.H., failed to negotiate a turn on Flathills road and struck a tree, police said. The left side of the car was damaged but Kirissy was uninjured.

Joseph Moran, 21, of Pittsfield was injured after the car he was driving struck a mailbox on Meadow Street, police said.

Health Services physician dead at 42

By JIM FINKLE
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts Health Services physician Anthony M. Melchionda died at Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton yesterday following a long illness.

Melchionda, 42, was a senior staff physician for the University Health Services and had worked there for 10 years. Until a year ago he also served as Director of Medical Services for Hampshire College.

"We were shocked to hear of his death," UMass Medical Director Thomas C. McBride said yesterday. "We were aware of his illness, but he had worked until noon on Tuesday. Tony was one of the most popular physicians and he made a particularly strong impression on many students interested in becoming physicians."

Melchionda, his wife Michele and their two children, ages 12 and 13, have lived in Amherst since 1973. He was instrumental in establishing the modern ambulance service operated by the Town of Amherst and worked on many issues affecting the physically handicapped.

"Tony took a special interest in the Town of Amherst's ambulance service. He provided many hours of special training for the people operating the service and frequently offered advice to the fire department on this subject," McBride said.

"Doctor Melchionda also had a strong concern for the affairs of the handicapped that may partly have been a result of his serving in a forward evacuation hospital while in Vietnam," McBride said. Melchionda served with the U.S. Army Medical Corps in Vietnam in 1970.

University Health Services Executive Director Barry W. Averill said Melchionda was loved by many troubled people because of his sensitive nature.

"Doctor Melchionda was noted for his humaneness and caring," Averill said.

Melchionda served in an orthopedic residency at Albany Medical Center from 1971 to 1973 and then came to UMass.

He was graduated from Kings College in Wilkes Barre, Pennsylvania and received his M.D. from the George Washington University Medical School in Washington, D.C.

Melchionda held an academic appointment at UMass in the area of exercise physiology and was interested in sports medicine.

PVTA celebrates ten years of service tomorrow; party planned for next week

By BOB OLSON
Collegian Staff

Tomorrow will mark the 10th anniversary of the University of Massachusetts Transit Service, which grew from a few old buses into a fleet of modern vehicles serving the Amherst area. The service is one of the largest free bus systems in the world.

Local dignitaries including U.S. Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R-Mass., and UMass Chancellor Joseph Duffey have been invited to attend a Feb. 18 luncheon commemorating the event.

The bus service began in 1969 when the student senate established the Student Senate Transit service. At that time the bus service was comprised of three 1963-66 school buses and two 1956 transit coaches.

From such humble origins the service was enlarged, to serve the off campus population, on February 12, 1973. The expansion was made possible through funds provided by an Urban Mass Transportation Administration (UMTA) Demonstration Grant. Co-directors of this grant were Dr. Paul Shuldiners, professor of civil engineering and Dr. William Goss, professor of mechanical engineering, according to William Barrett, director of transportation and parking.

Rapid growth of the system was continued when an operating contract between the University and Pioneer Valley Transit Authority was secured in 1976. Funds from that grant purchased 26 new buses and helped to construct the $1.7 million bus maintenance facility.

The modern facilities and coaches allow the bus system to run 36 transit coaches on 12 routes serving seven communities. Every day the 140 student drivers whisk 23,000 people to and from campus. In one year the UMass transit system estimates it performs approximately 4.1 million passenger trips.

The capital needed for funding this shuttle service is supplied by the PVTA, the University, the University parking system and an $11-a-semester student fee.

New director finds UMass press job "refreshing"

By PAULA HOYT
Collegian Staff

After seven years at the University of Washington as press editor, Bruce Wilcox has found a "refreshing change" as the newly-appointed director of the University of Massachusetts Press.

"I saw the job as an excellent possibility to be associated with a smaller press that enjoys a fine reputation," Wilcox said.

Wilcox began in January as the press director, reviewing manuscripts for scholarly books published at UMass and marketed on a small scale throughout the country.

"We receive over one thousand submissions and proposals for books every year," Wilcox said.

Wilcox said of the manuscripts submitted to the University Press, only about 25 per year are actually published.

"UMass Press is a small organization compared to some other universities which produce hundreds of books annually," Wilcox said.

"Our criterion is the quality of the books and some of the best ones come from the smaller presses," he said. "Making a profit is not the ultimate reason for this press."

One common misconception is that the University Press prints only textbooks and material by UMass professors, Wilcox said.

"We do not print textbooks at all and only one third of the book authors are from this campus," Wilcox said.

The books are written by scholars for other scholars within specialized fields. The press also designs and produces books which appeal to a more general audience, he said.

After the manuscripts are approved by the editorial board, the printing of the books is handled by large commercial printers contracted by UMass Press.

There is a warehouse in the library tower where the books are then stored and shipped, Wilcox said.

"We are the publishing arm of the university and are constantly on the lookout for worthwhile manuscripts," he said.

Wilcox said that he particularly likes the small staff at UMass Press as compared to larger ones such as the University of Washington.

"The eleven member staff here has lively interaction and an informality that's refreshing," he said.

Wilcox graduated from Harvard University in 1969 and worked for Franklin Book Programs, a large textbook organization in New York, prior to his work with the University of Washington.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Sperm oppression a problem

I like to consider myself a "macho guy", and especially like for my women friends to think of me as being that way. One of the things I stay quiet about in order to keep up my image as a virile stud is my interest in the "Living" section of the Boston Globe. Sometimes I ignore the front page with its headlines of trucker strikes and MX missiles, and the sports pages containing news of Pete Peeters latest shut-out, and turn directly to the Living section and Miss Manners.

I hope people appreciate how much guts it took for me to confess this publicly.

Anyway, while I was perusing the "Living" section the other day, I noticed that on the front page next to the article on Brooke Shield's teeth, was a long article on sperm banks. My first reaction was shock over seeing the word "sperm" in the newspaper — and in such large print (the headline was "The Debate over Sperm Banks"). But what was more disturbing was the article itself.

The article reported a new trend. In the old days women who were artificially inseminated didn't know anything about the donor of the sperm besides the fact that he was a healthy medical student with so and so colored eyes and such and such colored hair. Nowadays some of the more popular sperm banks, responding to public demand, ask donors to provide much more information, such as hobbies, favorite sports, special abilities and more. I suppose it surprises no one that women look for the same things in sperm that they look for in men — at least according to this article.

For example, the article stated that at a certain sperm bank, Donor 28's sperm is a particular favorite. Donor 28's sperm "likes to sail, ski and hike and has a nice line in humorous banter." Another popular sperm is number 26. This sperm has an IQ in the 170s, is an Ashkenazi Jew and has made major contributions to research in Medical science.

I think people are expecting too much from a microorganism. To expect a tiny sperm to be able to ski or play racquetball seems very unreasonable to me. Besides, it's hard to get a racquetball court on a weekend. Imagine having to stand in line behind millions of determined sperm — sperm who are just taking up the sport to become more desireable to women, not out of any real interest?

As I understand it (which I don't), while Donor 28's sperm is in great demand, billions of other sperm are left alone Saturday nights, making themselves TV dinners and watching Spotlight. It's all very sad when you think about it.

Take the case of a sperm named Dave (not his real name). Dave is a nice guy, friendly, a good dancer. But he doesn't play racquetball, he wears glasses, and he's a little on the short side (3 microns). Now how is Dave supposed to compete against another sperm who's tall, blonde, likes to ski, and is a Dean at an ivy league college? But if you borrowed a microscope and took the time to get to know Dave than...that's all I'm saying, you just to get to know him. After all, you can't judge a sperm by its donor.

Comic strip tasteless and vulgar

To the Editor:

We as students of the University of Massachusetts and avid readers of the Collegian are shocked at the tasteless UMass Zone comic strip that appeared on Thursday, February 10, 1983.

If Marc Rollins wishes to write such vulgar comments, we suggest that he submit his literary work to Hustler or Penthouse magazine.

We are simply amazed that the Collegian would print this attack upon the female as well as the male population of this university.

In the future, we suggest that the Collegian review their "comic literary" matter so that the students of UMass will not be subjected to such ignorant sexual comments again.

Article a front for racist ideas

To the Editor:

I was also present at the meeting, which was reported on in the Collegian of 2/9/83, concerning the participation of Prof. Wilce in a South African academic conference. I would like to add some facts and comments to Ms. McCrory's good report.

Wilce stated that he received funds not only from the Faculty Research Council of the University here, but also from the "Sandy Beach Eco-System Congress." He then stated that the "Congress" was not an international organization (though foreigners did participate), but rather it is entirely a South Africa based organization.

This is hardly surprising as nearly all international organizations, which span quite diverse social and political systems, reject any contact with South Africa. This is because South Africa is unique among the world's nations for possessing a legal system which strictly distributes all political, economic, and cultural rights on the basis of race. To cite only one example, any amateur athlete who participates in an event where South African teams are present will be disqualified from any activities which are under the jurisdiction of the International Olympic Committee.

While South Africa illegally occupies Namibia, and regularly invades its much weaker neighbors, it invades the rest of the world with money. John Sears, Reagan's former presidential campaign manager, now heads up the pro-apartheid lobbying effort in the U.S. Last year, South Africa spent over $300,000 in Massachusetts alone, in a futile attempt to defeat the "Mass Divest Bill" (which passed nearly unanimously, over King's veto, on the last day of the Session).

The Southern Africa Solidarity Committee calls upon all organizations of the university community — undergraduate and graduate students, staff, and faculty — to censure Prof. Wilce for his immoral actions, which have brought shame upon our great University, and to restrain him from spreading the corrupting influence of racist ideas (as was evidenced in the recent Collegian article).

As for the graduate student, Andrew Davis, who accompanied Wilce to South Africa, we would advise him that attempting to ingratiate himself with the racist regime whose days are numbered is not a good start for an academic career.

Going home to N. Jersey

I'm glad to be back at UMass...really! Being at college is still such a novelty to me that I don't even mind buying textbooks at ridiculous prices, or dragging myself out of bed to face a dreaded 8 a.m. class. However, there are those moments when I find myself thinking about — and yes, actually missing — Aberdeen, New Jersey.

"Whaddaya do in that boring little town, anyway?" asks my friend, William, (himself from Dullsville, North Dakota), "Count how often everybody yawns in an hour?"

Hometowns can be pretty tame, but let's face it: living at home offers some serious advantages that even the finest university couldn't duplicate.

The most obvious one is lounging around in bed for three hours after you've actually woken up. The wise individual will ignore threats of "turtle headache," and utilize this time spent between the sheets by planning revenge on old high school enemies, and deciding what to eat for lunch, (since breakfast-time came and went while you were still in what resembled a narcotic daze). Every unemployed college student I know claims to have slept past noon every single day during winter break.

Elizabeth Luciano

When they finally admitted to being alert, many people crawled into their living rooms to watch television. This differs greatly from watching t.v. in a lounge, or an off-campus apartment, where you can't even pick your nose, or scratch your behind for fear a complete stranger will walk into the room. The stuffing that was supposed to be in the couch winds up all over the mohair sweater your rich Aunt Edith gave you last Christmas, and empty cans of Moosehead, (some of them admittedly your own), are piled so high, you can't even see the screen. And if you could, it wouldn't matter; the picture's warped, making Tom Selleck look like Porky Pig. At home, one can slob around in a bathrobe while watching Richard Simmons exercise, and nobody tries to switch the channel.

As surprising as it sounds, quiet a few UMies read during vacation. (I'm referring to recreational readers, not Engineering majors who took Fluid Mechanics during Wintersession and aced the course). It's fun to read at home; you can select your own reading material, usually tawdry bestsellers strongly lacking in literary merit. (A few favorites are Sweet, Passionate, Lusty Savage Love, and The Flame and the Flower). At home, you don't have to search for a hi-liter before you sit down with the book, and if it turns out to be boring, you can decide not to finish it without worrying about faking your way through a class, or (worse yet), an exam.

Being home takes the terror out of doing laundry. You can ask your mother whether the grayish-blue shirt should go in with the darks, or if it needs to be dry-cleaned. When you finally give in and wash your clothes, there's no hunting around for dimes and quarters, and you don't have to wait until the machines aren't in use. (With my luck, Friday night.)

On the tacky side, bathrooms at school just don't compare to those at home; it's like a drafty, wooden outhouse next to your Grandmother's powder room with the frilly curtains and footed bathtub. In your own bathroom, you can leave a blow-dryer and Super-Strength Zit-Zapper around the sink and there's a nice, fuzzy, rug to protect your sacred toes from the cold, tile floor. The amount of privacy is unbelievable — you could stay in there for a year and a day, and nobody'd yell except your brother. Better yet, residents of single-sex dorms don't have to worry about the feet in the next stall facing the wrong direction, when they're home.

Don't misunderstand me — I love the hectic lifestyle here at UMass, and I'm not like a homesick kid at camp. It's just that once in awhile, studying grates on my nerves, and since I don't own ruby slippers, I call my parents to say "Hello."

I think they appreciate it. And William thinks that they should have named me Dorothy, given me a dog called Toto, and pitted me against the Wicked Witch of Southwest.

Sooner Or Later You'll Get Responsibility Like This. In The Navy It's Sooner.

You're maneuvering 445 feet of guided missile frigate through the navigational hazards and non-stop traffic of one of the world's busiest ports.

But you'll dock safely. Because you know your equipment. You know your men. And even when the responsibility weighs in at 3,600 tons... you're ready.

After 4 years of college, you're ready for more responsibility than most civilian jobs offer. Navy officers get the kind of job and responsibility they want, and they get it sooner.

Navy officers are part of the management team after 16 weeks. Instead of boot camp, officer candidates receive four months of leadership training. It's professional schooling designed to sharpen their technical and management skills.

Then, in their first assignment, Navy officers get management experience that could take years in private industry. And they earn the decision-making authority it takes to make that responsibility pay off.

As their management abilities grow, Navy officers can take advantage of advanced education and training in fields as varied as operations management, electronics, and systems analysis. In graduate school it would cost you thousands; in the Navy we pay you.

And the Navy pays well. The starting salary is $17,000 (more than most companies pay). And that's on top of a comprehensive benefits program that can include special duty pay. After four years, with regular promotions and pay increases, the salary is up to as much as $31,000.

If you qualify to be an officer in the Navy, chances are you have what it takes to succeed. The Navy just makes it happen faster.

I want Gandhi

GANDHI
Mountain Farms Mall

By JANE BUCHBINDER
Collegian Staff

It is January 30, 1948. The scene opens to a somber sunrise over a New Delhi water front. The ashes of Mahatma (great soul) K. Gandhi had been sprinkled here just a dusk ago.

Backtrack some 56 years and retrace the history of the life of one man and the history of his country:

In his early 20's Mohandas K. Gandhi, Esquire, rides placidly on a train through South Africa. Soon he is kicked-off of the train for being a "black" man riding in a first class car. After staying for several days with a muslim friend here, he learns of the uncivilized,segregated rule his fellow Indians have been living under. Immediately, he resolves to change the conceptions, ideas, and law that the white Englishmen have enforced in order to repress and devalue India as a country, and a people.

The battle is no less than a series of successes. Under the dictorial leadership of Gandhi, India emerges as an independent country. To think that such a complete turn around could be performed during one man's lifetime is more than immortally heroic.

The Mahatma's untainted vision instantaneously penetrates the pollution of corruption to a lucid justice over and over again. He fights to attain independence from England through use of either non-violence tactics. His response to the violence instigated by the English troops: "An eye for an eye only ends up making the whole world blind."

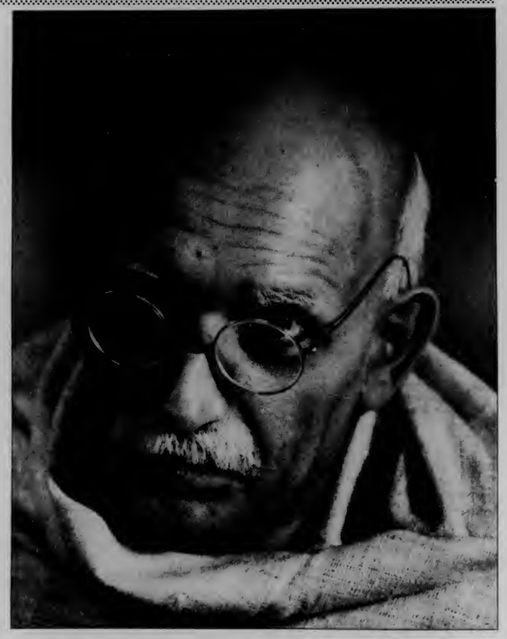
Of course, freeing a country from the tight reigns of England's royalty is no easy task. As Mohandas begins his quest there is, unmistakably, an unsettling fear in his brown, endearing eyes.

The trip is a harrowing one, with several uncontrollable outbreaks. In one scene we see a great gathering of Indians innocently listening and cheering for a non-violence speaker. Intermittant flashes of an English troop march towards the peaceful rally. Finally, stratigically positioned the armed men open fire shooting unceasingly at the "thickest part of the crowd" until over a thousand men, women, and children are dead. A New York Times reporter (played by Martin Sheen) writes, "She(India) has taken all the cruelty England can give and she has neither cringed nor retreated."

Eventually, however, India too has its moments of weakness. A group of marching chanters quickly become rioters setting aflame to an English police station and killing all those inside. Gandhi is crushed by the weakness of his followers and declares the second of two fasts until all violence ceases. "I cannot watch the destruction of all I've lived for."

Needless to say that India does win its independance. Still, the sole force behind their liberation remains humble, modest, and even self-effacing, sitting at his spinning wheel making cotton threads for cloth. His indestructable belief and determination, his humor, his loving and lovable facial expressions — all make Gandhi the perfect paternal figure leading his adult children through their most traumatic birth: the birth of a nation.

"Generations to come will scarcely believe that such a one as this ever in flesh and blood walked upon this earth."
— Albert Einstein



Ben Kingsley makes his movie debut in the title role of Gandhi.

Movies: picking the top five for 1982

By ANDY GORDON
Collegian Staff

The true sign of great film is character. Writing, acting, direction and all the other aspects of filmmaking all play into this, but a film with appealing or interesting characters is already ahead of the game — plot becomes almost unnecessary. The five films I have chosen as the best of the year all had this incidence of good characters and character development. They are, in no particular order, as follows:

Diner — The perfect example of what I'm talking about above. Fenwick, Boogie, Eddie, Modell, Billy and Shrevie are friends who have grown up together. Their antics, their discussions and the relationships they have with each other make these characters irresistible. Writer/director Barry Levinson trusts these characters and lets them move and do as they please; he doesn't lead them into prefabricated plot formulas. The result is a beautiful little film that follows these young men of the early fifties while commenting on such things as male bonding and the lack of communication between the sexes.

The film is excellent technically as well. The period is authentic looking, Levinson's direction is smooth and the performances are good all around. Of particular note are Kevin Bacon, Mickey O'Rourke, Steve Guttenberg, Paul Reiser and Daniel Stern.

Gandhi — One would be hard pressed to find a character, historically, more interesting than Mahatma Gandhi. Director Richard Attenborough has sought to bring the life of India's human rights activist to the screen for years and has finally, and successfully, done so. Gandhi is educational, entertaining and, though close to four hours long, never boring. Standing amidst hundreds of thousands of extras, Ben Kingesly in the title role is never dwarfed. His performance is remarkable. Part Indian himself, the Shakespearian actor ages over sixty years on screen and is convincing throughout. As a pre-credits card attests, no film could completely do justice to the man's life, but Gandhi comes as close as it conceivably could.

Chilly Scenes of Winter — Another "small" film. Joan Micklin Silver's funny story of obsessive love was actually released in 1979 as Head Over Heels, but closed in under a week. This new version has been re-edited and re-released to a national audience and is wonderful. Superior to the original, Chilly Scenes gives us Charles and his unshakeable infatuation for the married Laura. In the lead roles, John Heard and Mary Beth Hurt are very appealing. We can see what they love and hate in each other; and what we can't we can fill in with our own memories. Chilly Scenes touches on universal feelings. Charles can't give up a love he knows is doomed; we've all been there.

Chilly Scenes of Winter is marked by good performances. In addition to Heard and Hurt, Peter Riegert is funny as Heard's counterpart Dorothy Michaels. In both roles, Dustin Hoffman brings pathos, humor and insight to his performances. Neither he, not most of the supporting cast, could have been better. Of note are Jessica Lange, Teri Garr, Bill Murray, and Sidney Pollack, who also directed the film.

Honorable Mentions:

The Verdict — Sidney Lumet's character study of a down-and-out Boston lawyer had some spectacular elements of cinema: exciting camerawork, fine acting and an exhilarating and satisfying conclusion. Paul Newman's performance as the lawyer is his best in years and he is ably assisted by Jack Warden, James Mason and Milo O'Shea.

Fast Times at Ridgemont High — I can't tell you how much shit I received for reviewing this film positively, but Fast Times is really very good. It is funny, it is honest and it has a wonderful cast of characters. I felt close to these characters and I have remembered them long since, which is an achievement for any film. Standouts were Jennifer Jason Leigh as Stacy, Judge Reinhold as her brother Brad and Sean Penn as Spicoli. It's an impressive first effort by director Amy Heckerling.

The Thing — Again, this is a film largely disliked by the critics, but the rapport created between the film's dozen or so characters alone redeemed the film for me. John Carpenter smoothly directed the ensemble and created a moody and suspenseful atmosphere. The picture's gore also came under fire; but it fit the film perfectly. Anything less horrible or grotesque than the effects Rob Bottin came up with would not have been nearly as effective.

Another "small" film that made it big in 1982 was Chilly Scenes of Winter. Andy Gordon has chosen it as one of the season's best.

By JOHN HUDSON
Collegian Staff

Choosing the top 5 movies for 1982 is a little like choosing sides in a fight-you inevitably alienate some and enamor others. Neither a definitive list nor an exercise in futility, my choices reflect what I think to be the most enjoyable, intelligent, and entertaining movies of 1982. One note — at press time I did not have the opportunity to have seen Gandhi or The Verdict, two movies which showed up on numerous "best" lists.

Tootsie Every once in a while, all the elements involved in making a movie (director, screenwriter, actors, etc.) work so cohesively together, the final product reflects quality on all levels. Tootsie is such a movie. Dustin Hoffman, in one of his best film roles to date, takes a potentially one-joke movie (man in a dress) and turns it into a witty, farcical, yet intelligent examination of relations between the sexes and the problems encountered by successful woman in a male-dominated society. The screenplay written by Larry Gelbart (former Executive Producer of M★A★S★H) is tight, and sketches believable characters. Add to this Director Sidney Pollack's fast-paced, smooth direction and you've got a winner on all levels.

Diner With no large cast, a meager promotional campagin, and a dubious setting (Baltimore, Maryland), few gave this "small" movie a chance. Yet, because of these circumstances, Diner became one of the biggest surprises of the year. Director Barry Levinson examines the growing pains of five young men in early '50s America. Yet the film transcends these time constraints and intelligently examines the passage of youth in any time. The screenplay is especially noteworthy. Levinson perfectly captures "typical" conversations between "the boys" and uses this as the cornerstone of an anything but "typical" movie.

Still of the Night This taut psychological thriller directed by Robert Benton (Kramer vs. Kramer) is both a good movie in his own right and a homage to the Hitchcockian style. Whether you are a big Hitchcock fan or not, the film will keep you riveted until its, surprising, very suspenseful ending. The thing which really stands out in this above-average seat-squirmer, is the setting and its important role in dictating the tone for the entire film. Employing dimly-lit hallways, rainy nighttime exterior shots, and a foreboding dream sequence, Benton drenches the movie in a darkness which reflects the shadier side of human nature. If you've seen it, don't reveal the ending to anyone else. Also don't plan on walking home alone after this one, you never know who may be lurking in the shadows.

World According to Garp This is the movie that split the critics right down the middle in terms of its quality. Luckily, I hadn't read the book before seeing the movie as it seems so many critics had. Screenwriter Steve Tesich (Breaking Away) has taken this monolithic narrative and perfectly synthesized it for the screen. Unlike Popeye which cheated Robin Williams of a chance to showcase his immense talents, Garp allows Williams the opportunity to give his most sensitive performance of his short career. By the end of this amazingly fast-paced movie, the audience is a part of Garp, experiencing his growing pains, and finally getting literally blown away at the end of this draining film. Most probably, my favorite movie of 1982.

Das Boot Unlike other movies which attempt to manipulate an audience's phobias, Das Boot reaches for neither schlock nor shock to convey the feeling of claustrophobia in a German U-boat during World War II. While other war movies traditionally attempt to use patriotism, or a higher moralism to convey the tone of the story, Das Boot offers no winners, and no solutions. Rather, it concentrates on the idea of men within a situation under which they have little or no control. Add to this conflict the confining, tight quarters of a submarine and the oppressiveness of the ocean which protects, yet entraps it, and you've got claustrophobia. Taking this setting, the director, using low-camera angles, and small sets literally shrinks the size of the movie and brings the audience into the sheer terror of the situation. This one is probably the best foreign films of the year.

Dustin Hoffman brings pathos, humor, and insight to his leading role in Tootsie. John Hudson considers it one of the season's winners.

Gandhi* stars Ben Kingsley as one of the world's great men of peace. Another film which made it to Andy Gordon's "best of" list.

Women hoopsters travel to Maine

Eye second straight

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Sometimes it takes just one win to get the ball rolling and that is what the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team is counting on.

The Minutewomen played their best game to date, according to head coach Mary Ann Ozdarski, in Tuesday's win over Dartmouth.

The win snapped an eleven game losing streak for the young UMass team and Ozdarski hopes that will be the spark that Massachusetts has been lacking.

Tomorrow, the Minutewomen will trek up to Orono, Maine to take on the Black Bears of Maine for a 4:00 game.

To earn their second straight win, UMass will have to counter a speedy, guard oriented Maine team that features Kathy Nalson and Julia Treadwell in the backcourt.

"I feel that we have to stop their (Maine's) guards and we have to go inside with our inside game to win," said Ozdarski.

In a nutshell, UMass has to stop the Maine guards and go up and play a good game, themselves, to come home a winner.

UMass will have to do the things that they did against a very good Dartmouth team that gave UMass their fifth win of the season.

"We matured as a basketball team," said Ozdarski. "We had great individual performances before (the Dartmouth game) and we combined them with a great team effort."

The Minutewomen had four players in double figures for the first time in a long time. Kelly Collins had 10 points, Nadine Jackson 11 points, Karen Damminger 14 points, and Wendy Ward had 21 points in the big win.

The key to the contest was the play of Ward, the point guard who had six steals against Dartmouth. Ward took charge on the floor last Tuesday night. She provided the leadership that put UMass up and over the top.

The key to tomorrow afternoon's game will be the play of the team, which will have to be as impressive as it was against Dartmouth, and the travel time of a trip to Maine, which is often taken for granted.

The seven hour (one way) trip will be something for a young, freshman dominated team to contend with, but with the veteran leadership of Ward, it shouldn't be that much of a problem.

With a confident feeling, the Minutewomen will look for two in a row and win number six, hopefully courtesy of the University of Maine.

UM women swimmers face big test at UNH

By BOBBY BROCK
Collegian Staff

One of the elements of having a strong team in any sport, is the ability to bounce back and keep winning despite suffering a disappointing setback.

The University of Massachusetts women's swimming team has proven this to be true as they have added two more victories to their record after losing to a strong Boston College team, two weeks ago.

The Minutewomen easily defeated Northeastern and the University of Rhode Island recently to hike their seasonal mark to an impressive 9-1. They will take that record up to Durham, N.H. today to take on the University of New Hampshire.

Although UNH has a record of only 2-6, UMass coach Valerie Turtle warns that the mark is deceiving.

"They are strong in both the distance freestyle and distance butterfly and also since this is their last home meet, they will be fired up," said Turtle.

Turtle also pointed out that of New Hampshire's six defeats, two of them were one point losses and another was less than a ten point loss.

As far as UMass is concerned, Turtle feels that her swimmers are stronger in both individual medleys, the breastroke, and backstroke. She also feels that her team has a slight edge in both the front and back relays. The critical event will be the opening event, the 400-yard medley relay.

Despite a recent team bout with the flu and a shoulder injury to freshman Laurie Keen, the Minutewomen are coming into the meet in good shape.

As far as advantages go, UMass would have to be the favorite because of the impressive depth they possess. For UNH to win the meet, their lineup would have to be really good, according to Turtle.

"The meet will be determined on the lineup but our depth should help up out, we have more than they do," she added. "It (the meet) will be exciting, I wish it could be here."

Besides looking for their 10th win in 11 tries, the Minutewomen will be looking to improve their times and get as many people as possible qualified for the post-season championships. To date, they have qualified 18 out of the 23 members on the squad.

UM Zoo Disc is back

By SCOT COOPER
Collegian Staff

From the beginning of ultimate frisbee in 1968 at the Frisbee Pie Company in Connecticut, to the world championships in California, which included UMass ZooDisc, ultimate frisbee has become much more than just an idle way to pass the time.

Believe it or not ZooDisc is a top University team in the country, and one of the top teams in America.

"We're not just a bunch of hippies", said ZooDisc's Jimmy Melody, a junior International Relations major from Weymouth. Many players use the sport to keep in shape for other sports such as lacrosse, and to showcase their athletic prowness.

ZooDisc is a club team that is well traveled, according to Melody. In addition to playing college teams in Washington, D.C., Boston, and New York, they have journeyed to Santa Cruz to do battle with all-star club teams.

Ultimate frisbee features seven players on a football field, who advance the disc upfield by passing it to uncovered teammates. You can run without the frisbee, but must stop once you catch it. You can pivot, similar to basketball, while looking to make a pass. When a player gathers in a toss in the end zone it's worth one point. A team usually scores ten to fifteen points in a game.

Melody said ZooDisc will open their indoor training soon, and move outside as the weather dictates. Interested Ultimate players should watch the Collegian for training schedules.

UM women gymnasts host tri-meet

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team is flying high with an 8-1 record and will look to add two more wins on Saturday when they take on Springfield College and Air Force in a tri-meet.

The Minutewomen have not lost a meet since their opening invitational in which they were defeated by the University of New Hampshire. The women, who are ranked in the top six in the East, have scored 170 points in three of their last four meets and coach Ken Anderson said he hopes to get the team's scores a couple points higher the next week.

"I'm hoping to move into the low 170's," Anderson said. "I'm pushing for 172, 173, to boost up our regional scores and we have to get ourselves ready for UNH next week."

Tomorrow's meet is going to be an exciting one in which more than one event will be going on at the same time. Springfield is ranked in the top 20 schools of Division II in the nation. The team's top performers consist of Winnie Grimes, Allison Szubelick, and co-captains Karin Schulz and Joanie Carey.

Grimes finished second in the North East Regionals in all around competition last year and was first in floor exercises and second in balance beam. Szubelick competes all around with her strongest events being vault and uneven bar. Schulz excels in the uneven bar while Carey is a consistent performer in the balance beam and vault.

UMass, which defeated Springfield last year by almost four points, has two goals in mind for the next few weeks.

"We're trying to increase and improve our difficulty," Anderson said. "We hope to get some better qualifying scores for the Regional Championships and try to build ourselves up for New Hampshire."

Anderson is gradually inching top all around Tricia Harrity, who was out with an ankle injury, back into competition. Harrity may compete in two events on Saturday, according to Anderson, with hopes of having her in the all-around against UNH next week.

The Minutewomen have also been working on new and more difficult vaults. Lisa Griffen and Yael Kantor have been working to improve the difficulty of their vaults from full twists to full and a half twists.

Robin Low has been working at increasing the difficulty of her vault from a tsukhara in a piked position to a tsukhara in a layout position. Low is ranked in the top 10 in the East in all around competition.

Air Force will also be competing in tomorrow's meet. The team is ranked fifth in the nation and has a high score of 167.55. UMass knows little of the Colorado squad but Anderson said he is looking for some good competition from the team.

"They (Air Force) have been scoring pretty respectable lately and could give us a good meet," Anderson said.

The meet will be a close and exciting one as the three teams compete head to head for the top scores. The meet will start at 1:30 p.m., with the vaulting and balance beam events starting off the match.

UMass men swimmers lose to New Hampshire

By SCOTT HOOD
Collegian Staff

OK, OK so the meet came down to the final event and the bad guys won fair and square. So what?

The University of Massachusetts men's swimming team certainly does not have anything to be ashamed of as they put on a highly respectable performance in their down to the wire 59—54 loss to the University of New Hampshire Wednesday night at the Boyden Pool.

Entering the last race, the 400—yard freestyle relay, the Minuteman held a slim 54—52 advantage, but the Wildcats grabbed seven points and the meet as UNH won the race by a comfortable margin in 3:21.7

The UNH victory overshadowed a fine showing by the Minutemen's Phil Surrette, who won two events, setting personal bests in the process.

UMass gained the early 7—0 lead by virtue of the foursome of Mark Surrette, Tom Lowery, Brian Spellman, and Chris Porter emerging victorious in the 400 medley relay, in 3:42.50.

The advantage stretched to 13-3 as Brian Semle and Paul McNeil finished first and third respectively in the 1000 freestyle. Semle's winning time was 10:22.43.

UNH knocked the lead down to eight, 21—13, by virtue of a victory in the 50 freestyle in 22.37 seconds. But, UNH's gain was again held to the minimum as Spellman finished second and Steve Samuels ended up third for UMass.

Phill Surrette set one of his two aforementioned personal bests in the 200 individual medley with a time of 2:04.6. UNH captured second and third, thus creating the 26—17 score entering the diving.

Lowery captured second as UMass regained the lead, 54-42, setting up the UNH heroics in the climatic race.

The key race in the meet came immediately after the diving, in the form of the 200 butterfly. UNH captured first and second and picked up eight valuable points in the process. The Minutemen could only muster a third and, as a result, their lead shrank to 31—30.

UNH gained the lead for the first time at 40—39 with a victory in the 200 backstroke. The Wildcats then moved out to a 48—40 advantage by capturing their fifth straight event, the 500 freestyle in 4.57:70. UNH also gained second in the race.

Mullin won the three—meter diving, while Henry finished third, to cut the Wildcat lead to 51—46. Phil Surrette followed with the second of his personal bests in the 200 breaststroke in 2:18.32. Lowery captured second as UMass regained the lead, 54-42, setting up the UNH heroics in the climatic race.

"It's always disappointing to lose, but I&m still pleased with the way we swam," said UMass coach Russ Yarworth. "Our whole objective was to win the meet before the final event. But, they had the depth and we couldn't handle it. I didn't have any sprinters to save for the final relay."

The Minutemen, now 3—6, have a meet against Amherst College, next Thursday, Feb. 17. They also meet Central Connecticut on Feb. 19 before the New England Championships March 3—6.

Co-rec rules put women in the passenger seat

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

I can still remember the first time I ever played organized volleyball. It was an intramural match and after a teammate put the ball up in the air, I lept skyward, drilled the ball into the floor on the other side of the net, and thought to myself that this game was going to be fun.

Not so. You see, the point went to the team we were playing against. Why? Because I was playing co-rec volleyball of course.

Co—rec sports are the most anti—ERA plot to come about since Virginia Slims cigarettes. The rules are slanted in an effort to keep males from picking on females while games are going on.

I decided that I did not like having to alternate shots with someone just because they wore their clothes different than I did. No, I would never again play co-rec volleyball.

And, for the next couple of years, I never played on any other co-rec sports, until this past week.

This time around, the sport was co-rec basketball. Sounded like a pretty good time, guys and women (always use women when referring to members of the opposite sex in Amherst) having a good time together while playing some hoop.

In co—rec basketball however, the only people allowed to have a good time are the women. Men (not boys but men) are not allowed to enter into the bucket at either end of the floor. The lane is the ultimate no men's land. If you are so much as holding your arm over the sacred area while you are on defense, then the other team automatically gets a basket.

And the baskets are another matter. The 20—footer that men are forced to shoot (because going near the basket is a no no) are worth two points. Fair enough, you might say, until you notice that the women who has just shot for the third consecutive time from underneath and finally got the ball in, received three points. Yes, women get more points than men.

Imagine the frustration of standing, watching and waiting for someone(another one of those females) to get the ball in the hoop while you stand helplessly two feet away. And don't try to reach in or the hoop counts automatically.

What this reduces the male players to is chauffers. They drive the ball from one end of the floor to the other so that the females can play their game. When action stops at one end, another driver moves the ball to the other end. Great fun, eh?

If both sexes are going to play a game, then let's let both use their talents. Why have a game where you are discriminated against because your father contributed a Y chromosome to your existence?

Either that, or let's play it like a roller derby and send sexes in in shifts.

AUTHOR'S NOTE: Jim Floyd wouldn't mind the rules, but a guy with a mustache can't play in drag.

Sibson stepping in with Marvelous Marvin for the money

WORCESTER (AP) — Marvelous Marvin Hagler, who won the undisputed middleweight championship in London, will try to keep Tony Sibson from taking the title back to England on Friday night.

Hagler, of Brockton, Mass., is a solid favorite to win the sixth defense of the 160-pound class title he gained by stopping Alan Minter on Sept. 15, 1981.

In fact, Hagler already is scheduled to defend the title against Frank "The Animal" Fletcher on May 20 at Atlantic City, N.J., if he beats Sibson and Fletcher gets past Wilford Scypion on Sunday.

An upset would make Sibson, 24, of Leicester, the fifth Englishman to hold the middleweight championship.

Hagler, who has a 55-2-2 record, with 46 knockouts, will get $1.6 million for the scheduled 15-round bout at the sold out 13,577 seat Centrum.

"There is no other way in life for me to make this kind of money," said Sibson, the European middleweight champion whose purse will be $575,000. His record is 47-3-1, with 27 knockouts.

Storm disrupts weekend plans

By KEN BAZINET
Collegian Staff

A grueling northeaster dumped over a foot of snow on the Amherst area late Friday and early Saturday, closing several area businesses and putting a damper on weekend plans for students and residents.

Although eastern points of Massachusetts were crippled with as much as two feet of snow, the local accumulation was enough to declare a "Snow Emergency" at 9 p.m. by Amherst Town Manager Barry L. Del Castilho. The "Snow Emergency" was lifted at 6 p.m. on Saturday.

Both the Amherst and UMass police reported no storm related accidents or problems, with the UMass police calling the weekend "sedate."

Students fortunate enough to make it to bars or parties on Friday were able to travel main arteries where the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority (PVTA) buses ran for most of the night. However, the PVTA was not able to resume service until noon on Saturday.

Peter Pan Bus lines kept their Amherst to Springfield route operating Friday night, but said buses ran sporadically until 3 p.m. on Saturday.

Blues guitarist J. B. Hutto was scheduled to play the Blue Wail on Saturday night, but was postponed. A new date is being negotiated with Hutto today. The Blue Wall remained open, however, and patrons were treated to free movies while they sipped their beer.

Other cancellations Saturday night included the men's basketball team, which was scheduled to play at West Virginia and the women's gymnastics team, which was scheduled to face Springfield College and the Air Force Academy here. The basketball game has been rescheduled until tonight, and a date for the gymnastics meet has not yet been named.

Hampshire Mall shoppers found businesses and shops closed all day Saturday, but movie goers were able to attend both the Hampshire Four Theatres and the Mountain Farms Theater.

Race for SGA presidency is off and running

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Correspondent

Two candidacies were initiated last week in the race for Student Government Association (SGA) president, while candidates for positions on the Campus Center Board of Governors (BOG) and the Residential Committee also began filing nomination papers.

Tom Ahern, a sophomore pre-education major and Charlene Allen, a junior English major, were the first pair to sign out nomination papers. Siobhan Powers a junior English major and Fran Hegeler, a sophomore political science major, became the second pair in the race for the presidency. All four candidates are currently members of the Undergraduate Student Senate.

Only four people have signed out nomination papers for the 20 elected positions on the Campus Center Board of Governors, and only one candidate has signed out papers for the seven member Residential Committee.

Nomination papers have been available since Monday, Feb. 7, and must be returned notarized by 3 p.m. Friday, Feb. 18, if the candidates wish to appear on the ballot for the SGA spring elections and receive campaign funds from from these funds, but if more than 6 candidates file nomination papers, $1500 is divided evenly among them, according to the SGA constitution.
according to the SGA constitution.

Elections will be held March 7 and 8. If no presidential candidacy receives one-third of the vote, a runoff election will be held later that month. The SGA President takes office April 1.

Howard Breslan of Southwest Residential College, Timmi W. Rudolph of Central Residential Area, and Paige Fernandes and Paul Agranat, both commuters, have signed out nomination papers for the Campus Center Board of Governors (BOG).

Janet Lannan of Central is the only candidate to sign out nomination papers for the Residential Committee so far. Residential Committee members are elected from each residence area on campus.

The Residential Committee is "more important to undergraduates living on campus than the BOG is," said Mindy Ordway, election coordinator.

Ordway said she is distressed by the lack of Residential Committee candidates so far, because the committee, which deals primarily with residence hall contracts and policy, "really hasn't been seated until this year."

Herpes still festering at UMass

By TURA GUDMUNDSSON
Collegian Correspondent

Editor's note: This is the first of a five part series dealing with herpes that will appear this week in the Collegian.

Although the national uproar over herpes has died down lately, state and local officials and students at the University of Massachusetts are still voicing much concern over the issue.

The consensus of those interviewed is that the issue of herpes has been sensationalized by the media. Despite this opinion, UMass officials report that there has been an increase in the number of herpes cases reported here.

This series will attempt to draw a correlation between the increase in herpes cases reported at the University and students' sexual behavior pattern. This series will also consider why herpes is not, under present state law, a disease that must be reported to the Department of Public Health.

According to Barry Averill, executive director of the UMass Health Services, there has been a steady increase in the last four years of herpes-related visits to the Health Services, with more than 200 such visits from July, 1981 to June 1982.

Averill said the increase is not alarming, however, and that herpes is "not as rampant on this campus as the media would lead people to think."

"Herpes might be considered an epidemic on a national level, said Averill, but it is not considered as such on this campus.

While the exact number of herpes cases on campus and nation-wide remains unknown, local and state officials who deal directly with herpes management or treatment agreed the increase in herpes cases is directly related to an increase in sexual relationships with multiple partners.

Those officials disagreed, however, on whether a University environment and students' sexual behavior patterns could be inducive to spreading the disease on campuses.

A viral Venereal Disease, herpes is not curable and once caught settles in the person's central nervous system for life. For unknown reasons, reoccurances of the disease can take place, making it infectious each time for a limited time period.

The rise in herpes cases in the United States has been publicized by the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta, which estimated that 20 million Americans have the disease today. The media's often sensational handling of herpes has created widespread concern over the issue.

Meanwhile, at UMass, 100 to 150 of the estimated 74,000 annual visits to the Health Services clinic between July, 1978 and June, 1979 were related to herpes. Similar visits reached 200 to 300 for the 81-82 year, with a steady increase in between, Averill said.

While the exact number of herpes patients is unknown since no such data is compiled by Health Services, the possible maximum number of reported cases at UMass, based on the given range of herpes related visits in the 81-82 year, is 300.

But, according to Averill, the estimated figure is more likely to be around 200, as the number 300 represents total estimated visits, and some herpes patients come to the clinic more than once per year.

Although Averill noted that there has been an increase in the number of genital herpes cases seen at the clinic, the estimated figure of 200 cases includes both genital and cold sore related herpes.

Both types of herpes are diagnosed and classified at the clinic under the heading of herpes simplex diseases, for it is known today that one localized type of herpes can lead to the other. For example, herpes expressed as cold sores on the lips may become genital herpes through oral-genital sex.

"We are not talking about a huge number of people," Averill said, "and we are dealing with an educated population who tries to prevent it, get it treated and cut down the spread."

Polish police disperse protest

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Several hundred police, lobbing tear gas grenades and flailing rubber batons, dispersed more than 2,000 people demonstrating last night outside a church for the outlawed Solidarity labor union. It was the largest protest demonstration in Poland in three months.

Between 200 and 300 police moved into position outside Holy Cross Church in downtown Warsaw as a commemorative Mass ended for Solidarity members who had been interned after martial law was imposed Dec. 13, 1981.

A crowd estimated at between 2,000 and 3,000 moved into the street, singing pro-Solidarity songs and chanting "Down with the junta!" and "Leszek!" the nickname of Solidarity union chief Lech Walesa.

Sharon resigns; Cabinet to name Begin acting minister

JERUSALEM (AP) — The Israeli Cabinet accepted Ariel Sharon's resignation as defense minister yesterday but retained him as a minister without portfolio, prompting opposition charges that the decision defied the Beirut massacre commission's recommendations.

Prime Minister Menachem Begin will take over the Defense Ministry temporarily after Israel's Parliament, the Knesset, approves the reshuffle today or tomorrow, Cabinet Secretary Dan Meridor announced.

Cabinet ministers belonging to the factions in Begin's ruling coalition said that keeping Sharon in the Cabinet avoided the need for early elections.

But opposition parties protested that the reshuffle of portfolios disregarded the inquiry commission's intention that Sharon leave the Cabinet. The small Communist Party submitted a no-confidence motion to be debated this week, but the government is expected to defeat it.

The Labor Party, the largest opposition group, said it might organize public demonstrations to put "moral pressure" on the government to fire Sharon.

The inquiry commission charged Sharon with personal responsibility for failing to foresee a massacre when he ordered Lebanese Christian militiamen to mop up Palestinian resistance in Beirut's Sabra and Chatilla refugee camps last Sept. 16-18. It suggested he resign or be fired.

Sharon gave Begin his resignation after the Cabinet decided last week, after three emergency meetings, to adopt all the recommendations of the Kahan Commission, named after Supreme Court President Yitzhak Kahan who headed the four-month investigation.

Cabinet ministers said Begin wanted to replace Sharon with Moshe Arens, Israel's ambassador in Washington, but needed time to arrange this transition with his coalition partners.

The Cabinet now has 19 ministers: eight from Herut, five Liberals and six from other parties in the coalition.

Sharon's resignation was a paralyzing setback to the career of the flamboyant ex-general. But he has bounced back before when he was passed over for jobs as chief of staff and as defense minister, and aides say Sharon still wants Israel's top job once Begin retires.

A strong backlash of sympathy for Sharon has swept across Israel, though no polls have been taken to test his popularity since the Kahan report came out. Demonstrators have taken to the streets with the motto, "Sharon, the people are with you."

Other protesters have rallied in Jerusalem and Tel Aviv to demand his resignation. The protests turned violent last week when a grenade killed an Israeli demonstrating against Sharon.

Reagan administration officials have blamed Sharon for what they consider Israel's tough negotiation stance regarding withdrawal from Lebanon and refusal to stop Jewish settlements in the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River.

As minister without portfolio, Sharon is available to Begin for special tasks, presumably including assignments that deal with Lebanon or the West Bank.

Dukakis sees liberalism still thriving in Mass.

BOSTON — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis says governors across the country are fed up with President Reagan's new federalism and liberalism is very much alive in Massachusetts despite shrinking resources.

"I sense among the governors of both parties that enough is enough, and that all of us, the state and federal governments combined, have got to provide some leadership and get us out of this economic rut," Dukakis said in an interview.

He said that despite the nation's economic problems, there is no need to eliminate the liberal social theories that led to an explosion of new programs in the 1960s.

"On the contrary," Dukakis said. "I think our romance with Hooverism is over.

"What you're going to see in the Congress is a very strong effort to stimulate this economy and get people back to work. I don't agree with the philosophy that says it's okay to pay people unemployment compensation but that taking that same money and creating useful jobs for those people is inappropriate."

Hinckley stable after third suicide attempt

WASHINGTON — John W. Hinckley Jr., found innocent by reason of insanity of shooting President Reagan, was hospitalized in serious condition yesterday after an apparent suicide attempt, authorities said.

Hinckley, connected to a respirator, may be in danger of dying, but "he is stable and we believe he'll be all right," said Dr. James Levy, president of Greater Southeast Community Hospital, where Hinckley was taken. "We will not be able to tell you for certainty for the next 24 to 48 hours whether he's out of the woods."

The incident was at least the third apparent suicide attempt by Hinckley since he shot and wounded the president and three other men outside the Washington Hilton Hotel in March 1981.

Hinckley, 27, was found semi-conscious at about 8:30 a.m. Sunday on the floor of his room at St. Elizabeth's Hospital, where he has been in indefinite confinement since last year's trial, said Wayne Pines, a spokesman for St. Elizabeths. Cardio-pulminary resuscitation and oxygen were administered.

Nazi criminal wants world to forget past

PARIS — Nazi war criminal Klaus Barbie, known as the "Butcher of Lyon," said in a television interview aired yesterday that he has forgotten his past and the rest of the world should forget it too.

Barbie, head of the Gestapo in Lyon from 1942 to 1944, said he was only doing his job when he fought the French resistance. He is accused of executing 4,000 people, torturing thousands more and deporting 7,500 French Jews to concentration camps.

For those crimes, he was sentenced to death twice by French courts in absentia. He was expelled Feb. 5 from Bolivia, where he hid for years, and France has charged him under a new law for "crimes against humanity." The death penalty has been abolished, and Barbie faces a possible life sentence if convicted again.

He was transferred late Saturday from the Fort Montluc Prison in Lyon to Saint Joseph Prison for security reasons. French authorities say it will take up to one year for prosecutors to prepare their case against Barbie.

Love nest possible abode for Irish racer

DUBLIN, Ireland — The gunmen who snatched the racing stallion Shergar probably have him in a "secret love nest" where they hope to mate him with selected mares and breed valuable Irish racehorses, a London newspaper reported yesterday.

But police said they had no new leads to report in the hunt for the double-derby winner, and were increasingly fearful the horse died since he was stolen Tuesday from the Aga Khan's Ballymany stud farm in Newbridge, County Kildare.

The Sunday People tabloid quoted breeders in Dublin as saying a spate of ransom calls and false tips about the missing champion could be a delaying tactic, rigged by the rustlers to gain time while Shergar mates with "a batch of carefully chosen mares."

Cooke prints first story since heroin fiction

WASHINGTON — Former Washington Post reporter Janet Cooke, stripped of a Pulitzer prize two years ago for representing fiction as fact, is in print again with her first article since the 1981 incident which led to her forced resignation from the newspaper.

In the February issue of Washingtonian magazine, Miss Cooke describes Washington dating services in a story entitled "Searching for Someone Special." The article begins with quoted experiences of a woman who is not fully identified. "We'll call her Samantha," the story begins.

Miss Cooke's story in the Post about an 8-year-old heroin addict won her a Pulitzer Prize which was taken from her when it was revealed that the youth, identified only as Jimmy, did not exist.

Washingtonian editor John A. Limpert said he did not check whether Miss Cooke's unnamed sources in the dating service article existed because the story was considered entertainment. "The anonymity didn't bother us," he said.

Miss Cooke's agent Audrey Wolf said the subjects do exist. After two years of trauma that followed the Pulitzer episode, "I don't think she'd ever do that again," Ms. Wolf said.

Fire-safe cigarettes sought by coalition

WASHINGTON — The fire in cigarettes must be put out to prevent further deaths, injuries and property damage, says an informal coalition of congressmen, medical officials and consumer groups.

Despite the intense objections of the tobacco industry, the coalition is seeking legislation, both at the federal and state level, that would bar the sale of cigarettes that burn long enough or hot enough to ignite upholstered furniture of mattresses.

Cigarettes are the cause of more than one-third of all fire deaths, according to the U.S. Fire Administration. In 1981, cigarettes and other smoking materials ignited 63,518 homes, caused $305 million in property damage, injured 3,819 people and killed 2,144 others.

"I am trying to get cigarettes that are less combustible, that don't start fires when disposed of carelessly on furniture or a mattress," said Rep. Joe Moakley, D-Mass. "I just think that an industry that puts such products on the market has the responsibility to guard against any loss of life or injury."

Moakley is sponsoring legislation that would give the Consumer Product Safety Commission 24 months to develop a standard for a fire-safe cigarette. Similar legislation is being sponsored in the Senate by Alan Cranston, D-Calif.

Since current law prohibits the commission from studying cigarettes as a potential hazardous product, it is concentrating on developing a voluntary standard to decrease the flammability of upholstered furniture.

Escort service may resume if credits offered

By LISA PEDULLA
Collegian Staff

If the incentive of academic credits is not made available to escorts, the Student Government Association (SGA) Escort Service will not run again this semester, according to its coordinator.

The Escort Service is a student-run program which was operated last year by the SGA President's Office. It offered students escorts from dormitories to bus stops and libraries, from 7 p.m. to 12 p.m. Sunday through Thursday nights.

Ann Maynard, co-coordinator of the service, said the service had only 10 to 15 new people apply last semester and the service therefore could not get running.

Maynard said a proposal to allow escorts to get credit again this semester was rejected by the executive board of the Division of Education of the University of Massachusetts because it did not feel the motion was worthwhile. The proposal was then resubmitted to Joanne Jones, the coordinator for the board's educational division. Maynard said if the proposal for credits goes through, the service could get started within the next two weeks.

"Last year we had over 110 people," Maynard said. "Most of them were not crazy about the two credit course, but most students need the incentive of the two credits to walk."

She said a poll was taken and a list of future seminars has been developed, dealing with more concrete student issues.

Although Maynard had previously blamed the Board of Governors (BOG) for not allocating adequate office space for the service, she has now said she is satisfied with the space the BOG has provided.

The BOG said they would look for better space for the service, Maynard said. "We are now sharing the space with only five groups instead of six, because one group was moved out," she said.

The Escort Service has received $2,000 in funding for the year from the Chancellor's Office.

"The money is still there, we have not spent any of it," Maynard said. "If we can get the credits and offer them to students, we can start going."

Student candidacy for Town Meeting urged

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

As residents of Amherst, many University of Massachusetts students may become involved in town government.

Ten Town Meeting members will be elected in each of Amherst's eight precincts in the town's April 5 election. Any student registered to vote in Amherst is eligible to run for the three-year positions.

"Students make up a high percentage of the people in Amherst and (they) don't have a voice," said Mitch Gaslin, a UMass student and Town Meeting member.

Gaslin is the chair of the Rents and Fees Committee of the UMass Undergraduate Student Senate, and was elected to Town Meeting last year.

"Town policy affects students to a great extent," and they should be represented in these issues, he said.

Although the Town Meeting has 240 members, currently only six to eight of those members are students, Gaslin said.

"If the students don't (run), then that leaves the burden of representing Precinct 3 (a zone mainly composed of dormitories) to a small number of members," said Mary Wentworth, a town meeting member seeking re-election this spring.

Wentworth is the coordinator of the Poor Women's Task Force at the Everywoman's Center at UMass. A vocal advocate of rent control and nuclear disarmament, Wentworth last November challenged U.S. Rep. Silvo Conte, R-Pittsfield, for his seat in the House of Representatives.

"Having students in Town Meeting lessens tensions between the town (and the University)," she added.

Eric Nitzsche, a resident of Brittany Manor Apartments, is one candidate who said he is running because of his concern about rent control.

"Rent control failed by 15 votes last year," he said. "I believe in student empowerment — it's possible for us to take over Town Meeting. We should have won last year's rent control issue."

Nitzsche, though involved in the Student Government Association at UMass, does not feel a political background is necessary for candidacy.

"It's more a willingness to take part in the process and study the issues," he said.

Issues concerning students that were discussed at last year's meeting include rent control legislation, childcare services and zoning laws, Wentworth said. National issues such as military draft registration and nuclear disarmament are also debated at meetings, she said, with recommendations then made to the Board of Selectmen, who determine what course of action should be taken considering the town's position.

The precise agenda for the spring meeting, which begins May 2, will not be available until March 18, when the warrant is passed by the Board of Selectmen, Town Clerk Estelle Matusko said.

Nomination papers for prospective Town Meeting members can be picked up at the Town Clerk's Office at the Amherst Town Hall Monday through Friday, between 8 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. Ten signatures from voters in the candidate's precinct are required on the forms.

Core requirement system re-evaluated by University

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

Editor's Note: This is the first in a series of articles on the General Education proposal which will be presented in the Collegian.

The General Education proposal that would replace the present distribution requirement ("core") system has been debated by students and faculty at the University of Massachusetts for two years.

The history of the current proposal goes back to May, 1981. At that time the Faculty Senate established an Ad Hoc Committee on General Education. According to a report released by the senate, the committee was designed to "study and evaluate the present undergraduate curriculum."

In May, 1982, the Ad Hoc Committee presented its first proposal to the senate. That proposal addressed the problems of general education at UMass.

The proposal stated that the current core distribution system at UMass "both reflects and incites demoralization." Citing a lack of coherence and rationale behind the current system, the committee recommended a change in the distribution requirements.

While the Ad Hoc Committee was tackling the problems of the current system, the Undergraduate Student Senate created its own committee on General Education in the fall of 1981.

At first, the student committee tried to formulate its own proposal. The committee realized, however, that it was too great a task, according to Ellen Nylen, a student task force coordinator.

Then, Nylen said, the students tried to formulate "a set of principles that (they) thought should be the basis for any curriculum that might come about."

The student committee's findings were similar to those of the faculty Ad Hoc committee, terming the present core system a "failure."

The core system "was a reaction to a curriculum that had been really rigid," Nylen said, 'and all through the 60s people were crying out for freedom to choose their own courses."

Both the student committee and the faculty Ad Hoc Committee reports agreed that freedom in selecting core requirements went too far. Both groups have cited the lack of reasoning behind the core system as its major failure.

"Courses have to have a rationale; there has to be an explanation for having them," Nylen said.

PVTA bus flaw requires $750,000 design change

By PAUL DESMOND
Collegian Correspondent

The Pioneer Valley Transit Authority (PVTA) is expected to spend about $750,000 over the next two years to correct a design flaw on 125 of its buses.

"It's a move to save money," said Stephen Gazillo, assistant to the PVTA administrator, who expected the PVTA to save about $2 million in future engine repairs.

The 125 buses involved were designed with air conditioning condensors placed in the engine compartment next to the engine's radiator, explained Gazillo. In this position, the condensors collect large amounts of dirt.

If not cleaned twice per year, the clogged condensors can cause frequent overheating, Gazillo said.

"There is nothing actually wrong," Gazillo said. "The buses are running. It will be cheaper over time to convert, rather than clean them twice a year."

What will be done, according to Gazillo, is that a new rear engine cover will be put on the rear of the bus. This will change the design of the rear from a slope-backed to a straight cover, and will allow the condensor to sit above the engine, away from the radiator.

The General Motors Corporation, from which PVTA purchased the buses in 1977, cannot be held responsible for the flaw, Gazillo said.

Each bus may be fixed in about two days by PVTA mechanics, Gazillo said. The first 23 buses should be fixed by spring or summer "at the latest," he said.

Counseling Collective will hold orientation

The Lesbian and Gay Men's Counselling Collective will hold an orientation session for those interested in joining the collective at 7 tonight in Room 903 of the Campus Center.

The Counselling Collective is a group of lesbians and gay men trained and supervised by a professional psychologist. The collective does free counselling and referrals for lesbians and gay men and for their friends, family, roommates, Residential Assistants and others who want to speak with a lesbian or gay man.

An informational telephone line offering information on local lesbian and gay men's events can be reached at 545-0684.

Anyone interested in talking to members of the Counselling Collective can visit their office, 433 Student Union Building, from 4-6 p.m., weekdays except Wednesday, or call 545-2645.

State school collaborative to recruit volunteers

The Boltwood Project, a volunteer program at Belchertown State School, will be holding an informational meeting at 7 p.m., Feb. 14, Feb. 17, and Feb. 23 in Room 804 of the Campus Center.

The Project works as a collaborative between the Five College area and the state school. A variety of programs are offered, including the rehabilitation and recreation of the mentally retarded in western Massachusetts.

The programs will provide participants with valuable and marketable experience in many areas. Academic credit is available. The program will also provide the participant with the components for certain courses which require field practicums.

The program is offered on several nights of the week and transportation is provided.

National companies to attend co-op job fair

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

Cooperative education coordinators at the University of Massachusetts, "very much enthused" for the program's success here, will hold their first annual Job and Career Fair Thursday.

A program through which more than 1,000 U.S. colleges have given their students career preparation and financial assistance, cooperative education has been placing students in curriculum-related jobs at schools like Northeastern University in Boston since the turn of the century.

Federal funding for the program, established in the 1960s after growing successes with co-ops, was obtained last year by UMass.

"We're just opening up one (more) avenue," Project Coordinator Joan Stoia said in reviewing the ground work and feasibility studies completed during the Office of Cooperative Education's first year.

About 200 students are currently enrolled in the program, she said, and with 13 firms and government agencies planning to attend this week's job fair, 35 students per day have been visiting her office.

"We were mobbed this week," Stoia said. "It was wonderful."

Businesses planning to send representatives to Thursday's meeting include IBM, MITRE Corporation, the U.S. Department of Transportation, Sweet Life Foods, and Walt Disney World, which already employs UMass students through the program.

Stoia stressed, however, that the job fair is not planned as a hiring session, but is instead designed "to introduce students to employers in the event that when they do have openings, students will understand the firm and agency better."

The federal government granted the University approximately $70,000, or about 65 percent of the total administrative costs, for each of the co-op program's first two years, according to the office. The proposal was written by Professor James Leheny of the English department, who was assisted by Ellen Wolf, director of the Office of Internships.

The co-op program is a "minimal investment considering how much students benefit from it," said Wolf. She said she not only saw co-ops representing no conflict with her office, but instead worked to establish the program "because I wanted students to have another chance to get good professional experience and training."

Beyond considering the trade-off of money for a co-op versus college credits for an internship, Stoia said a co-op has the additional advantage of being a more continuous experience — a student is often rehired for a second co-op or given a job at the company after graduation.

As an example, Stoia said the federal government's freeze on hiring is not only exempted by co-ops, but also allows government agencies to hire their co-op students after graduation.

Wolf praised the federal government's past support of co-ops, calling it a type of "financial aid plan," while Stoia, claiming "the Reagan Administration is certainly de-emphasizing anything to do with education," awaits its decision in spring on third year funding of the program at UMass.

Student Senate to hold fee review for students

By BILL WALL
Collegian Staff

Students who are concerned about the proposed student fee increases for next year will today and tomorrow have the opportunity to participate in a student run review of the budget requests made by such departments as Housing and Food Services.

The fee review is being conducted by the Rents and Fees Committee of the Undergraduate Student Senate as part of the process through which budget requests are channeled. The fee review is an officially recognized part of the Trust Fund Management Policy approved last week by the UMass Board of Trustees and is designed to incorporate student input into the budget process.

The fee increases for next year will be at least $65 due to the implementation of the "full-costing" concept approved last week by the Trustees, wherein each of the fee-based trust funds, such as the Campus Center or Housing Services, is required to pay its share of central costs, including accounting services rendered by the University.

The fee review will be conducted tonight at 7 in Rm. 101 of the Campus Center and tomorrow at 7 p.m. in Rm. 804. Representatives from the various trust funds will be present to answer student questions concerning the individual departmental budget, said Mitch Gaslin, chair of the committee.

"We have a number of people from this committee who reviewed the budgets and fee requests during intersession who will ask questions about the budgets," Gaslin said. "It's an open hearing on the different fees, and students who come down will be able to ask questions."

Gaslin said the committee gives recommendations on the budget which have to be approved by the undergraduate senate. The budget with the recommendations goes to the vice-chancellors for their perusal, and to the Board of Trustees for final approval, Gaslin said.

Renewed hope and lots of red roses

I once heard a Coffee Shop philosopher say, "Valentine's Day is the same as any other holiday, only different."

Different indeed. It arrives every February, when most people are just beginning to crawl out of the financial and spiritual wreckage that has come to be known as "Christmas." By this time hibernation has become boring, and schoolbooks are not quite strong enough to lift the soul from its dark groundhog burrow. So we look forward to an early spring, blizzards notwithstanding, because there's no better reason to crawl out of the woodwork than the prospect of love.

Steve Masse

Valentine's Day — just what the doctor ordered. According to the wise sages who write health articles and sell vitamin E, people who sport about in winter usually have good health and good spirits, and are well disposed to enjoy a robust, if not downright Playboy/Cosmopolitan lifestyle.

Last February I decided to heed this healthful advice. I resurrected my cross country skis and practiced up on my macho ski image. It was time to dust off my own romantic cobwebs, and finally ask the girl of my dreams for a ski date. Up until that time, my unrequited love had grown deeper with each bus ride (if only she knew). I had to do something, because time was running out and I wanted more than a white rose Valentine's Day. I wanted a red rose day, with her.

The day before Valentine's Day, I saw her on the bus. She was sitting next to her knapsack, beautiful as ever. Instead of just passing her and saying a feeble "hi" as usual, and being ashamed that my eyes were doing a lot more helloing than my stammering jaw was, I decided to stand firm for once. I was going to ask her.

"How's everything?" I smiled.

"Good."

"Been studying a lot?"

"No." She yawned.

I could see she was thrilled to have me there. But I wasn't about to let this opportunity pass. I asked her to join me on a cross country jaunt.

"Today?"

"No, tomorrow."

"That's Valentine's Day."

"Right. I guess it is."

I fully expected her to say no, but instead, she looked at me half in doubt and half in what I took to be anticipation, and said, "Well, I haven't been skiing much this year. I guess I could use the exercise. I haven't got anything else planned."

At best it was a white rose acceptance, but I was hoping to change the color to at least pink by the next evening. She lifted her knapsack off the empty bus seat and I sat next to her, though I wasn't sure whether she lifted the knapsack for me to sit there, or for her to look into it — because she rummaged out a notebook and browsed through it intermittently for the rest of the ride back to our apartment complex.

To make a long story even longer, we went skiing. I was on a cloud, because it was Valentine's Day and finally, miraculously, I had her with me, all to myself, both of us together.

Neither one of us were pros. We plodded through the golf course making small talk. Very small talk. In fact, not enough talk. Then while I was humming to myself, "Take that first step, ask her out and treat her like a lady," I caught my scarf in some branches and nearly strangled to death. She was ahead of me and didn't see, so she didn't come to my rescue with the cooing ministrations of love and tenderness that I sorely wanted, but instead asked me when I caught up with her, "Are you cold? Your neck is all red."

Soon the sunset sky cast an orange luster over the golf course. "We probably ought to head back," she said.

"Why don't we have supper together?" I asked.

"No — that's okay. I have a lot of studying to do."

"I see. You don't eat when you have to study."

She didn't laugh, or even smile. My white rose was dead, run over by a pair of skis.

That night I had a dream. I was skiing through the sunset with her, and we were talking and joking, and just as the sunset became twilight, I stole a kiss.

She fell over. I fell over too, on purpose, for I was sure she had fallen on purpose as a playful exaggeration. Such theatrics, I thought, glowing. We're a great pair.

I unhitched my skis, laughing, and kissed her again. Then I said, "Whisper to me three little words that will make me walk on air." And she whispered, "Go hang yourself."

This year, Valentine's Day is going to be much nicer. I have renewed hope, and plenty of roses. (Cupid, where are you?)

A question of professionalism

It is with much feeling that I respond to the recent articles and letters regarding our (myself and Prof. Wilce) participation in scientific meetings in South Africa this past January. Our attendance was not a political statement, and the implications in John Howley's letter to the editor (Feb. 11, 1983) to this effect were quite disturbing. His statement of our support of racism is a straight out lie. Clearly he used us as a platform to promulgate his own ideas.

Professor Wilce and I were invited by internationally recognized South African marine scientists to present 2 papers concerning our current research. We attended two scientific conferences, one national (others from the U.S. and Britain were also present), as well as an international symposium where more than 20 countries were represented (such as Italy, Belgium, U.S.A., Sri Lanka, Scotland, Austria, West Germany, Namibia. Australia, Canada, Transkei, Chile, Venezuela, Israel, United Kingdom, France, Portugal, Spain, Brazil, and South Africa), and included 15 scientists from universities in the United States.

My reasons for going to South Africa were purely scientific and professional. I went to educate and be educated in science. For me, attending meetings in South Africa in no way lent support, directly or indirectly, to the South African government or its policies. What I did support was the advancement of science in my field at the international level, regardless of geographical location. The advancement of science depends greatly on international communication, and it is as important to ignore political and nationalistic barriers in the sciences as it is in the arts. The scientific community is an international community with no geographical boundaries; the pursuit of scientific knowledge must not be directed by political pressures.

Does my living in this country mean I support all policies of our government such as draft registration, military spending, nuclear power, or even the Bottle Bill? Is a scientist visiting and studying in this country from abroad making a political statement of support for our government and its policies? Obviously, no. It was with much shock when I returned home to learn of the events in Cicero, Illinois (Re: Time Magazine, February 7, 1983). Such blatant racism in our own backyard! Does the fact that I live in the same country, or even state, mean that I support and contribute to these attitudes? Again, no. Similarly, attendance at a scientific meeting lends no support to the politics of the geographical barriers one is within.

I've always known, and felt strongly about, where I stand on the issue of racism. I abhor it just as much where it is legislated (South Africa) as where it is not, yet no less blatant, such as the South in the past decades and, even where it still exists today in this country. Just look around.

In light of my personal views, John Howley's accusation that I was "attempting to ingratiate [myself] with the racist regime" contains no truth. To "ingratiate" means "bringing oneself into anothers favor by concious effort." This notion that I went to South Africa to gain favor with the government is utterly ridiculous. I have no wish, nor need, to be ingratiated with the South African government.

Finally, there is one other disturbing idea in John Howley's letter. He asks that the university community "censure" Prof. Wilce for his actions. I ask, what ever happened to the idea of individual freedom? Should an individual's freedom and goals be subordinated to those of a group? Not in this country. Yet Howley is asking for censure of an individual for a choice he made, a free choice which we all have in this country. By this, Howley is promoting the very thing he accuses us of. Here he is supporting oppression himself — suppression of an individual's freedom of choice.

Student clarifies statement

To the Editor:

I was quoted in Wednesday's Collegian as saying that Robert Wilce's trip to South Africa was "a slap in the face to civility and education at UMass."

I would like to clarify this statement by saying that I believe it is UMass' financial support for professional collaboration with South African institutions that runs counter to the aims of Civility Education at UMass, which is based on religious, racial, and sexual equality. My intent in initiating this open forum with Dr. Wilce was to give concerned students and members of the UMass community a chance to gather information and discuss this issue.

Loss of Bear Bryant mourned

To the Editor:

We are writing in regard to the article by Elliot Kalb, in his February 1st sports recap.

Mr. Kalb, being a human being and a sportswriter no less, your statement, "The only Bears I ever loved were named Yogi and Boo Boo," boggles our minds. What the hell kind of remark is that? Whether you loved him or not, is not the question. He died Elliot...have some compassion. Is your heart frozen? You're not talking about losing a bet or making a joke out of an uncharacteristically dismal Bryant coached team. You're talking about the death of Paul "Bear" Bryant, the winningest coach in college football history. He touched more lives in 69 years of existance than a UMASS student impersonating as a sportswriter could shake a stick at.

Obviously if we wanted what Mr. Kalb calls an "intelligent opinion" on January's sport happenings we would ask someone with intelligence. Check yourself Elliot!

Our deepest sympathy to the family of Coach Bear Bryant.

Amherst cable channel will feature area news, talk show with UMass dean

By ELLEN RYDER
Collegian Staff

Inspired by the Amherst area's unique personality, a new cable television channel is preparing to serve its viewers.

Amherst's Center for Community Access Television (CCATV) promises to be a hodgepodge of news, entertainment, and culture, according to Program Director Carol Kowalski. Currently in production are a children's show, an Amherst news program and "The Dean's Corner," a talk show featuring Dean Mario Fantini of the University of Massachusetts School of Education.

Kowalski has been director of CCATV since December and has the distinction of being the center's first full-time paid employee.

"I have lots of plans," Kowalski said. "We have two goals: to program channel 3 (CCATV), and to train volunteers (in communications)."

Kowalski cites the upcoming Amherst news program as having special importance to area students.

"When students are only living in town for four years or less, they may want to get a pulse on the town," she said.

"We want to aim our programming at as many specialized viewers as possible," the 23-year-old Clark University graduate said. "The first few programs will be directed toward students."

Kowalski said she feels "The Deans Corner" will have a broad audience because of the large student population in the area. Fantini will have local figures and national celebrities as guests. The program, which will be produced by Irene Starr, will center on student issues and interests.

In addition to programming, CCATV also said it welcomes and trains interns and volunteers. Depending on their interests, volunteers are trained to operate television equipment and to work on a crew, Kowalski said. To develop facility with equipment, volunteers are sent on "practice shoots" and later allowed to do actual filming.

"I hope to have more advanced volunteers learn editing, directing, and producing," Kowalski said.

Noting the abundance of strong, specialized groups in the Pioneer Valley, Kowalski said CCATV can be an outlet for groups with no audience elsewhere.

"In public access programming, there is more freedom," she said. "As long as (the program) is decent, we can air it. Amherst is a very good climate for an access studio."

Kowalski said she was surprised at the lack of volunteers and interns from the University of Massachusetts.

"There will be training opportunities, and UMass students qualify to be trained," she said. "I have one senior intern from UMass... I'm surprised that he's the only one so far. Communications majors can especially benefit."

An emotional film with an unrealistic plot

WITHOUT A TRACE
Hampshire 4 Theaters

By ELAINE SENAY
Collegian Staff

While Stanley Jaffe's Without A Trace can be called a good tearjerker, the film fails as a whole because the plot seems unrealistic. The ending is too simplified and it made me feel cheated out of a film that already had me emotionally interested.

The film centers around the disappearance of a six-year-old boy, Alex Selky, while he was on his way to school. The film uses this incident to focus on the reaction of his mother, Susan Selky, played by Kate Nelligan. Nelligan's performance here is very controlled as she portrays a woman trying to maintain a grip on her emotions.

Judd Hirsh plays Detective Al Manetti who is in charge of the investigation in search of Alex. His character doesn't have as much depth as Nelligan's, but Hirsh plays the New York cop role well, thankfully leaving out all of the cliched mannerisms.

It is easier to identify with the mother in Without A Trace since she is the main focus. Kate Nelligan successfully draws us into her private agony. Her entire world has fallen apart and she still remains calm. Susan keeps up a brave facade but her control weakens and her true emotions flood to the forefront.

There is one scene in a playground that is particularly moving. Susan is talking to her friend Jocelyn, played by Stockard Channing. Susan keeps babbling about Alex and her husband, Graham (played by David Dukes), until it becomes all too painful to watch her struggling to remain in control.

Although Nelligan's performance is clearly one of Trace's merits, the film falls down in terms of the storyline. The ending just seems too much like an easy way to close the film. When Alex disappears and the police are called into the situation, they must deal with the crackpots who call in with tips on the case. But it turns out that one of them is right for once. This seems so unlikely that it destroys the film's credibility entirely.

Without A Trace is to be faulted for its poor plot. The actors, especially Nelligan and Hirsh, try to salvage their own performances however, which somewhat keeps the film from being a total waste.

Kate Nelligan stars as the courageous mother of a six-year-old who disappears in Without A Trace.

An album that's hazardous to your taste

At first glance, Robert Hazard's new EP looks promising. The hand scribbled lyrics on the jacket are reminiscent of those on the sleeves of The Clash's London Calling. But, Robert Hazard's album has neither the energy nor enthusiasm of the aforementioned disc.

Warning: this EP doesn't fit into any particular genre of music. This is not a hardcore, punk, or "new music" album. Everyone knows hardcore is energetic beyond belief, which this album isn't. One look at the album's jacket lets you know that this is not a punk album. So, is this necessarily a "new wave" album? Obviously not. What the album is, I think, is dull.

The first cut on the album is called "Escalator of Life." It sounds like something you think that you heard on the airwaves before, but probably wish you hadn't. The song drags. It never builds to the expected climax. But that's the way the whole album goes; when you expect to hear a climax or chord change, it comes in just a little too late. The lyrics don't kick in, they sleaze in. "Escalator of Life" gets the most airplay, and as far as I can see, is the best song on the EP.

A song called "Change Reaction" could be called the guacamole of the EP. Not much good can be said about it.

The whole of side B sounds much the same as side A. The "personal I" is used badly throughout each song.

"Nothing's workin' right-
I can't sleep at night-
I can't pay the rent-
All my money's spent
'Cause I just want to hang around with you."

telligence or lacking his own is hard to determine.

Maybe "Out of the Blue" is the only saving cut on the entire EP. There is a thread of literacy brought to the surface by the refrain:

"Yo-oh out of the blue-back to nowhere."

This is a tale of good times gone bad. However, nothing is mentioned of the thing responsible for the twist of fate which haunts the singer back to nowhere.

Taken as a whole, the EP seems a bit too introspective and confused. So much so that the confusion interferes with the artist's ability to convey a feeling to the audience.

BKΦ RUSH TONIGHT
What's Open Rush?
A time to meet the brotherhood and see the house in an informal and non-committal atmosphere. We encourage all University men who are interested in fraternities or want more than just a degree for spending four years at UMass. Even if you are content with the dorms, come down and meet us, you may change your mind about frats, specificaly BKØ, as did many of us. There's no obligation and it only takes a short time. Don't narrow yourself down to one choice. Go to all of the rush parties to see which house is best suited to your needs. Ask questions about the living conditions, social activities, sports, reputations, food, etc. Ask upperclassmen on your floor to suggest a few houses to start looking at and their respective reputations.

Men gymnasts snap three meet losing streak

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

Bob Goulart does his routine on the rings for the UMass mens gymnastics team in competition earlier in the year.

Things are starting to look up for the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team, scores included.

The Minutemen trampled over Cortland State on Saturday 254.5-234.5, putting them on the winning track after a three game losing streak put a damper on the team's record.

The team didn't have as productive a meet as they could have had according to coach Roy Johnson. But the coach is as confident as ever that his team is breaking out of the mysterious slump that has been haunting the team since the start of the semester.

"I think this will get the ball rolling," Johnson said of the victory. "They're still making a few of the same mistakes but I think this team has a little more talent than they show in meets. They had some real nice routines (on Saturday) and I think they'll be ready by the Temple meet."

The Minutemen will meet Temple, their first home meet since January 22, in two weeks. But before they gain back the luxury of having the home advantage, the team will travel to Boston to tackle the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Against Cortland, UMass won all but two events. The floor event went well with John Macurdy putting up a 9.4 performance placing him first. Cortland, which has a strong floor team, still won the event with some exceptional routines.

Bert Mathieson led the way on the pommel horse with a 9.0 score. UMass won the event with 38.1 points and was leading the match by almost ten points after the pommel event.

The rings event found the Minutemen on top again with Mathieson and co-captain John McGonagle leading the pack. Both McGonagle and Mathieson, who had a winning 52.5 all around total, placed first for UM with 9.0.

Cortland prevailed in the vaulting event with 9.5 being the winning score for Cortland.

Massachusetts took both the parallel bars and high bars events to wrap up the win. Ron Lievendag won the parallel bar event, for Cortland, however, with a 9.2. Lievendag took second behind Mathieson in the all around scores with 52.3 points.

Willie Stevens had the top score in the high bar event. Stevens, who placed fourth with 50.2 points in all around competition, scored a 9.4 to lead the Minutemen.

Lew Wingert suffered a mild concussion before the meet in floor warm-up but still competed in most events. Wingert came up with a strong 8.6 high bar score.

The Minutemen will take their 4-4 record to meet M.I.T. next week and will end their season with two home meets against Temple and Springfield.

Minutewomen come up short against Maine

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

ORONO, Maine — The snow did not stop the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team from their encounter with the University of Maine Saturday afternoon and the two teams went out and played a whale of a game.

It was a nip and tuck affair the whole way as neither the Black Bears or the Minutewomen took control of the game. Maine took control and stole a heartbreaker from UMass, 73-71.

"It was a super ballgame to watch," said coach Mary Ann Ozdarski. "Both teams played very, very hard and well. It was a super game from start to finish."

UMass led 68-67 with 1:57 to go in the game, but Massachusetts picked up some crucial fouls that swung the game Maine's way.

The Black Bears were led by their two speedy guards, Kathy Nalson with 18 points and Julia Treadwell with 11.

Massachusetts was led by freshman Barbara Hebel, who put in one of her best efforts of the year, with 20 points.

"She (Hebel) shot the ball the best she has in a month," said Ozdarski. Maria Chomentowski played well scoring 15 points and pulling in eight rebounds. Chomentowski had an outstanding game on the boards and shooting, according to Ozdarski. Nadine Jackson added eight points and led UMass in rebounding with ten.

"It was a tough loss to come home with," said Ozdarski. "But, it was one of the best games we played as a team this year."

With the loss, Massachusetts drops to 5-18 on the year while Maine improves to 9-12.

UMass will be looking for another good performance when they host Central Connecticut Wednesday afternoon in the Cage.

UMass swimmers bow to New Hampshire

By BOBBY BROCK
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's swimming team braved gloomy weather reports Friday afternoon and traveled up to Durham, N.H. to take on the University of New Hampshire, but New Hampshire prevailed, 89-60.

"They (UNH) were really up for it and they were just a bit sharper than us," explained UMass coach Valerie Turtle.

Even though the loss drops the UMass record to 9-2, things were not all that bad for the Minutewomen. Although they didn't win the event, the 400-yard medley relay team of Jennifer Black, Laurie Keen, Maura Sweeney and Elizabeth Feinberg registered a time of 4:16.55, breaking the old UMass record of 4:18.54 set in 1981.

It was also a meet of personal bests as Anne Whitlock, who swam her best 100 backstroke of her career in a speedy :29.3. The clocking is only three-tenths of a second off the UMass record of :29.0 set back in 1976.

Another positive aspect that came out of the meet was that freshman Laurie Keen swam for the first time since injuring her shoulder during the Amherst College meet last month. Keen really came through as she took firsts in both the 50 breaststroke (:33.5) and the 200 breaststroke (2:38.55). Despite the impressive showing Coach Turtle warns that Keen is not completely covered.

The Minutewomen did take other events too. Jenn Nicolai swam her way to a win in the 100 yard individual medley and Jennifer Black swam a 2:20.85 on her way to winning the 200 backstroke. The 200 yard freestyle relay team of Connie Anderson, Debbie Chisholm, Anne Whitlock and Elizabeth Feinberg took first place as they combined for a time of 1:42.85. And as far as the diving events go, Gina Perrone of UMass took first in the 3 meter event, racking up a point total of 203.10.

The Minutewomen will take their 9-2 record up against Mt. Holyoke on Tuesday night at the Boyden pool for their final dual meet of the season before the New England Championships, held at Springfield College's Linkletter Natatorium on Feb. 25-27.

UM trackmen place third

By LAURIE FISHER
Collegian Staff

The blizzard that snowed the Minutemen basketball team in the nations capitol and put other UMass sports on hold did not prevent the mens track team from competing in the Eastern Intercollegiate Championships held Saturday at Southern Connecticut State in New Haven.

Forseeing the snow storm Coach Ken O'Brien took his team to Connecticut Friday night. The decision to go down early payed off. The team placed third with an overall score of 68. UMass was not the only early arrival, seven other schools from as far away as the University of Maine arrived Friday. The 10 snowed out competitors included local University of New Haven, snow bound less than ten miles from the competition.

The host school, Southern Connecticut State, was first again this year with a score of 111 points and University of Lowell was not far behind with 105.

UMass senior Richard Doiron won the mile event with a time of 4:09.8, his personal best. John Wright won the high hurdles with a time of 7.5 seconds.

A distance of 51'9" put Stephen Hyder in second place in the shot put event. A time of 1:13.5 gave Brian Osborne the same slot in the 600 yard dash. The mile relay team was also second with a time of 3:24.8. The team included freshmen Neil Osborne, Edward Urquiola, Scott Bowen and junior Brian Osborne.

"The mile relay time was the best this year, qualifying UMass for the New England finals," O'Brien said. "It was also a good example of how well our freshmen performed. They performed well in their first championship meet."

Freshmen Ferdie Adoboe was third in the triple jump with a distance of 44'2.5". Sophomore John Keelan ran the 1000 yard dash in 2:15.6, placing him fourth.

Hoopsters play tonight

By LAURIE FISHER
Collegian Staff

After losing to George Washington University 68-66 Thursday night and spending two unplanned days in Washington due to the weekend snow storm, the University of Massachusetts basketball team finally caught a bus Sunday morning, heading for West Virginia.

The game against the Mountaineers was scheduled for 8:00 p.m. Saturday night but was postponed and rescheduled for tonight at 8:00 p.m. The team will return to UMass Tuesday.

It's not the next best thing

By RAY BEAUCHEMIN
Collegian Staff

Love and Valentines are not best served over long distances. Sorry Ma Bell, but it's just not the same. Long distance is not the next best thing to being there because there is no "next best thing."

Ah, but perhaps I shouldn't be so hard on Mrs. Bell. It is my fault. I'm the one who decided to live in Amherst where calling your next door neighbor is a toll call. I'm also the one who consciously decided to hold off on paying December's bill which eventually brought about the disconnection of my phone. Well...these things happen. But I'm gonna have one hell of a time explaining to my girlfriend not sending something on Valentine's unless something doesn't happen soon.

I suppose I could send her chocolates, but after having seen Tootsie, I'm not sure chocolates are what every woman wants. Terrible for the figure or something like that I guess.

Then again, I could always ring up the local flower shop and have some Mercury-type character with wings on his head and heels and a bouquet in his hands deliver a few roses to her. But I've never sent her flowers before and really wouldn't know how to go about getting someone to dress like the FTD track star.

There's always the option of surprising her by showing up at her apartment in person. But that might not work out either: my car is not out of the service garage yet.

Hmmm. I haven't written a poem in a while. Perhaps that would do it. On second thought, I'm not much for sticky Valentines; I'm more the metaphorical sex and death poet. Besides, she's always had problems deciphering the meanings.

You know, I'm really beginning to worry here. Beads of swing tinged with blood are forming on my forehead. I've been at this typewriter for a long, L-O-N-G, time. Last year I'd forgotten Feb. 14; I can't afford to do so this year. I'll never hear the end of it.

This is depressing. It seems nothing will work. I'm afraid to admit it but Ma Bell might be the next best thing after all. Looks like I'm going to have to run down to the corner payphone and call my girl from there.

And charge it to Mom and Dad.

Tunes for lovers only

By DOUGLAS MUISE
Collegian Staff

Listen kids, if I had some money to kick around on records this Valentine's Day, I'd suggest you sink it into the Jam' Dig the New Breed or the new one by the Stranglers. But hey, I can't! This time around I gotta answer to a higher authority. They want me to write up something suggesting what albums would be good for setting the proper romantic mood for the holiday. Well, given that it is Valentine's Day and all that it entails, I suppose that I should go along with it. So sit back, give your tongue a break from licking all of those bloody Valentine envelopes, and let's see what we can come up with.

POP

Pop music is always going to be more of a romantic moodsetter, because these are the sounds which backlit your first tinglings of "the urge." Come on, you've all got those fond memories tucked away of lusty eves spent in the back seat of Dad's Granada sucking face to this stuff. Naturally, the steamy reminiscences conjured one of these old tunes is going to be more than enough to get you "in the mood" today, right?

Let's Get It On, Marvin Gaye.
He said it and he meant it. The title cut steams up my turntable cover every time.

Court and Spark, Joni Mitchell.
Sure this album doesn't make you want to jump right into the sack, but "Free Man in Paris" is still great to slurp Riunite' to.

Rubber Soul, the Beatles.
With McCartney's school boy crooning on classics such as "Michelle," "Norwegian Wood," and "Girl," how can you go wrong?

Greatest Hits, Phil Spector.
Quite possibly the greatest make-out record ever conceived. Don't tell me you can't feel your lips involuntarily puckering when the Ronettes belt "Then He Kissed Me." Just try and tell me that.

JAZZ

Jazz might seem a bit too intellectual to fool around to, but it's great if you want something a little less sappy and a little more rigorous musically.

The Cole Porter Songbook, Ella Fitzgerald.
No, this woman does not shatter crystal for a living, she's probably the most eloquent jazz/pop voice on vinyl. Cool out!

The Billie Holiday Story, Billie Holiday.
Vintage stuff, yes, but it ages really well. Love songs in a classical frame.

CLASSICAL

Romance is steeped in the classical tradition, everybody know that (or most everyone). You'll all probably accustomed to making-out to the strains of some movie soundtrack anyway, so why not save yourself the trouble of sitting in the theater. Pick up one of these monsters, instead.

Romeo and Juliet, Tchaikovsky.
Remember when you first heard this on PBS? You loved it, right? you'll get the best sound if Bernstein conducts.

Bolero, Ravel.
Sure Bo Derek's an airhead, but she was right about this record, baby. Make sure Ormandy conducts.

Piano Concerto No. 21, in C Major, Mozart.
This is what Muffy and Bif over at Amherst cuddle to, and with good reason. Witold Rowichi conducting is the best.

What the day is all about

By LISA PEDULLA
Collegian Staff

Is it a day to honor romance and love, or a promotional gimmick to sell Hallmark cards? In the midst of dreary February we're hit with an onslaught of cupids, hearts, and red...red...and more red! Valentine's Day might even have been created so that couples across the country will have a chance to pay homage to the FTD florist man.

For those who take it lightly, Valentine's Day can actually be a lot of fun, a chance to make your friends smile. And if you look good in red, you can dress to the hilt. For those who are a little bolder it can be the opportunity you've been looking for to express your love, adoration, or passion for that special person in your class, the Coffee Shop, or at the bus stop. For those who are in love it can be your chance to show off the extravagant nature of your lover or a good excuse for a fight because they forgot the significance of February 14th.

Now for the rest — you know who you are. Those people who take the whole day just a little too seriously. The ones who bemoan the fact that no one will ever send them a Valentine, but who greedily scan the paper looking for their names anyway. And don't get too smug, because at one time or another most everyone has been there.

It is easy to spot the signs. First you get out of bed in the morning vowing to wear anything but red. Next you swear to treat this as any other day. You glare at the woman sitting next to you in your 10:10 class, you know the on clutching a dozen long stemmed roses, announcing to the class how generous her boyfriend is, even though they just met last weekend.

In between classes you grab a Collegian, and yes, check for your name. You spot your name, stand in line for an hour, missing your next class, pay your 50 cents only to find out the secret admirer you've been dreaming of was actually your well intentioned roommate.

When you get home there they are waiting for you, a box of chocolates and the floral arrangement. Oh come on now, Mom, I told you stop doing this after I got to the seventh grade. Oh well, it really is just another day anyway, right?

By PAUL BELVAL
Collegian Staff

Valentine's Day sucks!

In a society where we have managed to make a commercial farce out of just about every holiday, Valentine's Day takes the cake.

On other holidays, most people at least know the original reason for the observance before greed took over and corrupted the day. For example, Christmas, which has turned out to be the biggest money-maker around today, most people would be able to tell you that the day was originally meant to be a rememberance of some guy who was born in a barn and got nailed to a tree a couple years later.

And most people have some idea that Independence Day is the day a bunch of guys in Philadelphia signed some piece of paper telling King George to get lost and not a commercial creation of supermarkets designed to clear out picnic supplies.

And there are probably even some people who know Washington's Birthday is in fact the birthday of our first president and not just a cheap excuse for Tech Hi-Fi to have a sale.

This is not true about St. Valentine's Day though.

There are very few people who know Valentine's Day is actually a day for remembering a Catholic saint, and even fewer who could tell you who the hell he was and what he did.

No, for more people, Valentine's Day is a chance to go out and spend a fortune on exhorbitantly priced candy or wilting flowers to give to someone who will probably accept the gift, and may even be flattered by it, but really couldn't care less about the giver.

These people will accept the gift, and even be quite glad about it because they were able to save themselves some embarassment and convince their friends for yet another year that someone actually cares about them.

However, these same people will tell their admirers on February 15 that "I really like you a lot, but like I really can't deal with a relationship right now."

Valentine's Day is a lame excuse for confectioners to wrap stale candy in red foil and a pretty bow and sell it for twice the usual price.

It is a chance for toymakers to tie an "I love you" tag around a stuffed bear's neck and sucker some sappy guy into buying it as an expression of his undying love for his girlfriend.

It is an opportunity for florists to take tacky pink carnations and make them look worse by dying them red on the edge. They then sell these foolish flowers to sentimental wimps who get overpowered by the commercial advertising.

For people who aren't in love, it is ridiculous to create a day for them to pretend they are.

And for people who are in love, there is no need for a day to express it, because they do it all year long.

How to take the day

By JOSH MEYER
Collegian Staff

Valentine's Day is almost upon us, and while most students seem to know what the holiday is all about, no one really knows who the hero of the story is. The myth of St. Valentine is a mysterious one, to say the least.

"St. Valentine loved everyone, so his friends honored him with a holiday," said Susan Darragh, 20, an English major.

"St. Valentine was imprisoned by a government for practicing a different religion, and sentenced to death," said Dana Davis, a 22 year old environmental design major. "When he died, he professed his love for a girl he was teaching while he was in jail."

There are some other theories of who St. Valentine was as well.

"A long time ago, a priest named St. Valentine declared a holiday and made everybody love each other," said Denny O'Sullivan, a 20 year old environmental design major.

"What really happened was that St. Valentine declared his love for someone in a way no one's ever done before," according to Jane Lipka, 20, a business marketing major.

"St. Valentine sent flowers to everybody around the world, so they named a holiday after him," said Jodi Goldstein, a 20 year old fashion marketing major.

The belief in St. Valentine is not shared by all.

"It's simply another bourgeoisie, pagan ritual, a meaningless holiday,' said Mike Leary, a 23 year old social thought and political economy/political science major. Actually, exactly who St. Valentine was, and why a holiday was named after him has never been sufficiently explained. According to "The Book of Saints," compiled by the Benedictine Monks of St. Augustine's Abbey, there were two saints in the second half of the third century. Both were executed and later hailed as martyrs for practicing the Christian faith under persecution.

Most books on the subject agree that the actual holiday started because a legend existed that the day of the holiday, Feb. 14th, was also the day when the birds started to pair off or mate. As such, if one sent a "valentine" to a friend or acquaintance, it would bring them luck.

If that's not enough background, there are others who believe the holiday is actually "Galantin's" Day, named after a Norman warrior and famous lover of women.

So while the origins of our most romantic holiday are obscure, it can be agreed that St. Valentine's Day is supposed to be a day of feeling.

As Diane Isaacs, 20, an accounting major said, "Valentine's Day is a time to let your inhibitions run wild, and show someone you like how you really feel."

Happy Valentine's Day!

Since the 14th Century and probably earlier, this special day has been observed in nearly the same manner it is today. Love letters, cards decorated with satin and lace, and small tokens of affection are sent often anonymously, to the object of the heart's desire. Whatever its origins, Valentine's Day is a day for remembering that special someone.

NUMMO NEWS

NUMMO News' ONLY connection with the Massachusetts Daily Collegian is for the purpose of distribution.

A Message To Our Readers

Get involved!! The time is ripe for students who've always wanted to learn how an independent Third World weekly is produced, because NUMMO is extending a special invitation to interested persons to come on down and check us out!!

There are a whole range of skills, technical, creative, literate, artistic and otherwise, that go into newspaper production. All are encouraged to find out how to expand their capabilities and contribute to an important collective effort at the same time. The Black, Latino, and Asian-American communities should take the time to remember and consider the fact that NUMMO is the community's mode of cultural, political, social, philosophical and multi-dimensional expression. It exists to voice the concerns of underrepresented groups, concerns that are traditionally overlooked or distorted in the mainstream media. These concerns should not be centered around the negative elements of life in Amherst, in New England, and in the United States. These concerns include anything that constitutes a dynamic response to the flow of history, to change and possibility, to the educational process, all of which influence our lives as students of color at the University of Massachusetts.

WHAT IS NEEDED IN NUMMO NEWS ???

NUMMO needs students who are willing to take the responsibility for continuing the process of communication through words, thoughts and deeds. NUMMO needs the responsiveness of the community in orderto accomplish its goals. The power of the written and spoken word is its use in teaching and questioning, in analysis and interpretation, and especially in its use for expression! This is not some mystical power but speaks to the nature of human life, right now, in the world we live in. NUMMO asks that you, the reader, consider taking an active stance toward your education, through involvement in any form,particularly since there are so many options available, even within NUMMO itself!

Notes on M.L.K.'s Birthday...

by Donna Davis

On January 15th Martin Luther King, Jr. should have celebrated another bithday. Instead it was a day that few Americans spent reliving the accomplishments of this great man. Mainstream media did not think that mention of King's birthday merited more than a 30 second slot on a news show.

On January 14th the American Broadcasting Company showed some brief film clippings of his life and then the newscaster quipped, "what a man." The remainder of the news-entertainment show continued as if nothing had happened.

While en route to Washington, D.C. it was obvious that many radio station announcers did not know if they were celebrating his birthday or his death. One announcer said, "...and today we're celebrating the death er excuse me birthday of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr." One wonders if he said how he really felt the first time.

These examples cite the negligence of some broadcasters but do not negate the good work done by others. Many stations, including WMUA of Amherst, allocated major portions of their broadcast time to remembrances of King. Speeches were replayed and prayers uttered in praise of him.

His struggle may have been forgotten by some, but it is everlasting to those who care. At this very moment events are being planned to commemorate his death in Memphis, Tennessee. When Martin Luther King, Jr. week arrives come out in support of mankind's greatest warrior.

Student Activist Seeks Nomination For Presidency

By Angela Brown

The following is an interview with Charlene Allen, a junior-year English major who knows literary questions inside and out. Ms. Allen is also a Black woman, active in student politics since she arrived at UMass, who is seeking nomination to be a candidate for the student government Presidential elections in early March. This interview is provided in the interest of inspiring you, the reader, to think about what's needed on the UMass campus, and what it will take to get it. It should be noted that student government presidencies at UMass are traditionally Co-Presidencies since two distinct areas of responsibility are involved. Tom Ahern is seeking nomination to run with Charlene Allen as a Co-Presidential candidate.

What are the factors that have led you to want to become a Presidential candidate this year and what are your overall concerns about the needs of the UMass student body?

Alot of the potential of students on this campus is wasting away, and we have many resources that are underutilized. The quality of life for students in one of my main concerns. There is not enough to keep students content with their lives. Tuition hikes, financial aid cuts and the fact that educational decisions, on tenure for example, are not made by people in the classes,are all examples of students' lack of control over their own lives. All this, even though there are some 20,000 people of voting age at this school, which has to be substantial in a state like Massachusetts, and in a town like Amherst. I don't think that anyone would question the fact that politics calls the shots. For example, rent control in Amherst is ours in we move on it. Last year, the proposal lost by only 15 votes, with minimal student input. If we get more students involved then and win, the rents would automatically be rolled back to where they were this time last year.

One example of this potential I'd like to discuss is when the Third World caucus of the student senate, in conjunction with other S.G.A. agencies held a mock gubernatorial election last year. We talked about the importance of voting, and the voter turnout was higher than the turnout of many actual elections. Dukakis won the mock, and later the actual, gubernatorial elections. In relation to this, Dukakis once stated in a taped conversation with an S.G.A. representative that he would support a tuition freeze and putting a student on the Board of Regents. He wouldn't have done that without a reason to. We've got to recognize our potential. If we recognize our potential then the people in office will recognize it.

All of this relates to why I am seeking candidacy for the co-presidency, from the standpoint of being a student at UMass who sees things getting out of control. I see a need for doing this not only because of the danger that I myself will not be able to graduate, but because I've been in the student senate long enough to see both the problems and the potential, and especially to see the channels by which we can gain, and overcome these problems. As a Black female, however, I see that there's also a definite need for people of color to be not only in leadership positions, but for them to recognize the fact that they have the means to gain the things they want, as all students must. There are also practical considerations in light of the growing conservative trend, since if this trend were to sweep this campus we would pay a larger price. This could affect everything from our educational experien

How do issues pertaining to Third World students relate to your overall objectives as a potential candidate for student government President?

Hopefully, through having these issues addressed and through this candidacy, people will begin to recognize that issues of Third World concern are not of concern solely to Third World people. By improving the situation of Third World people you automatically improve the situations of others experiencing similar problems, though these might be of lesser degree. You need not always look to the strategy of improving the conditions of non-white students through improving the conditions of the general public and then hoping for the best. Sometimes the strategy works better in reverse. To quote anti-racist activist Anne Braden, "when the bottom rises, the whole structure rises" Economically, non-white people have been kept on the bottom for some time.

Campaign to Save the ANC Six

Six young members of the African National Congress are currently on death row awaiting execution. All six were accused of high treason for participating in sabotage actions and attacks on police stations in which several policemen died. They were convicted on the basis of confessions extracted by torture.

In one trial Marcus Motaung, Jerry Mosololi, and Simon Mogoerane were found guilty and sentenced to death by Judge D.J. Curlewis who ignored the fact that all three had been tortured into confessing. During the trial of David Moise, Anthony Tsotsobe, and Johannes Shabanga there was also extensive testimony presented of pre-trial torture including beatings and electric shock treatments. The court dismissed this evidence and, relying on the defendants' coerced statements, found them guilty of complicity in several police station attacks and the 1980 sabotage of the SASOL oil-from-coal complex.

The six are currently awaiting the result of a final petition for clemency to the State President of South Africa. The ANC is gravely concerned that unless the international community exerts immediate pressure the death sentences will be confirmed.

Besides the issue of torture the fundamental political and legal point to make in your cables and solidarity work is that the six defendants should have been accorded Prisoner of War status under the Geneva Conventions which in 1977 were extended to cover:

"armed conflicts in which peoples are fighting against colonial domination and alien occupation and against racist regimes in the exercise of their right to self-determination."

Prisoners of War are immune from criminal prosecution and hence execution for acts of combat which would be crimes under municipal law.

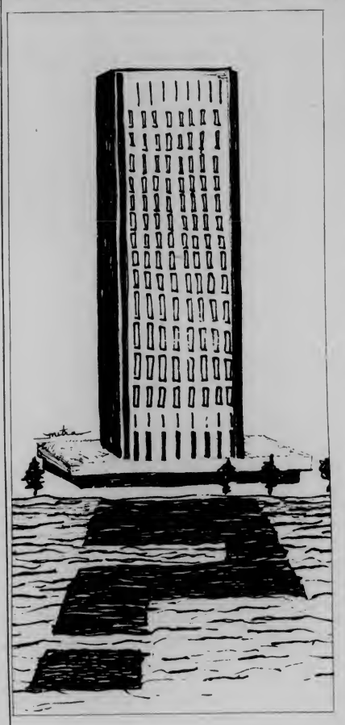
In Search of A Name ....

Work Around Naming Tower Library After DuBois Continues

By Tracey Bryant



The Radical Student Union (RSU), a progressive political organization on campus, with the aid of the Department of Afro-American Studies, is in the process of making an all-out effort to get the tower library named after W.E.B. DuBois. This effort will consists of three parts: writing a DuBois pamphlet, the writing of a proposal to be presented to the proper administrative authorities, and the writing of letters to prestigious persons (V.I.P.s) for their compliance and comments on the matter. There will be posters put out and a tentative lecture on the importance of W.E.B. DuBois -..."His Contribution to The World" (for those who didn't read the pamphlet).

The DuBois pamphlets will be out some time in February and will be available on an RSU table that will be located in the Campus Center concourse. Most of the other activities centering around this momentous task will take place in February also. For further details or information, please contact the RSU Office at 545-0677, (located on 4th floor of the Student Union Building).

The Significance Behind the Name.

The importance of naming the tower library after W.E.B. DuBois can not be overstated. A man whose life spanned almost an entire century, and whose scholarship does even more, deserves a permanent monument in his home state befitting his work and contribution to American society and the world society. We all will agree that anyone who has so advanced the intellectual climate of a country (as DuBois has), should be lauded and revered; remembered at the very least.

But why should the UMASS tower library bear the name of the late Dr. DuBois? The world hails W.E.B. DuBois as one of the great premier scholars of the twentieth century (and of America). DuBois contributed tomes and tomes of scholarly research and analysis that cut through the propaganda of the present and fallacies of the past. He was born in Great Barrington, Massachusetts, was dedicated to the ideal of higher education for everyone. Most of his much sought-after papers reside in our very own tower library. All must agree that it is only befitting that the tower library--a monument and instrument of scholarship and education should be renamed after Dr. DuBois, whose life exemplified the very same.

France and other countries have pieces of his work--replicas of his papers, but right here in our very midst we have the real thing. We have been so honored, it is only befitting that we give a thank you of equal esteem.

Lesotho Vows to Resist Pressure on ANC

Reprinted from AFRICA NEWS

[Editor's Note: The South African aggression against Lesotho on Dec. 10, 1982, is only part of the regional military conflict that has been going on in the whole of Southern Africa for some time.]

[AN] The United Nations Security Council has unanimously condemned South Africa's December 9 raid into Lesotho and has demanded that Pretoria pay compensation to the victims of that raid.

A total of 42 persons, including women and children, were killed when more than 100 South African soldiers raided 12 areas in the capital, Maseru, in a pre-dawn hunt for alleged African National Congress (ANC) guerillas.

One of the five women killed in the raid has been identified as the 20-year-old daughter of former Lesotho Cabinet minister A.S. Ralebitso. Another woman has been identified as Limpho Sekamane, wife of Themba Hani, the ANC chief representative in Lesotho, who was visiting Mozambique at the time of the raid.

According to a South African official, three other victims identified as Jackson Balisane Tayo Mufta (alias Tron), Zola Sgonyela Nquni (alias Brazed), and Adolph Joseph Phicamile had spent some time in detention on Robben Island.

The 15-member Security Council unanimously adopted a four-paragraph resolution that "strongly condemns" South Africa's "aggressive act." The document also upholds Lesotho's right to protect South African refugees.

Lesotho's King Moshoeshoe II opened the debate by saying South Africa intended to discourage his country from granting political asylum to those fleeing oppression in South Africa.

South Africa's traditional allies in the Security Council, the United States and Great Britain, supported the resolution. Britain's Sir John Thomson warned South Africa that it was taking a "foolish risk" by flouting international law and by adding fuel to the "menacing spiral of violence" in the region.

Sir John said Britain and other countries would increase their aid to Lesotho, whose economy is heavily dependent on South Africa. With a population of 1.3 million, Lesotho is entirely surrounded by South Africa.

The Security Council resolution, proposed by the Africa Group at the UN, was worded in such a way as to avoid a veto by the Western powers. The Council's three African members (Zaire, Uganda and Togo) were pleased by the unanimous vote, but they said they were aware that words alone were not effective. They also renewed the long-standing African call for tough economic sanctions against Pretoria.

Libya's Treike A. Ali, chairman of the African Group, said "the imperialist powers extended their full support financially, politically and militarily" to South Africa "to protect their interests in that part of the world."

South Africa claimed it launched the raid because it had information that ANC fighters would strike at South Africa over Christmas. Pretoria also claimed that the ANC targets include the 'homelands' of Transkei and Ciskei.

During a massive funeral in Maseru, King Moshoeshoe declared that Lesotho will continue to provide shelter to the victims of apartheid. He said apartheid was no longer an issue confined to South Africa because Pretoria had taken its terror tactics beyond its border.

Prime Minister Leabua Jonathan of Lesotho said he had challenged South Africa to send representatives to Maseru to identify alleged guerrilla training camps, but South Africa had failed to accept the challenge.

Jonathan also said he had dismissed with contempt a South African offer to turn a leader of the anti-government Lesotho Liberation Army (LLA) over to Lesotho authorities in return for the extradition of the chief ANC representative in Lesotho.

Although it was shunned by many of its traditional allies following the raid, Pretoria received some consolation from Transkei and Ciskei.

Ciskei expressed joy at the raid because it said South Africa had uncovered an ANC plan to send about 50 guerrillas to attack targets inside the homeland.

Ciskei added that its intelligence staff had worked in close cooperation with their South African counterparts in analyzing the documents that Pretoria said it seized in the raid.

Transkei's Capital Radio said South African soldiers had discovered an alleged ANC plan to place bombs at the Bloemfontein railway station and assassinate the Transkei leader, Kaizer Mantanzima.

The jubilation shown by both Transkei and Ciskei, however, was not shared by KwaZulu, whose leader, Chief Gatsha Buthelezi, lamented that South Africa, the most powerful nation in the region, should become a force for destabilization rather than progress.

Although the South Africans did not say how many servicemen were involved in the raid, 64 South African soldiers were left behind.

Lesotho police initially said they were looking for these men. Maseru radio reported later that the head of South Africa's security police had telephoned the Lesotho authorities demanding the soldiers' return.

Fears of another raid heightened when South Africa declared a 20-mile perimeter around Maseru airport a war zone and ordered aircraft to stay clear.

The ANC, meanwhile, has denied that it operates any camps in Lesotho. "There have never been ANC camps in Lesotho" or in the countries neighboring South Africa, the ANC statement said.

The organization also declared that the attack would "surely fail in its intention of stopping the struggle in South Africa, or terrorizing us into submission, and of compelling Lesotho and other states in the region to abandon their principled position of opposition to the apartheid system."

Almost coinciding with the funerals at Maseru, four bombs blasted a South African nuclear plant under construction near Cape Town. ANC has claimed responsibility for the blasts.

The Struggle Continues/La Lucha Continua

As the revolutionary struggle in El Salvador and other countries intensifies, so the struggle here, the monster, must intensify.

The FMLN demonstrated last week, with the liberation of Berlin, that its victory is not far away. The Salvadorean Army and government are showing signs of internal disagreement. The FMLN on the other hand, is more united than ever and is capable of carrying out military operations that are bold, well planned and well-executed. These are signs that victory are close at hand.

We, the people involved in solidarity work, must follow the example of our comrades in El Salvador. We must present a united front against intervention in El Salvador and repression here in the United States. The U.S. government is not going to remain seated, watching how the FMLN carries out its revolution. U.S. intervention will increase: more military equipment, more advisors, more training of troops and more dollars spent will ensue. And if all of these do not accomplish anything (which it will not) the U.S. will not have another alternative but to intervene militarily, either directly with its own troops, or, at least in the begining, indirectly with Honduran troops and CIA-paid mercenary bands.

We cannot let this happen, but if it does we must be ready for immediate mobilization. The different solidarity groups,the groups that oppose U.S. imperialism wherever it appears, those that oppose the draft, that fight racism, sexism and arms proliferation, must unite. Poverty and unemployment, intervention in El Salvador, the arms race and the draft are not issues independent of each other; all of them are interconnected, all of them have the same origin, U.S. imperialism. To fight against one is to fight against all.

In the second place we have to intensify the struggle on all fronts: legislative, educational, the labor front, civil disobedience, challenge to the military establishment, direct action. We must increase the pressure on our representatives and on our places of work. We have to demonstrate, speak, create educational materials, demand, protest, boycott, obstruct the military machine, help the revolutionary struggles economically. We must create an energetic movement, one that will challenge the power of the state at every moment.

In this movement we must utilize all the resources that we can and as we can. Not everybody can sit in at the army recruiting office and be arrested; not everybody can block the entrance to the State Department; not everybody can pour into the streets to demstrate. It is necessary to understand what each person can give and not disregard any contribution, even the smallest one. Nobody is a born radical ready to protest any injustice. We all have gone through a conscientization process. Today, maybe, some can only contribute a signature on a petition, or the distribution of a flyer, or a call to a congressperson. Tomorrow, if we do our job, it will be possible to count on these people for a demonstration or a civil disobedience action. (It is important to point out here that there are many people doing organizing in our communities, who for certain reasons cannot show their solidarity openly. These people are very valuable and although sometimes we do not know who they are, the signs of their work are everywhere).

So let's unite, let's forge alliances, let's develop the solidarity movement and let's intensify the struggle.

El Salvador and the American people will overcome, as did the people of Nicaragua.

Al tiempo que la lucha revolucionaria en El Salvador y en otros paises se intensifica, debemos intensificar la lucha aquí, en las entrañas del monstruo.

El FMLN demostró la semana pasada, con la toma de Belin, que su victoria no anda muy lejana. El ejército salvadoreño y el gobierno reaccionario de Magaña están dando señales de desacuerdos internos, varias facciones se están desarrollando dentro del régimen y dentro de los militares. El FMLN, sin embargo, aparece más unido que nunca y capaz de llevar a cabo operaciones militares masivas, audaces y bien planeadas y ejecutadas. Son senales de que la Victoria esta cerca.

Debemos, los que estamos envueltos en los movimientos antiimperialistas, tomar ejemplo de nuestros companeros revolucionarios en El Salvador. Necesitamos presentar un frente unido contra la intervencion y la represion. Los Estados Unidos no se van a quedar sentados contemplando como el FMLN lleva a cabo su revolución. La intervención aumentará: más equipo militar, más entrenadores, más entrenamiento de tropas salvadoreñas aqui en este pais, mas infusión de dinero. Y si todo esto no da resultado, que no dará, los Estados Unidos no tendrán más remedio que intervenir militarmente, ya directamente con sus propias tropas o, al principio por lo menos, indirectamente con tropas hondurenas o con bandas mercenarias pagadas por la C.I.A.

Debemos de tratar que esto no ocrra, pero si ocurriera debemos estar preparados para mobilizarnos inmediatamente. Se tienen que unir los diferentes grupos que se solidarizan con la lucha del FMLN en El Salvador (y con la lucha revolucionaria en Guatemela y la revolucion sandinista en Nicaragua), los que se oponen al imperialismo norteamericano dondequiera que sea, los que luchan contra la conscripción militar, y por el desarme, los que luchan contra el racismo, el sexismo, el capitalismo. La pobreza y el desempleo, la intervención en El Salvador, el incremento del arsenal nuclear, el reclutamiento obligatorio en el ejercito, no son asuntos independientes, todos están relacionados, tienen el mismo origen : el imperialismo Norteamericano. Luchar contra uno es luchar contra todos.

En segundo lugar hay que intensificar la lucha en todos los frentes: legislativa educativo, laboral, acción directa, desafío al sistema militar, desafío a las leyes. Debemos incrementar la presión sobre nuestros representantes y sobre las instituciones donde trabajamos. Debemos manifestarnos, producir, protestar, desobedecer a las autoridades, obstruir la maquinaria militar, ayudar economicamente a los revolucionarios. Debemos crear un movimiento enérgico que desofie el poder del gobierno a cada momento.

En este movimiento debemos utilizar todos los recursos que podamos y como podamos. No todo el mundo puede ocupar una oficina de reclutamiento del ejército y ser arrestado, no todo el mundo puede bloquear la entrada del pentagono, no todo el mundo puede lanzarse a la calle a protestar. Es necesario darse cuenta de lo que cada persona puede ofrecer y no despreciar ninguna contribución por pequeña que sea. Nadie ha nacido radical, dispuesto a protestar cualquier injusticia, todos hemos pasado por un proceso de concientización. Hoy, quiza, algunos solo puedan contribuir una firma en una peticiòn, o la distribución de un circular, o una llamada a su representante. Mañana, si hacemos bien nuestro trabajo, podremos contar con estas personas para manifestarse o hacer desobediencia civil. (También debemos reconocer que hay muchas personas haciendo trabajo de organizacion en nuestras comunidades, que por ciertas circunstancias no pueden dar la cara tan abiertamente como otras. Estos trabajadores, mas o menos, anonimos son muy importantes en el movimiento y aunque no sepamos quienes son, podemos ver los resultados de su trabajo).

Unàmonos, busquemos alianzas, desarrollemos el movimiento de solidaridad e intensifiquemos la lucha. Como Nicaragua venciò, El Salvador vencerá y el pueblo americano vencerà.

HAPPY NEW YEAR

By Brenda Ling

With this first new moon of the year, Chinese people throughout the world celebrate the first day of the Year of the Boar. Some people decorate their homes with messages to ask the spirits to bring good fortune, some have elaborate banquets (not without a fish dish to symbolize long life), some watch entertainment of dancers in street shows, but many simply spend time with their immediate families, ushering out the old year and welcoming the new with this Spring Festival

New contraception law no threat to UM women

By ROBIN MANDEL
Collegian Staff

Because the University of Massachusetts Health Services is not a federally-funded institution, it will not be affected by the new Parental Notification Law scheduled to go into effect on February 25, said the executive director of UMass Health Services.

However, a federal judge yesterday blocked enforcement of the new regulation requiring that parents be notified when teenage women receive prescription contraceptives from government-financed clinics.

U.S. District Judge Henry Werker issued a preliminary injunction barring the regulations from going into effect Feb. 25, pending trial of one of two suits challenging the constitutionality of the measure.

Averill said even if this regulation does go into effect he would not be bound by this federal law because of a state law passed in the mid 1970's declaring that females 12 years and over can consent to their own protective care without parental permission.

"If a person is old enough to go to college then she is old enough to make a decision relating to sexual behavior. On this basis, without explained written consent from the minor, we will not notify the parents that their daughter is having sexual relations. We will continue to abide by this private confidential policy," he said.

Due to what Averill terms as the emancipation of youth policy, the UMass Health Services will continue to give contraceptive medical assistance to all clients who seek it.

Although Averill said the Health Services on campus would not be subject to abide by this new ruling, other institutions throughout the nation will be affected because they are federally-funded institutions.

Ellen Story, assistant director of the Family Planning Council of Western Massachusetts said, "This new law is a violation of the constitutional rights for the privacy of teenagers. While Family Planning does encourage parental notification, it does not mandate it. With the passing of this law, we would be forced to notify parents of their daughter's sexual behavior. This,of course, would be a wide departure from the way we operate now."

Story said she is optimistic that the law would be repealed. "There are too many drastic effects which could result if this law goes into effect. The fact of the matter is that the rule could probably bring about a sharp increase in the number of unintended adolescent pregnancies.

"This regulation will also prevent through fear and intimidation, many teenage girls from visiting the family planning services and will not stop adolescents from participating in sexual activities," she said.

According to a statement released from the Family Planning Council of Western Massachusetts, an estimated 400,000 adolescent pregnancies were averted in the nation as a result of family planning services in 1979.

Lisa Nazzaro, a UMass student coordinator for the Committee for Equal Rights and Reproductive Freedom (CERRF), said this legislation fails to see the reality of the situation.

"The law would be punishing the female for being conscious about her body instead of encouraging her for trying to protect herself," she said.

Story said, two-thirds of the female teenage population does not use any birth control devices or may only use some sort of uneffective device when having sexual relations. The new law would be decreasing the number of teenage females who use birth control devices even further.

Students procure deal on micro-computers

By E.L. BIRK
Collegian Staff

University faculty, staff and possibly students will be able to purchase micro-computers at a significant discount after April 1 if Jake Bishop, contracts coordinator for the Massachusetts Higher Education Consortium, has his way.

The consortium comprises 51 universities and colleges including all Massachusetts public colleges and universities, and private schools connected with public schools through local consortiums such as the Five Colleges, Bishop said. The purchasing consortium procures all office and formitory furniture, all laboratory equipment and many maintanence supplies at the University of Massachusetts, he said.

More than 30 computer manufacturers and distributors are currently negotiating with Bishop for the right to the consortium market, he said.

"There's a lot of big bucks involved," he said. Bishop added that the two-year old contract negotiations are in a sensitive stage and declined to name any of the parties involved les the negotiations turn sour.

"Some of these guys are going to win and some aren't," he said.

Bishop, also director of procurement at UMass, founded the consortium takes part in more than 80 separate contracts with 130 vendors. Whether the micro-computers will be available to individuals not performing university-related work is still unclear, according to Conrad Wogrin, director of computer services at the University. Machines intended for use in classrooms could be purchased through the consortium discounted up to one third, Wogrin said.

"I think that it could get up to 35 percent but that would require us to handle 500 units or more," he said. Demand for computers and related equipment at the University could easily reach 500 units, Wogrin added.

Individual students may not enjoy the benefit of the consortium's purchasing power because of restrictions on the use of state funds. Suppliers might have a strong case against such use of funds, Wogrin said.

One possible method of routing the machines to individual students under the benefit of the consortium's buying power would be through the University Store, he said. As a part of the University, the University Store could purchase computers at the discounted rate and then offer them to students at a still lower than other retail stores, Wogrin said.

Further details of the contract, including which computer brands will be available and at what discount, should surface when half of the competing 30 suppliers are eliminated from the bidding over the next few weeks, Bishop said.

Counselors learn new criteria

By JIM FINKLE
Collegian Staff

Local high school counselors will know exactly how their students will be affected by proposed University admissions standard increases before they testify at a hearing on those increases today.

University of Massachusetts Freshman Admissions Director David G. Taggart will give counselors a pie chart showing the number of freshmen now at UMass who would be excluded from the University based on the criteria of the Regent's proposal.

Counselors from 22 area high schools will speak at the 10 a.m. hearing today at the Springfield Regional Education Center, 88 Massasoit Avenue, in West Springfield, Taggart said.

According to Taggart's figures, of the 1,371 students at the high schools in Hampden, Hampshire, Franklin and Berkshire counties who now attend UMass, 24.6 percent, or 338 students would be ineligible to attend the University. Twenty-four of those students would be excluded because of their performance on the SAT tests.

Under the regents proposal, students applying to UMass must have either a combined score of 800 and a high school class rank in the upper 40th percentile of their class, or a combined SAT score of 850 and a class rank in the upper 60th percentile, for acceptance. The plan would be phased in by 1987.

Begin ousts Sharon; Arens takes over

JERUSALEM (AP) — Moshe Arens, Israel's hawkish ambassador to Washington, accepted the post of defense minister yesterday in place of the ousted Ariel Sharon, who quit the ministry saying, "I am not leaving a beaten man."

The Knesset, Israel's Parliament, voted 61-56 to remove Sharon and reshuffle the cabinet of Prime Minister Menachem Begin. Begin will hold the defense portfolio until Arens is confirmed.

The Parliament debated the government's response to the recommendations of the Beirut massacre commission, which urged Sharon's removal. Sharon, who ran the Defense Ministry for 18 months, remains in the Cabinet as a minister without portfolio. He resigned the defense post after the Cabinet approved findings of an Israeli judicial commission that Sharon bore responsibility for allowing the Beirut massacre of Palestinians by Lebanese Christian militiamen Sept. 16-18.

Democrats devise plan to aid jobless

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Democratic leaders decided yesterday to add about $1 billion to President Reagan's proposed $4.3 billion recession relief package, approve it quickly, and then follow up with additional legislation of their own.

"We have sympathy in our hearts for those in the soup lines," Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., delcared as he announced his hope of passing a bipartisan bill through the House by next week.

"This is not the best bill we Democrats could write, but it may be the best bill we can enact into law," O'Neill conceded of the package approved by the president.

"...In this case, the people who want to see jobs and emergency help received the better deal."

Democrats might try to add $1 billion to Reagan's package for summer jobs, nutrition programs for mothers and children and weatherproofing low-income housing, O'Neill said.

Reagan refused all last year and early this year to consider any type of anti-recession jobs legislation. But he finally succumbed to congressional sentiment last week, dispatching top aides to the Capitol to present a plan that includes $250 million for food and shelter for the homeless, $1 billion in grants to local governments and the balance in expedited federal purchases and construction projects.

Settlement reached in EPA scandal

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a surprise turnabout, the administration reached a negotiated settlement yesterday with a whistleblower at the Environmental Protection Agency, who said afterward he now has evidence that EPA misdeeds go all the way to the White House.

Hugh Kaufman, whose allegations have triggered a half-dozen congressional investigations into EPA's $1.6 billion "superfund" program, called the settlement a victory both for him and for other agency employees who will be testifying before Congress in coming weeks.

"This should send a signal to all EPA employees that they can get protection if they testify," Kaufman said.

EPA attorneys would not comment on their surprise decision to settle with Kaufman. The agency's spokesman, Chris Rice, said EPA was preparing an answer to Kaufman's allegations of White House involvement in the Kaufman case.

The eight-point agreement came after three hours of closed door discussions. The EPA agreed to protect Kaufman's rights and Kaufman promised to reimburse the agency for personal long distance calls made at work.

Pentagon threatens to reduce excess bases

WASHINGTON — A key defense official says the Pentagon may haul out a list of proposed base closings and challenge congressmen to bear some of the brunt "if the heat gets heavy" for deep cuts in the military budget.

The official, who discussed the matter only on condition he not be identified, denied threatening Congress. But his message, in a recent interview, obviously was designed as food for political thought on Capitol Hill.

"We've got a list of bases we'd like to get rid of," he said. At the same time, he made clear that the list could be left to gather dust if members of the Senate and House don't delve too deeply into President Reagan's $238.6 billion military spending program for fiscal 1984.

Draft resisters plead innocent to assault

BOSTON — Two draft protesters pleaded innocent yesterday to charges of assaulting a U.S. marshal, and they claimed outside the courtroom that they were the ones attacked.

The two, arraigned separately in brief appearances yesterday before U.S. magistrates, are Edward J. Hasbrouck, 23, of Wellesley, and Elizabeth A. Davidson, 27, of Cambridge. They had been indicted Feb. 9.

"We were the ones who were assaulted by the officers," said Hasbrouck outside the courtroom yesterday. "Everything in the complaint is untrue."

Storm grips commuters; Death toll rises to 87

Millions of Eastern city dwellers struggled back to work yesterday through the residue of one of the nastiest blizzards in memory, with mounds of gray sludge blocking buses, stalling cars and delaying overcrowded commuter trains up to two hours.

The death toll from the Blizzard of '83, which dumped 2 to 3 feet of snow from North Carolina to New England on Friday and Saturday had climbed to 87.

Springfield cops hunt for escaped assailant

BRIDGEWATER — State police hunted yesterday for a Springfield man who escaped from Bridgewater State Hospital after being ruled unfit to stand trial for murder.

Correction officials said Antonio Rivera, 35, was found missing from his cell at 7:50 a.m. Sunday, and a trail of blood indicated he got out by sawing the bars on the cell window.

"He is still at large," said dispatcher Sally Squires at the Middleboro State Police barracks. "We have no further information on his whereabouts."

"We have put out posters and a teletype alert with his physical description. But nobody has picked him up yet."

Springfield police said Rivera had been sent to Bridgewater after being arrested Jan. 11, 1982, on a murder charge in the fatal stabbing of Rodney Pietro Cotto, 16, after a drug-related argument.

Hinckley pulls through; overdose investigated

WASHINGTON — Presidential assailant John W. Hinckley Jr. regained consciousness yesterday as authorities continued their quest over how he came by the chemicals that enabled his third apparent attempt at suicide since he has been in federal custody.

Hinckley, 27, had been taking the anti-depressant drug imipramine. But Wayne Pines, a spokesman for the mental hospital where Hinckley had been held before his latest brush with death, said patients are supposed to be under the watch of attendants whenever they take medication.

Hinckley was found semi-conscious Sunday on the floor of his room at St. Elizabeths Hospital, where he had been confined since his acquittal by reason of insanity last June. Officials said he was close to dying.

Licenses revoked for state driver violators

BOSTON — Boston has decided to play hardball with 50,000 parking scofflaws — if they don't pay up, the state won't let them renew their drivers' licenses or registration plates.

Alan A. MacKay, state registrar of motor vehicles, said yesterday that the state will wait for cities and towns to notify them that drivers are in the clear before giving them licenses.

Boston's Traffic and Parking Commissioner, John A. Vitagliano, said over the weekend the city will begin turning over the names of 50,000 motorists with unpaid tickets to the state Registry of Motor Vehicles.

MacKay said a driver or car owner will get the bad news they are on the list when they come into a registry office to renew their license or registration.

"We will tell him then we have him flagged," MacKay said.

Newscasters Brian Fitz Maurice and Kelly Green get ready to launch one of their mid-day newscasts for the Student Video Center.

Look out '60 minutes'

By GLEN GOLDSTEIN
Collegian Staff

The Union Video Center broadcast a live television news program yesterday at the University of Massachusetts as a joint project with the Collegian. "And there was much rejoicing," Jim Nelson, producer of the show said.

The show, which will appear weekdays at 12:30 p.m., will feature international, national, local, campus and sports news, along with a weather report. The news program will appear on TV screens in the lobby of the UMass Student Union and in front of The Hatch.

"We're trying to make the show unique," Nelson said. "There will be more offbeat news. We'd also like to run some interviews with students."

The news program will concentrate more on national news than the Collegian does, Nelson said.

Nelson laughed when asked to compare the news program to TV's "60 Minutes", or "The Bugs Bunny Road Runner Hour".

"I hope to produce some items in a video magazine format, along with the regular news," Nelson said in reference to "60 Minutes".

"We're not to be taken too seriously. We're not NBC or CBS. We try to have a good time. We want to make a show that's enjoyable to watch," Nelson added.

"It's about time some kind of video came to UMass. I'm excited about what we're doing, Brian Fitz Maurice, one of the programs co-newscasters said.

Using material supplied by the Collegian, Fitz Maurice and Kelly Green read the news on the debut of the program.

Two additional TV monitors will be installed soon. One will be located next to The Blue Wall, the other will be at the bottom of the escalator in the Campus Center, Nelson said.

The Union Video Center receives assistance with the news program from the Governors Program Council, the Collegian, the Campus Center Audio/Visual Office, and WMUA radio.

Stockies make preparations for agricultural convention

By DIANE SINICO
Collegian Correspondent

The Stockbridge School of Agriculture's Sixth Annual Professional Agriculture Convention, to be held this Wednesday in the Campus Center Auditorium, will cover topics from agriculture and horticulture to tractors and computers.

The event, traditionally held on the third Wednesday in February, is free and open to the public, and will last from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. The keynote address, by Frances Moore Lappe, will be given at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

Lappe is the author of several books including the best-seller Diet for a Small Planet and a co-founder, along with Dr. Joseph Collins, of the Institute for Food and Development located in San Franiisco. She will speak on "The Crisis in American Agriculture: What is it?"

The convention, the theme of which is "Agriculture and You," was organized by the appointed general chairperson, Sarah Cleveland, a Stockbridge senior majoring in fruit and vegetable crops, and six other chairpersons according to Cleveland.

The purpose of the convention is to give students an opportunity to meet with professional organizations and discuss business trends, new practices, problems of the profession and employment opportunities. Cleveland said preparations for the day's events began last September.

The Great Decisions '83 Series continues tonight with its third topic "Trade and Unemployment: Global Bread and Butter." Panelists from the University of Massachusetts faculty will include Michael Arbib, Computer and Information Science and Eric Einhorn, from the Political Science Department. Appearing from Smith College will be Charles Robertson of the Government department and Charles Staelin of the Economics department. Luther Allen of the UMass Political Science department will be moderating the event scheduled for 8 p.m. in the lounge of Webster House in Orchard Hill.

License snags bar opening

By GLEN GOLDSTEIN
Collegian Staff

A new bar, scheduled to open in the Mountain Farms Mall in February, might not open at all due to liquor license problems, Daniel Cowles, one of the owners of the new bar said.

Cowles, former manager of Poor Richard's III in Amherst, is trying to obtain a liquor license from the town of Hadley that was held by a bar called David's, which is now bankrupt. There is a limited number of liquor licenses available in Hadley.

Cowles new bar, to be called "Reasons" would occupy the same 5500 square foot space that David's occupied, Cowles liquor license application states.

The problem concerns ownership of the liquor license that Cowles wants. Hadley town counsel Charles Ksieniewicz believes that when David's went bankrupt, the town regained possession of the liquor license. The attorneys for David's are saying that the license is one of the assets retained by the bankrupt tavern.

"By the time that I get through with the legal fees to work this out, the liquor license might cost me $10,000," Cowles said. "I think that the regular fee for a liquor license in Hadley is only about $1,000," Cowles said.

Hadley's Board of Selectmen approved Cowles' application for a liquor license on Oct. 19, believing that the town had legal possession of David's old liquor license. The license application was then forwarded to the Alcoholic Beverage Control Commission (ABCC) in Boston for final approval, the license application states.

The ABCC has stopped action on the license application until the legal battle is over between David's and the town of Hadley, Ksieniewicz said.

A pre-trial conference was held on the issue three weeks ago, and a court date has been set for April, Ksieniewicz said.

"David's strongest argument is that they didn't get proper notice of the hearing for Cowles' application. It's a due process argument," Ksieniewicz said.

Herpes: more rampant in cities or campuses?

By TURA GUDMUNDSSON
Collegian Correspondent

(This is the second story in a five part series.)

Local and state officials disagree whether there is a possible correlation between a campus setting and student sexual behavioral patterns, and the increase noted in herpes-related visits to University of Massachusetts Health Services.

Herpes-related visits to the UMass Health Services have been steadily increasing in the past four years according to Barry Averill, Executive Director of the UMass Health Services.

Averill estimated the present maximum number of reported cases of genital and cold sore herpes in UMass to be 300.

While Averill maintained that in terms of catching the disease "college setting is not as risky as other segments of society," such as cities, or low socio-economic areas, Elizabeth Hastings, director of the Charles Circle clinic in Boston, which serves about 6,000 patients per year out of which 30 percent are students, disagrees.

"It is a generally-held assumption that you will find more sexual acitivity when you put 300 men and women in a dorm situation where they live together 24 hours a day, seven days a week, as opposed to the same, or older, population who lives in separate houses," Hastings said.

"My own opinion is that you have got a very sexually active group of people," said Hastings, noting that her clinic has been seeing an increase from no cases of herpes three years ago, to about 50 new cases per year, which includes more students than other sectors of the population seeking treatment.

Elizabeth Penny, a Nursing Advisor Specialist in the VD section of the State Department of Public Health in Boston, explained that the main age-risk for catching VD is between 15 to 30. The college population "is the age group where a lot more people are at risk, especially those who are sexually active with more than one partner."

Doctor Nelson Gantz, an associate professor of medicine and microbiology, and the director of the Sexually Transmitted Division of UMass Medical School in Worcester, agreed that "if there is more sex on campuses than elsewhere, then you are going to see a greater likelihood of sexually transmitted diseases, including herpes."

"What you need, to show a correlation between herpes increase and sexual activity on campuses, is a study of sexual activity frequency on campuses matched with an equal study of a similar socio-economic population outside the University," said Gantz.

What is more important, Gantz said, is that "sexually transmitted diseases are clearly related to the number of partners one has."

"It is easy to multiply the number of herpes cases," Gantz said, "because if you get it, and then have sex when it is contageous, with 10 guys or girls, then they all get it."

According to Penny, 75 percent have no idea they are infected. "From an epidimiological point of view if you have been sexually active and are under 25, the main probability is that you are infected, and therefore possibly infectious," Penny said.

"It is those who don't know they are infected who spread the infection the most," Penny said.

Speaking of students' sexual behavior patterns, Averill noted that from conversations with students and accounts from physicians and staff members at the Birth Control section of the Health Services, the predominant pattern seen at UMass is that of "serial partners relationships".

"People carry on sexual relationships for at least a few months or longer, and then they may change partners," said Averill.

"There are not that many multiple partner situations on campus as the media leads us to believe. Even among students there is a myth about how much sex people have in college," said Averill. "But that is not to say that there are no people who are having multiple partners."

Averill estimated that 40 to 60 percent of freshman students did not have sex at all, a figure that gradually decreases to 20 percent for the senior students. Accordingly, Averill maintained, students in general could not be called promiscuous.

Out of sixteen students interviewed by the Collegian at random in the Campus Center, nine agreed with the suggestion that herpes is more likely to be spread on campus as a result of students' general sexual behavioral pattern.

If students say they are promiscuous," said Hastings, "I would be inclined to believe them and would not ask the [illegible] administration.

Drum magazine to take MLK day to United Nations

By RHONDA SWAN
Collegian Correspondent

The observance of the birthday of the late Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. as a national holiday has been an issue of concern for Black Americans since his death in 1968.

However, almost fifteen years later, the issue has yet to be resolved. Nelson Stevens, Professor of Art of the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro American Studies believes this has gone by too long.

Professor Stevens, advisor to "Drum", the Black literary magazine produced by students of the Afro-American Studies Department and his staff are dedicating this year's issue of the publication in memory of Dr. King.

What makes this proposal special is instead of just appealing to a national audience, The "Drum" staff plans to take a copy of the magazine and present it to the United Nations in hopes of making King's birthday an international holiday.

For years the appeals of Black Americans to make January 15 a national holiday have fallen on the deaf ears of the U.S. Congress. This past January 15, over one hundred thousand Blacks gathered at the white house for this very purpose, but their efforts again, were to no avail.

Professor Stevens believes this can be changed. "We could make it (Jan. 15) a world holiday quicker," Stevens said. "The U.N. can vote easier when you consider who constitutes the world versus who constitutes the congress."

Professor Nelson Stevens of the Afro-Am Studies Dept. and the Drum magazine staff to take MLK day issue to the United Nations.

According to Stevens, Drum will be set up to facilitate a Martin Luther King Day. Fifty percent of the magazine will deal with King's life while the other half will consist of interviews with a number of prominent Blacks who will be giving their support to the holiday.

Among those scheduled to be interviewed will be the late Dr. King's widow, Corretta Scott King, former New York Congresswoman Shirley Chisolm, former United Nations Ambassador Andrew Young, Bill Cosby, Leroy Jones, Tony Brown, author Toni Cade Bombara, and Stevie Wonder.

In reference to the large number of distinguished Blacks who plan to support this effort Stevens said, "We ain't skipping nobody."

Among those mentioned, Stevie Wonder has had the greatest influence in furthering the cause for the holiday. Stevens credits Wonder with his own conception of the idea and says he just expanded on it hoping the holiday will be made an international one.

Plans for the representation of Drum to the United Nations for support of Martin Luther King day are tentative, and are being scheduled for after the magazine's release in May.

According to Stevens, "we've got to make a unified effort to make a Black holiday, Martin Luther King is the focal point for this position on January 15th."

Harlem Renaissance in retrospect

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

While the world was recovering from the ruins and ordeals of World War I, and while America faced a drastic decline in its national economy, blacks were experiencing a growing awareness of pride in their heritage. This period, taking part in the first half of the 20th century, is known as the "Negro or Harlem Renaissance" with foundation in the arts, especially in literature.

The principle force of the literary renaissance of the 1920's was Claude McKay, a Jamaican poet who came to the United States in 1912. During the race riots of 1919, McKay wrote, "If We Must Die", a protest poem which sets the keynote of the renaissance.

"If We Must Die" is an urgent call to blacks to become honored, thus long remembered. The poem also shows an expression of courage, a personal characteristic of the poet, and a never dying spirit in the battle for justice.

"If We Must Die" found a new meaning during World War II when Winston Churchill read its militant lines to the House of Commons.

Other famous poems by McKay are "Harlem Shadows", a lyric of pure compassion which first brought him fame in America, and the sonnet "Baptism", a fine expression of the courage to endure anguish.

The Harlem Renaissance was documented in 1925 by philosopher and scholar Alain Locke in his anthology The New Negro: An Interpretation.

Outstanding poets of the Harlem Renaissance other than McKay were novelist-poet Jean Toomer author of the novel Cane, and lyric poet Countee Cullen.

Later writers whose works were published during the Harlem Renaissance were Sterling Brown, critic, poet and scholar; Arna Bontemps, poet novelist and scholar; and Langhston Huges.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

'ARISE, SIR DUMP!'

Israel has lost it's world respect

Israel has managed to lose in the last year what it took over three decades to build up, world respect. It lost quite a bit with the "Peace for Galilee" Campaign, their invasion of Lebanon last June. It marked the first time that Israel went to war for reasons other than self-defense. Israel lost a lot of face in their new role as aggressor, which the world was not used to seeing. If the invasion didn't succeed in turning world opinion against them, then last fall's massacres at the Sabra and Chatilla refugee camps surely did.

While Israeli soldiers did not do the killing, (the Lebanese Christian Phalangists carried out the slaughter), it was Israel that sat idley by while the carnage happened. The man that was personally responsible for these two black marks in that nation's history, Defense Minister Ariel Sharon, resigned last week, and although his future role in Prime Minister Menachem Begin's cabinet is still in doubt, he still is a force to be reckoned with in Israeli politics.

Randolph T. Holhut

Sharon is Israel's equivalent to Alexander Haig. Like Haig, he was a military man who distinguished himself on the battlefield. Like Haig, he proved to be too controversial for his own good. And most especially like Haig, he was a tremendously ambitious person whose ambition helped to drive him from his office.

The events of the last year have all but destroyed Ariel Sharon. He says that he was planning the invasion of Lebanon from the very first day he became defense minister in 1981. The invasion did its job, effectively destroying the Palestine Liberation Organization's grip on Lebanon and destroying the threat the PLO had long plagued Israel with.

But soon after the invasion began, critics within Begin's cabinet blasted Sharon for using the invasion to gain glory for himself. Many Israelis criticized Sharon's role in the operation. When the massacres took place, Sharon was immediately implicated. He was anxious to make gains, and it was convenient to let the Phalangists, long time foes of the PLO and backed up by the Israelis, into the camps. It did not matter to Sharon that there was a strong probability that violence would occur, he just wanted to gain more ground.

When the Israeli commision began investigating the massacre last November, few cabinet ministers came to aid of Sharon. Many Israelis wanted to see him removed from the Begin government, so by the time the findings were released last week, Sharon's days in his role as defense minister were clearly numbered.

He made a little bit of a fuss, refusing to resign after the cabinet voted for his ouster, but he did eventually resign. The outcry was just too great for him to stay on, despite his stubborn nature. Begin has now shifted him to a lower-key position in the cabinet, minister without portfolio, but that still has the people upset. Most will not be satisfied until he is driven from the government, never to return.

But even if Sharon is driven from the Begin Government, it would be safe to speculate that he might come back. Military leaders never seem to fade from the political scene and given some time, you may see Sharon back in some governmental office. It will take some time, for the outcry against Sharon and his actions is loud and vehement. If there were any kind of justice, he would be tried for war crimes. It would not bring any real justice to the families of the people who were murdered in Sabra and Chatilla, but it would be a start. It would also be a start towards restoring Israel's self, and world, respect.

Justice, and the lack thereof

The act of ignoring the Student Government Association constitution by failing to appoint someone to the office of the Attorney General is just one in a number of incidents by which the interests of a decided few are promoted and the well being of the student body as a whole is ignored.

This lack of action on the part of Mr. Murphy is atrocious. He continues, as he has in the past many months of his less than positive administration, to fail to perform the duties and responsibilities of his office. The action, or lack thereof, is a slap in the face of every student which can invariably benefit from the services offered through the office of the Attorney General.

The problem does not lie in the fact that Mr. Murphy chooses not to appoint Randy Chapman to the office, who was unanimously and justifiably recommended by the Attorney General Search committee because of his experience in the office and his commitment to the student population. Rather, Mr. Murphy's arrogant and irresponsible manner is in not appointing at least someone to the office. This is what is disturbing.

Timmi W. Rudolph

A Writ of Mandamus has been filed with the judiciary. Such a document directs a student officer to carry out his duties. In the case of any responsible executive such a writ need never be filed and the duties would be performed in a reasonable amount of time. It is not the case here and it has not been the case in the past months of Mr. Murphy's term. His missing of meetings, his failure to comply with the propensity of duties inherent to the office of the presidency, his questionable activities, including the appointment of Elizabeth Hill to the office of Acting Attorney General, etc. The list goes on and on.

The list of misconduct is long, and with the failure of Mr. Murphy to comply with the writ, the list could grow longer. The list is far too long. It has been written past the pages of excusable conduct — now it spirals in a determined direction away from that which is in the best interests of the student body.

Reform is obviously needed — reform of the president's office through change of the statutes or through the exercise of the students' will through elections. Reform must also strike at the Student Senate, who in a less than a responsible manner tacitly condoned such action by the executive, to the point in aiding in the demise of the students. Changes must be made in the basic infrastructure of our less than reliable, less than responsible, and less than responsive student government. Deemed in such a poor light, the actions of President Murphy only appear to reinforce the bad name of the SGA in all its various aspects.

To legitimize the institution, checks and balances must be introduced and adhered to. To be respected, the SGA and its leaders must act in a respectable manner. To run effectively, the government must be placed in the hands of a realistic leadership. Reforms must be made, and the reforms must be deep. Only in this manner can our student government return to normalcy.

The failure to appoint a Student Attorney General is just one point in a case history devoted to student officers and the student government working against the students they are chosen to represent. The behavior on the part of President Murphy is intolerable and must be corrected. Perhaps, a Writ of Mandamus will promote such action.

No hard feelings Jim, but don't you owe the students something more?

Help lobby for Soviet Jewry

To the Editor:

I want to thank the Collegian for printing the article on our February 22 departure to Washington, D.C. for the February 23 Soviet-Jewry Lobby. I am writing this to also mention that any students who are not Jewish or who are not members of Hillel are also emphatically encouraged to come along with us and share in the support for the release of Soviet Jews.

Give your voice and values meaning and strength as you confront your congresspeople about the silenced oppression directed towards Jews in the Soviet Union – today – and each and every day in their lives. The time is NOW to do something about this situation. That is what this lobby is for: to unite and stand as "one": for what we truly know is morally right. How much longer can you stand to hear about senseless human freedom violations against innocent peoples? We will stand up tall and be heard. Your action does count; your voice will be listened to. We need numbers and we need them NOW. NOW more than at any other time. As the great sage Hillel once said, "If I am not for myself, who will be for me? If I am only for myself, who am I? If not now, when?"

Soviet Jews need you NOW more than ever. Lynn Kerew and Deborah Propper.

All student groups important

To the Editor:

On Monday, February 14, the Collegian published an article on the front page concerning nominations in the upcoming Student Government Association, Board of Governors, and Residential Committee elections. In this article, Mindy Ordway, is quoted as saying that the Residential Committee is "more important for undergraduates living on campus than the B.O.G. is".

I think it is imperative that Miss Ordway and all others realize that each student organization on this campus is as important as the next one. I was amazed to see that Miss Ordway made a biased statement such as this when she is in a position, as election coordinator, which requires a clear and open mind.

I would like to stress the fact that students benefit from both the Residential Committee and the Board of Governors and all eligible members of the UMass community should consider the positions available on both.

Don't complain, get registered

To the Editor:

1984 is just around the corner. So what, you say? So in 1984 we once again decide what great leader we wish to put in the White House, and I'm tired of hearing all the bellyaching about the President. That doesn't mean I don't agree with you, I'm speaking to those of you who complain yet aren't even registered to vote. All I have to say to you is, you got what you deserved!

Don't make me laugh

COMEDY NIGHT AT THE BLUE WALL
Tuesday, February 8
Blue Wall

By ANDREW GORDON
Collegian Staff

An evening with professional comedians is pretty much a guarantee of a good time. Last year's "Catch a Rising Star" night at the Blue Wall forced people to hold their necks, they were laughing so hard. Last week's follow-up comedy night at the Wall was almost as good. Several external factors, certainly not the entertainment, held the evening back, however. But I'll get to those later.

The main guests of the evening were three Boston-based comedians: Steve Sweeney, Jack Gallagher and Barry Crimmins. Opening for them were two better-than-usual local comics.

Kevin Brown was first up with a funny routine about birth control, taking blood and other medical topics. Brown's delivery was smooth, he communicated well with the audience and some of the subtler aspects of his routine (like an impression of an old nurse) were terrific. A bit about his roommate having sex while he was in the room also went over well. Linda Brooks was the second local comedian and she, too, surprised me. With her serious looks, I thought there was no way she could make me laugh; but she did. Brooks combined comedy with a social commentary, particulary in a bit about a nice girl/bad girl.

When Steve Sweeney came on, it was all over; time to hold your throats. Sweeney, a regular at Ding Ho's comedy club in Cambridge, was one of the comedians here last year. He is a master of characterizations, which he displayed in such hilarious bits as an Indian trying to pick up a valley girl and as an Irish family. He also did great impressions of Ed King, Kitty Dukakis ("meow"), Jack Nicholson as Mr. Rogers and Richard Burton reciting the theme from The Beverly Hillbillies.

After Sweeney, Jack Gallagher took the stage and even though M.C. Terry Slagle shot any kind of comedic momentum Sweeney had going, Gallagher quickly got everyone laughing again. A former student here, he recounted stories of driving a P.V.T.A. bus and of constant partying (Tuesday morning?: Let's get shitfaced"). He also did a great routine about getting drunk when you were young ("You didn't need bars, or parties. You had a better place — the woods") and of the side effects when you got home: having to talk to your parents so they wouldn't think you were drunk, making food, bedspins ("Whoaa. Somebody lasso that light fixture").

Barry Crimmins was the last on and he, too, was a riot. More topical than the others, he talked about Reagan, Watt and the possibility of impending nuclear destruction. Unfortunately, much of his act consisted of abusing and taking abuse from a certain idiot heckler.

Which brings me to one of the external factors that could have ruined the night. Do hecklers serve a positive purpose? They add spice to the show, sure. And they act as a butt to the comedians' often acid tongues. But mostly they are just obnoxious twits, as Crimmins explained after the show. "...they're a pain in the ass. You're trying to concentrate on your own act and build some sort of rapport with the audience and you've got some asshole screaming shit at you." Sweeney, who had to break the continuity of one of his routines to trade insults with the heckler, echoed this feeling.

Nevertheless, Blue Wall comedy nights are unbeatable. Another good job by the Governor's Program Council.

PLASTIC SURGERY DISASTERS (Alternative Tentacles)
Dead Kennedys

By RICHARD NANGLE
Collegian Staff

For sheer brutality, hatred and just good clean fun nothing equals a Dead Kennedys album. The DK's current release almost lives up to their first effort, Fresh Fruit For Rotting Vegetables. But I really can't fault them for that. It's hard to repeat perfection.

What separates the Dead Kennedys from most hardcore bands is that not only is the music somewhat melodious, but you can also understand the lyrics. I know it's only February, but right now Plastic Surgery Disasters is my candidate for album of the year.

Perhaps the most talked about song on this album is "Terminal Preppie." It's my contention that a good majority of students who attend The Pub on Wednesday nights would see themselves painfully illustrated in the lyrics of Jello Biafra here if they weren't wasting their time listening to James Taylor or Rush.

"John Belushi's my hero/ I lampoon him and I ape him/ my news of the world/ comes from Sports Illustrated/ I'm proud of my trophies/ like my empty beer cans/ stacked in rows up the wall/ to impress all my friends/ no, I'm not here to learn/ I just want to get drunk/ and major in business/ and be taught how to fuck."

Remember as Oscar Wilde said: "There's only one thing worse than being talked about and that's not being talked about."

"Forest Fire" is this album's "I Kill Children." Lead singer Jello gloats as rich people die in their expensive homes in this little ditty. "Windows covered with bars/ Fences spiked with barbed wire/ never looked so helpless/ engulfed in flames/ cameras watching the walls/ don't forget the dogs/ now you're trapped in your prison/ how you gonna get out."

Then there's "Halloween" which could well be Jello's best lyrical effort yet. Again UMass students should take note, if you dare.

Here Biafra is not so concerned with Halloween as he is with what happens during the other 364 days of the year. How many soon to be business grads would see themselves in these lyrics? After Halloween "you run back and stuff yourselves in rigid business costumes/ only at night is your leather uniform exhumed/ why don't you take your social regulations and shove 'em up your ass?"

On side two of "Plastic Surgery Disasters" the Kennedys try their hand at some ballad like thrashers. Some of them work and some of them don't. But it's a noble effort and shows the band's capacity for growth. "Moon Over Marin" would have to qualify as the most unique hardcore song I've ever heard. Maybe Casey Kasem's will give it a shot on American Top 40.

Included with the record is another example of Biafran poster art. The booklet is not quite as good as his previous effort but again, it's hard to repeat perfection. I recommend this record for any serious music lover, but be careful. Everytime I listen to this album I manage to break something in my apartment.

Do you like the album cover?

The UMass women's swimming team hosts their last regular season meet tonight, Tuesday, against Mt. Holyoke at 7:00 p.m. at Boyden Pool.

Stockbridge coach Leaman happy out of the spotlight

By JUDY KELLIHER
Collegian Correspondent

He can often be seen walking around the Boyden basketball courts. Sometimes he walks through the streets of Amherst on nice days. His walking routine averages thirty miles a week. He is Jack Leaman.

Leaman is a name synonymous with the once powerhouse UMass basketball program. For thirteen years, he was at the helm. He coached UMass to six NIT tournaments, as well as mentoring the renowned Julius Erving. Now Leaman watches UMass play from the Curry Hicks stands.

Thirteen years is a long time to be a head coach for any team. Especially for a revenue generating sport where the pressure to win is extremely high. Leaman had some successful and not so successful seasons. After coaching 343 games and a countless number of practices, he left the UMass program.

Now the pressure is gone. Leaman keeps himself very busy these days. When he's not teaching golf classes at UMass, he is either coaching the women's golf team or coaching the Stockbridge men's basketball team, which is his prime concern now. Some say this is a step down, but Leaman doesn't see it that way.

"It's easier to coach average athletes than great ones," Leaman said. He believes that the average player leaves room for improvement. They seem willing to work harder to improve the skills they lack.

There are obvious differences between the UMass program and the Stockbridge one.

"The Stockbridge team is in between an organized varsity program and an informal intramural program," Leaman said.

Some differences are that Stockbridge has no postseason tournaments to look forward to. There's no recruiting, no long road trips, and they have a long layoff for the month of January.

Sometimes there's not even enough men to practice full court. Despite these obstacles, Leaman has led the Stockbridge team to an impressive two year 21-0 record. They play junior colleges and some area junior varsity college teams.

Since Stockbridge has only a two year program, basketball is more of a diversion from everyday academic life for the players. Leaman believes that this is an advantage for the players.

"It's tough to work hard and succeed. Basketball can put pride in them to perform at a higher level. Playing offers the players another chance for success," he said.

Leaman cares for his team. You can see it when he runs practice or gives instructions during a game. You can hear it when you ask him how they're doing. Leaman is a very knowledgeable coach. With many years of sharing that knowledge, he has helped people grow outside of their academic life. His good nature and sense of humor are a nice mix with the discipline a coach must employ. Jack Leaman is a good man to have on your side.

Authors Note: The Stockbridge basketball team plays Wed. night at 7:30 at the Curry Hicks Cage.

UMass sophomore Dan Conway makes a cut during action earlier this year. Conway took two seconds for the skiers this past weekend.

UMass men skiers take a first and third over weekend

By MATT LUCZKOW
Collegian Correspondent

LINCOLN, N.H. — After four weekends of tournament competition, the University of Massachusetts men's ski team remains in first place in the New England Intercollegiate Ski Conference (NEISC).

This past weekend at Loon Mountain, the Minutemen won the giant slalom behind Plymouth State and Boston College.

In Saturday's giant slalom race, six UMass racers finished in the top twenty, out of a field of seventy racers.

UMass won the race despite the serious injury to one of the team's best skiers, Dave Rossi. Rossi went off the side of the course and into the woods when he apparently lost control of his skis. He will be out indefinitely.

Massachusetts just nipped Plymouth State 375.40-377.31 to win the giant slalom. Boston College took third place (383.32), while Amherst, Brown, Connecticut, and Trinity took fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh place, respectively.

Sophomore Dan Conway (73.83) led the Minutemen with a second place finish. Conway trailed Plymouth rival Doug Karwoski (73.21), who captured the race. Bill Smaine of Plymouth took third place, ahead of Minuteman Brian Prindle (fourth).

Also skiing well for UMass were Kris Vanderzee (8th place), Bob Faigel (10th), Jon Segal (11th) and Jay Dube(18th).

In Sunday's long giant slalom, UMass was dealt a rare upset as Plymouth State and BC finished ahead of the third place Minutemen.

Karwoski (Plymouth), again, won the race, his fourth of the season, by outdistancing Minutemen skier Conway, for the fourth time this winter.

UMass did well in the 70 man field as Jon Segal (8th place) and Tim Enright (11th place) led the locals. Dube (18th), Faigel (20th), and Dave Greenberg (22nd) also helped the Minuteman cause.

The skiers will be back in action at home this weekend as they will host the last meet of the regular season at Berkshire East in Charlemont. This will be the last race of the season before the upcoming NEISC league championships to be held at Waterville Valley in Plymouth, New Hampshire.

The conference to watch for this year: Big East

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

While our own University of Massachusetts men's basketball team toils in the Atlantic 10 conference along with such eastern powers as St. Joseph's, Temple, and West Virginia, the Atlantic 10 is being overshadowed here in New England and on the East coast by the biggest and baddest conference in college basketball today: the Big East.

The young (only three years old) Big East had five of its nine teams in the latest AP Top 20. Even the Atlantic Coast Conference, long the bad boys on the East Coast, cannot match that record at this moment.

The Big East also had three teams in the final eight last year. It has come of age.

That was especially apparent in Villanova's thrilling victory over former number one North Carolina this past weekend. The hustling Wildcats ambition toppled over the mystique and awesome tradition of the Tar Heels. Not to mention some fine play from John Pinone, one of the best and toughest centers in the game today. The Wildcats, ranked eighth in the country, have the tools to go all the way.

St. John's is also putting on a superb show down in New York this season posing a 20-2 record while only losing to Boston College and Pitt. The Redmen and Chris Mullins are in the driver's seat for this year's Big East title and the championship tourney will be in their backyard — Madison Square Garden.

But, you cannot forget John Thompson and those Georgetown Hoyas. They have struggled a bit this year, but it is February now and the Hoyas have run up an impressive record the past two years during this month. Patrick Ewing is dominating and the rest of his young team are maturing. They'll be tough.

St. John's is ranked sixth, Georgetown 14th and Syracuse is 17th with Boston College 18th. Syracuse, led by Leo Rautins, is a senior dominated squad that plays tough, exciting basketball. The same can be said of the Eagles, and Michael Adams. Nobody thought BC would do this well this year without John Bagley.

It's certain. The biggies from the midwest and the East will have to watch out for the Big East this year. Nevada, Indiana, Virginia and UNC will have to be on their toes because the Big East will be represented in the final four. One, if not more of the ranked five, will be there in New Mexico come March.

Billy 'how long will he last' Martin is back

By SCOTT HOOD
Collegian Staff

Like the "Thing That Wouldn't Leave," Billy Martin has returned to New York to manage the Yankees for the third time. you just knew it had to happen, didn't you?

Rumored since the end of the 1982 season, Martin officially became, in January, the fourth manager George Steinbrenner has hired in the last year. Replacing Clyde King, who replaced Gene Michael, who replaced Bob Lemon, who started the frolics at the start of last season, Martin will earn about $500,000 per year for five years, the largest managerial contract in major league history.

The burning question is: How long will it last? Martin's previous tenures as Yankee manager lasted three years (Aug. 1, 1975-July 24,1978) and four months (June 18, 1979-Oct. 29, 1979). In his managerial career, Martin has directed five different American League teams. Besides the Yankees, they include Minnesota, Detroit, Texas, and Oakland. With the A's, he guided a team that had finished with the worst record in the league in 1979 and led them to the Western Division title in the strike-shortened 1981 season.

Martin and Steinbrenner have promised good relations this time and open communication to avoid the numerous misunderstandings of the past.

Nevertheless, skepticism abounds in New York. Several area newspapers and radio stations are running contests in which the participants try to correctly guess the exact date that Martin will be fired this season. Even Joe Piscapo of Saturday Night Live is getting into the act, having announced his own "Guess when Billy will be fired" contest, in January, during his regular sports report on "SNL Newsbreak."

Steinbrenner, who has had ten managers in his ten years as Yankee owner, has dramatically rebuilt a team that finished one game out of last place in 1982.

With the one year experiment emphasizing speed and defense a dismal failure, power is back in good graces in the Big Apple. A lineup featuring Steve Kemp, Don Baylor, Dave Winfield, Graig Nettles, Roy Smalley, and Lou Piniella certainly doesn't lack longball talent.

Combine that with adequate starting pitching featuring Ron Guidry, Dave Righetti, Comer, Shirley, and Rudy May, and no one can criticize Steinbrenner for building a bad team.

There are many baseball people who feel Steinbrenner was forced into hiring Martin to revive interest in the team in New York. No one has ever doubted the baseball mind of Martin, but his temper and his ego are another story. If Martin and Steinbrenner can finally get along with each other, then the beneficiaries will be the baseball fans of New York. If not, the optimism entering this season could quickly turn sour; a la 1982.

Proposals heard for fee increases

By MARK J. WELCH and LAURA YEE
Collegian Staff

The annual Student Government Association Fee Review held the last two nights was clouded by uncertainty about the exact impact of the Trust Fund Management Policy approved last week by the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees.

But students and administrators went through the motions of discussing the fine points of each fee-based trust fund's budget request, despite the near-certainty that all the requests will be revised in the coming days and weeks to reflect the "full costing" requirement included in the Trustee policy passed February 9.

The increases requested, including one fee decrease, total $35, but budget managers offered estimates of the full costing impact which totalled over $70 extra, so that student fees could rise over $100 next year.

A proposed $30 per year increase in the cost of dormitory rooms was justified by Ann Koski, Assistant Director of Finance for Housing Services. Koski explained that the increased income would be used to increase student security services, staff training and summer staff, while continuing ongoing maintenance programs in the dorms.

But Koski estimated that the 2.4 percent full-costing charge would require an additional increase of $33 per student per year, for a total increase of $63 per student. Students now pay $1212 per year to live in most dorms.

Food Services Financial Manager Jim Weaver said that no fee increase would be needed next year, and that a number of renovation projects would be started. Included would be over $400,000 worth of renovations to Franklin Dining Commons, Worcester Snack Bar, and Hampden and Berkshire Dining Commons, according to Marie Cappadona, Director of Food Services.

Weaver said that the need for a full-costing reserve would cost each student on the 14-meal plan $26 more than the $1087 now being paid.

University Health Services Executive Director Barry Averill explained that a $10 increase in the $162 Health Services fee would cover increases due to inflation. Health Services will also increase the cost for most prescriptions to $1, up from the 50¢ now charged, Averill said.

Financing for South Africa visit questioned

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

A motion will be made at tonight's meeting of the Undergraduate Student Senate concerning the use of University funds in botany professor Robert Wilce's recent trip to South Africa.

Wilce was awarded $600 by the Faculty Research Council last January to attend to Sandy Beach Eco-System Congress, at which 33 nations were present.

Though the motion itself, which was written yesterday by a committee of concerned botany students, student senators and the acting Director of Third World Affairs Gary Lee, will not be released before the meeting, student senator Mindy Chateauvert discussed the proposal's content.

"The motion principally involves the fact that University funds were used to help facilitate the trip," said Chateauvert, who is also a member of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy's (SCERA) Anti-Racism Team.

"Our contention is that the funds probably came out of student pockets or the state treasury and should not have been used," she said.

Chateauvert said the group composing the motion was not against the pretext of Wilce's trip, which she termed an "intelligent exchange of ideas," but is disputing the fact the trip was connected with the University.

"A precedent was set by divestment (of University funds)," she said. "We already said we're not putting money into South Africa. Why are we putting it back "

The divestment of University funds from American corporations in South Africa began in 1977 and was completed several years ago, Chateauvert said.

Andrew Davis, a graduate student who accompanied Wilce to the congress, expressed in a Collegian column Monday his view of the situation.

"My reasons for going to South Africa were purely scientific and professional. I went to educate and be educated in science. For me, attending meetings in South Africa in no way lent support, directly or indirectly, to the South African government or its policies," Davis stated.

Davis was not available for comment on the issue of the trip's fundings.

At an informal meeting held last week to discuss the implications of the South African excursion, Wilce said he was not aware of any controversy in the Faculty Research Council regarding his request for a University grant.

UPC to request backing for stadium concert plan

By TAMI BORTON
Collegian Staff

The Union Program Council (UPC) will present its Spring Festival 1983 proposal at the Undergraduate Student Senate meeting tonight and request that $150,000 be encumbered for the event, according to Bill Prichett, UPC talent coordinator.

The encumbered expenses represent a loan from the senate to cover the cost of production for the show, said Lisa Potter, SGA treasurer. Although a net surplus is projected by the proposal, the agreement would make the senate responsible for any deficits.

The UPC proposal, which has been tentatively approved by Vice Chancellor Dennis L. Madson, is for a Spring Concert to be held May 14 in Alumni Stadium.

"Using the stadium will allow us to present a show which would not be successful in one of the University's halls," Mike Akrep, stage manager said.

However, if talent capable of drawing a large crowd cannot be booked, the show will not be held in the stadium, Prichett said.

"The Pond Series last spring replaced a stadium show for both political reasons and the fact we didn't have big enough talent," Akrep said.

"When Santana cancelled their performance in the stadium two years ago, we replaced them with less known talent and subsequently lost money," Akrep said.

Projected total expenses for the production are $199,000. Funding from ticket revenue, an Arts Council grant and the Student Activities Trust Fund is expected to total $202,000, according to the proposal.

"A lot of the expenses of production are not incurred until after the show, when ticket revenue will have been collected, meaning we can float the $49,346 remaining after the funds are encumbered," Barry Claxton, production manager, said.

No talent has been booked for the show at this time, Prichett said.

"This is because most bands run tours in the summer and agents have not been making engagements yet," he said. If no talent is booked by April 18, we will produce an alternative show," Prichett said.

Ticket prices will be $10 for undergraduates, $12 for graduate students and $15 for five college students and alumni. Projected sales will be 12,000 tickets to undergraduates, 1,000 to graduate students and 3,000 to five college students and alumni.

Texas flight hijacked south of the border

NUEVO LAREDO, Mexico — A man who said he was Iranian and demanded to go to Cuba hijacked a commuter airplane carrying 20 people yesterday and forced it to land in Mexico, authorities said.

"We understand that he has released six passengers, the six females," said Mark Connell, vice chairman of Rio Airways. He said he did not know if the hijacker was armed.

Connell said Flight 252, en route to Dallas-Fort Worth Regional Airport, was hijacked about 11:15 a.m. CST, shortly after take off from the Central Texas town of Killeen.

Federal Aviation Administration spokesman Dick Stafford said in Washington that the lone hijacker forced the plane to land at Nuevo Laredo, across the border from Laredo, Texas. There he demanded that a plane be made ready to fly him to Havana.

He said that the company learned of the hijacking when the crew notified the operations desk at Killeen.

There were no reports of injuries. Connell said the FBI and Mexican authorities were negotiating with the hijacker.

Connell said the plane was a 48-passenger DeHavilland DHC-7 propeller plane and was carrying 15 passengers, three crew members and two company employees.

Memphis merger ends Knoxville bank failure

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — United American Bank of Knoxville, declared insolvent in the fourth-largest commercial bank failure in U.S. history, reopened yesterday after a $70.5 million merger with First Tennessee Corp. of Memphis.

Federal regulators on Monday let First Tennessee, the state's biggest bank holding company, acquire UAB-Knoxville hours after the state's banking commissioner declared it insolvent because of multi-million-dollar loan losses.

UAB-Knoxville was the flagship of the five-bank empire of flamboyant millionaire Jake Butcher, twice a Democratic candidate for Tennessee governor who arranged financing for the 1982 World's Fair here.

Butcher lost his chairmanship in the Knoxville bank, and was removed as chief executive of United American Bank in Lexington, Ky.

Steve Woodrough, regional counsel for the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. in Atlanta, announced the merger late Monday.

The banks were free to open after Knox County Chancellor H. David Cate signed the papers shortly before 9 a.m. yesterday after FDIC approval of the merger.

Haitian policeman fires on float during parade

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — A police man sprayed a Carnival parade float with machine-gun fire after a bandleader aboard the float stopped the televised procession and announced he would play a song "for the underdeveloped nations of the world."

As the TV audience watched Monday night, the policeman ordered the bandleader to keep moving, an argument ensued, and the policeman opened fire. There was no indication that anyone was hit.

Local news media did not report the incident, the videotape of the parade was not rebroadcast Tuesday morning, and the Ministry of Information refused to acknowledge that the shooting occurred.

Victim identifies man as alleged van rapist

NORTHAMPTON — A Hampshire College student, testifying in a rape trial, has identified a Belchertown man as one of two men who she alleges abducted her last Patriot's Day and beat and raped her.

The 19-year-old woman told a jury Monday that defendant Robert Manning, 27, was a passenger in a van that stopped last April as its occupants first asked directions and then forced her into the van.

Authorities allege Manning and his brother, Lawrence, 30, of Holyoke, abducted the student from the campus of the Amherst college and raped her as they cruised country roads.

Both brothers have pleaded innocent.

A trial for both men was cut short last year after Lawrence tried to slash his wrists in the Hampshire County jail. Lawrence was sent to Bridgewater State Hospital as authorities prepared to prosecute his brother alone in Hampshire County Superior Court.

Immune system cure achieved for first time

BOSTON — For the first time, doctors have cured a deadly assault on the body's immune system, saving the life of a week-old baby with an experimental treatment called monoclonal antibodies.

"We were able to stop what was clearly a fatal reaction," said Dr. Fred Rosen of Children's Hospital Medical Center in Boston.

The child developed the deadly reaction following a blood transfusion because of a rare birth defect: He had no thymus gland.

But many other people develop the reaction, known as graft-versus-host disease, after bone marrow transplants used to treat leukemia and other diseases. Rosen said the new treatment holds great promise in reversing the often-fatal complication in these patients.

Rosen said that newborn Bryan Ahlers of Buffalo, N.Y., is the first patient saved from severe graft-versus-host disease with monoclonal antibodies.

The 8-day-old infant was brought to the hospital last Thursday with the first stage of this disease, a lobster-red rash.

Such a condition is grave. Ordinarily, the victim's blood cells are damaged, and he bleeds to death.

Soviet missile test may violate SALT

WASHINGTON — The Soviet Union has fired a new intercontinental ballistic missile in a test which could raise questions about whether Moscow is violating the unratified SALT II nuclear arms treaty, U.S. intelligence sources said yesterday.

Officials said a small, solidfuel missile was launched Feb. 8 from Plesetsk and that preliminary analysis of information picked up by American monitoring equipment suggests it may have been the first successful test of a second new Soviet ICBM.

"It was a missile we haven't seen before," said one of the sources.

The SALT II treaty specifies that the Soviet Union and the United States may flight-test and deploy only one new type of ICBM, which must be a light one, according to a July 21, 1979, letter signed by then-Secretary of State Cyrus Vance in submitting the treaty to President Carter.

Justice of the Peace holds hospital nuptials

NORTHAMPTON — At this wedding the justice of the peace wore white — gauze, tape and plaster.

Presiding from his hospital bed in a nightgown speckled with red hearts, William O'Riordan heard Raymond and Joelle Boyr Thibodo promise to be faithful "in sickness and in health" during visiting hours on Valentines Day.

The 33-year-old justice of the peace has been in traction in Cooley Dickinson Hospital since Feb. 3 when his car skidded on a flooded road and pitched into a ravine. O'Riordan suffered a dislocated hip and shoulder.

Unwilling to put off the ceremony or find another person to officiate, the Thibodos brought the wedding to O'Riordan's hospital room, decorated for the occasion with red hearts and cupid cut-outs.

Marrying people is one of the rewards of being a justice of the peace, said O'Riordan, whose full-time job is chief probation officer for the Hampshire Probate Court.

"It's great to see people on the street afterwards, probably because my regular job involves divorce," he said. "It's a nice outlet from my regular job."

Police fail to capture 'fanatic' tax protester

HEATON, N.D. — About 100 police officers, using a National Guard armored personnel carrier and firing tear gas, stormed a farmhouse yesterday in a futile search for a "fanatic" tax protester suspected of killing two U.S. marshals.

"We have searched the house and there is no evidence of the fugitive in there," said FBI agent Richard H. Blay. He declined to say whether authorities found evidence that 63-year-old Gordon Kahl had spent any time in the house since the slayings Sunday.

In Fargo, U.S. Attorney Rodney Webb said some weapons and ammunition were found in the home, although he refused to elaborate. He also declined to say what direction the search might take.

BKΦ RUSH TONIGHT

What's Open Rush?

A time to meet the brotherhood and see the house in an informal and non-committal atmosphere. We encourage all University men who are interested in fraternities or want more than just a degree for spending four years at UMass. Even if you are content with the dorms, come down and meet us, you may change your mind about frats, specifically BKΦ, as did many of us. There's no obligation and it only takes a short time. Don't narrow yourself down to one choice. Go to all of the rush parties to see which house is best suited to your needs. Ask questions about the living conditions, social activities, sports, reputations, food, etc. Ask upperclassmen on your floor to suggest a few houses to start looking at and their respective reputations.

Faculty Senate plans three part curriculum vote

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

Editor's note: This is the second of a series of articles on the General Education proposal.

In an effort to allow for better discussion and understanding of the General Education Curriculum proposal, the University of Massachusetts Faculty Senate will vote on the measure in three parts, rather than treat it as one proposal.

This proceedure is not unusual "with such a complex and lengthy report," according to James Leheny, secretary of the senate.

The decision to vote on the proposal in three parts was made jointly by the Ad-Hoc Committee on General Education and the Rules Committee, according to Otto Stein, chairman of the Rules Committee. All three votes will be taken on March 17.

"We thought in order to have the most effective and thorough discussion possible it would be better to do it this way," Stein said.

"There is no rule that says we can't keep discussing the issue even if the proposal doesn't get passed."

The proposal is not "one total package, but is composed of many facets," he said.

The first part of the proposal will be the measure calling for the replacement of the "C", "D" and "E" distribution (core) requirements with the Breadth of Knowledge and Quantitative Reasoning requirements.

The second vote will be on the proposed Integration of Knowledge component of the curriculum. The senate will then vote on the proposed administrative structure for General Education.

Ellen Nylen, task coordinator for the student committee on General Education, said the senate is likely to approve the first measure, but may not approve the second and third measures.

"There has been a lot of talk going around that they will not be able to agree on administrative structure and the Freshman Seminar," Nylen said.

Nylen said while she hopes the senate approves all three measures, it would not be "the worst thing in the world," if they do not.

"As long as the senate realizes that the discussion must go on regardless of the outcome of the vote, I think the students and faculty will benefit," she said.

Stein said even if the proposal, or parts of the proposal, is not approved by the senate, discussions on general education could go on "indefinitely."

"There is no rule that says we can't keep discussing the issue even if the proposal doesn't get passed. The proposal could go back to the originating committees if it is not passed," he said.

Media exploits herpes epidemic

By TURA GUDMUNDSSON
Collegian Correspondent

Editor's Note: This is the third of a five part series.

A few weeks after Time magazine featured an article on herpes this summer, some women residents of the Southwest residential area at the University of Massachusetts started covering toilet seats with toilet paper.

But, when rumors were spreading that there was an epidemic of herpes on campus, and that one third of the sexually active population at UMass had the disease, Melville Resident Assistant Peggy O'Neil requested a workshop on herpes from University Health Services.

While the media's focus on herpes has created unnecessary fears about herpes, it has also led to an increase in the number of cases of the disease reported according to local and state officials who deal with the problems of herpes.

In addition, all sources agreed that due to the present incurable nature of the disease, making herpes a reportable disease by law to the Department of Public Health would not help to keep the spreading of herpes under control.

State officials and local sources said in order to decrease the fears and prevent the spreading of herpes, an increase in proper education about the disease is needed.

The media's sudden interest in herpes started when the Atlanta Center for Disease Control released an estimate that 20 million Americans have genital herpes, a venereal disease that is transmitted primarily through sexual contact.

There are two genetically different types of Herpes Simplex viruses, I and II. In the past Herpes Simplex I was associated with herpes above the belt-line (cold sore primarily), and Herpes Simplex II with genital herpes. It is now evident that HSI can cause genital herpes through oral-genital sexual contact.

Herpes has been called incurable because once it infects the body it settles for life in either a spinal, or cervical ganglion, from which it can become reactivated periodically.

The disease is contagious when shedding occurs whether people have lesions (sores) or not. Authorities are not clear as to what causes reactivation, but a correlation has been made between reactivation and stress, menstruation or changes of environments.

Articles such as the one in the August 2, 1982 issue of Time magazine, "highlight the scary parts of the disease," said Debbie Edelman, a health educator in the University Health Services, who conducts the herpes workshops and consults with individuals who may have herpes.

"They use herpes to sell their magazine and create phobias by not giving out all the facts and therefore misinforming the public," Edelman said. She said the Time article did not mention that many healthy babies are born to women with herpes.

Jane McCusker, an assistant professor in the Department of Public Health who teaches a course on epidimiology, said "there is a lot of inadequate knowledge about herpes which is old wives' tales."

From her courses, McCusker said there is "a lot of incomplete information. People's knowledge is at the level of newspapers, which make herpes seem more serious by saying that you cannot get rid of it."

Boston Public Health official Elizabeth Penny, who works as a health nursing advisor specialist in the Venereal Disease Section, said, "When the media got hold of herpes it played it up inappropriately.

"The media takes a concept and does not follow it through to its epidimiologic conclusions, leaving the public with the notion that it is a devastating disease. It is not. Using the word 'incurable' brings to people's mind the notion of cancer," Penny said.

General Education to be debated

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Correspondent

The Undergraduate Student Senate will consider "a major presentation" on the General Education Curriculum proposal at tonight's meeting, according to Speaker of the Senate Sharon Davies.

Assistant Provost for Undergraduate Education Johnetta Cole will speak on the proposal, along with Faculty Senate member Charles Hutchinson and the task coordinator for the student committee on General Education, Ellen Nylen.

"They'll run through the newly-revised proposal, and show how it affects different departments," Davies said.

The presentation will also include a history of the General Education movement at the University of Massachusetts, a discussion of the problems with the current core curriculum program at the University, and a student perspective of the proposal, Davies said.

Associate Provost Cole will begin the presentation with a local history of the General Education Curriculum, and a discussion of some of the major issues in General Education.

"I will give a very brief presentation on the history of General Education," said Cole, adding that she wants to show "how our actions on this campus connect with the national movement in General Education."

"The bulk of the presentation will be made by Professor Hutchinson," said Cole. "He will walk the Undergraduate Student Senate through our new proposal. He has a very sophisticated presentation."

Ellen Nylen, task coordinator for the student committee on General Education, will discuss what effect the proposal will have on student life in the future.

Nylen says that the presentation will be, "real informal — we're hoping that it's going to create discussion."

Some revisions, and an addition, to the Student Government Association (SGA) bylaws, will also be considered tonight, said Davies. A new bylaw for the Student Center For Education Research and Advocacy (SCERA) and "a newly-revised personnel policy for the SGA," will be considered in detail, according to Davies.

Grad Senate vote opposes S. Africa

By SEAN CASEY
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Graduate Student Senate last night passed a resolution which in effect expressed its disapproval of University funding of a professor's recent trip to South Africa.

The senate was addressed by John Howley, a student in the Economics Department who also represents the Southern Africa Solidarity Committee. Howley, who will present a formal resolution at the senate's next meeting, said he wishes the senate to pass a motion similar to the one before the Undergraduate Senate.

The resolution, which passed 25 to two with two abstentions, reads as follows: "The University of Massachusetts Graduate Student Senate is opposed to the use of University funds to finance academic or professional contacts with the Republic of South Africa."

The University money in question was a $600 funding allocation from the University's Faculty Research Council for Dr. Robert T. Wilce of the Botany Department and Andrew Davis, a graduate student, to attend a recent conference in Johannesburg.

Howley pointed out, that since the University refuses to do business with companies in South Africa, a resolution from the senate expressing its disapproval at this funding would be in keeping with University policy.

Also last night, the senate heard from Mark Aldrich of the Spanish and Portuguese Department who raised several problems which are currently facing Teaching Assistants (T.A.'s) in that department.

"Almost all graduate T.A.'s have had no pay increase in the last four to five years while faculty pay has increased steadily, although not dramatically," Aldrich said.

Kenneth Cole, a senator and T.A. in the Mathematics Department said that a letter from the Mathematics Department has been circulated through his department which would ask T.A.'s to teach one additional class each for $1200. According to Cole, this idea "seems to be an ultimatum rather than a person to person choice."

Police report arrest, accidents, thefts

By LAURIE FISHER
Collegian Staff

Amherst police arrested an 18-year-old man on a number of charges Tuesday night in connection with a break-in.

The student, a resident of Puffton Village, was arrested in a Main Street apartment at 12:04 a.m. Tuesday and charged with breaking and entering with intent to commit a misdemeanor, larceny over and under $100, police said. In response to a phone call, police arrived at 133 Main St. to find a broken window and the student sleeping in a laundry room.

The student was in possession of several items including a knife, shoes and a jacket, police said. Police said similar items were reported stolen on Feb. 10 from a home on South Prospect Street. Police said they also found a Walkman stereo and a pair of sunglasses.

Police reported that Nanette Quiley, 21, of 48 Ledgewood Rd., Weston, was injured and taken by ambulance to the University Health Services after a car accident Monday at 5:26 p.m. The mishap occurred when the car she was driving collided with a car driven by Judsan R. Stent, 71, of 80 Kellogg Ave., police said. Quiley's car was stopped at a stop sign on Clarkville Road, and police said because her vision was blocked by high snowbanks, when her car entered East Pleasant Street, it collided with Stent's car.

Town police reported that cars driven by Lisa A. Carey, 21, Riverglade Apartments, and Raymond E. Babb, 23, of 92 High St. collided at 5:36 p.m., Monday.

University of Massachusetts police reported the thefts of a watch and a wallet on Tuesday. The watch, valued at $85, was reported stolen from a woman's room in Washington dormitory at UMass while she was out of the room, police said.

Everywoman Center seeking to fill posts

The Everywoman's Center is looking for people to work in several program areas this spring. Most programs offer internships for credit and/or letters of reference. Some jobs also offer work study.

Available positions include self-defense Demonstration Coordinator and Media Monitor for the Educator/Advocates Against Violence Against Women Program; adjunct staff for the Working Women's Task Force; summer trainees for the Counselors/Advocates Against Violence Against Women Program; Assistant to the Budget Coordinator; The Third World Women's Program and the Public Relations/Outreach Program.

For descriptions, applications and deadlines, call the center at 545-0883.

Northeast/Sylvan looks for colloque teachers

The Northeast and Sylvan residential areas Colloquium Program encourages students who have talent or skills in a particular craft, exercise technique or mode of artistic expression to teach a colloq in Northeast and Sylvan. The proposal deadline is February 18. For more information, call 545-0290.

UVC to hold display contest for video-art

The Union Video Center (UVC) is holding a display competition for video-art, which is open to students and independent producers who reside in Western Massachusetts.

The competition is sponsored by the University Arts Council, and it will be judged by representatives of campus and community art groups.

Two prizes will be awarded in each of three categories: narrative, documentary and avant-garde. Winning tapes will be shown in a public exhibition in April.

Entries must be submitted by 2 p.m. on March 18 to the Union Video Center, 216 Student Union Building. Details and application forms are available from the center by calling 545-1336.

Open seminar today on hazardous waste

The Department of civil engineering at the University of Massachusetts is sponsoring a seminar on the politics of hazardous waste in Massachusetts, to be held at 3:45 p.m. today in rooms 132-4 in Marston Hall. John A. S. McGlennon, former administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency in the Northeast region, will be the guest speaker. The seminar, which is free and open to the public, is the third of a series of non-technical discussions of civil engineering and politics being sponsored by the department this year.

Amherst subscribers express dissatisfaction with cable TV

By E.L. BIRK
Collegian Staff

Subscriber dissatisfaction brought more than 40 people to a public hearing last night before the Amherst Board of Selectmen and representatives of Pioneer Valley Cablevision.

Most of the subscribers supported complaints voiced by several of the residents in attendance. Among those complaints: a thin selection of programming, deaf company ears to subscriber input, arrogance on the part of the office personnel, decreasing service in the face of increasing costs, poor technical service in the form of poor video and audio reception, and unauthorized replacement of HBO with Spotlight movie channel.

"I wonder if any vote (to cancel channels) was taken, I certainly was never asked," Robert Taylor, a Lincoln Avenue subscriber, said in reference to Home Box Office being replaced with Spotlight.

"As far as HBO goes, we took the service because it was assured by the company and then we had something else; 10th-rate movies running all day long. That's the first breach of contract.

"Then to charge us to bring in extra channels is another breach of contract. The utter arrogance of the people in this company...," he said. At this point the audience broke into applause and cheered in support of Taylor's comments.

"I'm the man in the middle," said Gus Lavelli, general manager for Times Mirror. "I work for the subscriber and for the company, sometimes I'm pulled in both direction and it hurts."

Two stations, however, will be added to the programming package already offered, he said. A weather station which provides up-to-date information from the National Weather Service and a second station called CBN, which provides such alternative programming as movies on Saturday mornings and shows from the "Golden Age" of television, the 50s, according to the company representatives.

WHERE HILLS TURN TO MOUNTAINS.
Why conquer hills when you can challenge a mountain. Just over the border is Mount Snow with 2 gondolas, 12 chairlifts, 52 trails and 1700 feet of vertical.
27 inches of snow last week and 6 feet of snow since Jan. 1st has provided the packed powder you've been waiting for. All 52 trails are open on 3 mountain faces. EDITORIAL/OPINION

Action above rhetoric needed

Is the Reagan economic plan an elaborate shellgame? There is a fundamental conflict over economic policy in the United States over two separate but related issues: whether to give priority to reducing inflation or reducing unemployment. Part of the President's rhetoric has been a stress on leadership; has he led us towards unity or polarization? Compare the following parable:

Not long ago, a new president who had grown rich and famous in California was elected. He took office in the midst of general but uneven prosperity. Soon after his inauguration, signs of recession appeared. Upon the advice of the finest economic and business strategists he could muster, the new President proposed large tax cuts to stimulate the economy. The idea, as he explained, was that the tax cuts would encourage a burst of new economic activity, which in turn, would allow the government to reap new revenues — eventually far more, than any initial revenue losses caused by the proposed tax cuts.

Chris Ferretti

Congress passed the tax cuts, nevertheless, the recession worsened rapidly, and the Federal budget deficit grew. Wall Street was in turmoil and stock prices skidded dramatically. The President consulted his economic advisors, who assured him that they knew the solution. They insisted that he must raise taxes in order to lower the deficit and thereby assure the nation that Federal credit was sound. That would, they reasoned persuade investors to invest enough to life the economy up out of recession.

The President has been very much opposed to tax increases, but he followed the advice of his wise men and pushed the increases through the Congress. These increases joined forces with the new level of expanded credit to bring about the worst depression in American History. It lasted for ten years, during which unemployment never fell below 14 percent and eager well-trained working people starved.

The president, of course, was not Ronald Reagan, but Herbert Hoover, and the point of the story is not that both men flourished in California. The point is that terrible, unforeseen events can happen when these problems are treated on a simplistic level. There is no single correct answer to our economic problems today and we should be wary of those that broach them.

Its ailments not withstanding, the American economy today remains stronger than its 1929 counterpart. There are a variety of factors that make a depression less likely today. The government has a much larger share of the economy, as do the service businesses like insurance firms and pension funds. These are segments of the economy that in general do not react to a short slump as rapidly as industry. With the exception of Air Traffic Controllers, the government does not have a tradition of laying off its employees as quickly in a recession as the private sector. These are important factors that help to stabilize the economy. The economic omens are hardly favorable today: rising unemployment, high interest rates, and inflation continue unabated. While it is true that the latter two have reached a reduced level, they are still high when one considers the resultant level of unemployment reached to bring about this reduction.

Now a fairly adroit politician, such as Ronald Reagan, should realize that he must continue to rail against Big Government, profligate spending — with the exception of defense, and high taxes. In his State of the Union Message however, he did state that, "Government must take the lead in restoring the economy." Does that mean that the President has thrown in the towel? One really doesn't know. Yes, it is rhetoric and yes, it does come from the same source that condoned the corporate income tax, but shouldn't we believe him?

It boils down to the fact that no matter what step is taken by the President, an enormous amount of damage has already occured. Deregulation is fine fuel for rhetoric, but one only needs to recount the EPA and its clever handling of the problem of chemical waste sites in New England; or recall the FDA giving a clean bill of health to "Oroflex," an arthritis cure that was withheld by the Carter Administration because of its more fatal qualities; to come to the conclusion that maybe his way is not the best one today.

40 Minute Gang rude, unsportsmanlike, and embarrassing

To the Editor:

We would like to challenge some statements made in a recent letter by David Chambers. Since we were unfortunately sitting behind some "40 Minute Gang" members, we were forced to witness the antics of some members of this group. What we saw was harassment of the Rutger's team members and coaches. Mr. Chamber's describes himself as a loyal fan, that may be true; however, his actions were not sportsmanlike. Their throwing papers at the team, and yelling insulting rude comments was totally unbecoming of college students' behavior at a basketball game.

We hope that Coach McLaughlin organized this group with the intention of gaining fan participation in support of our team, and enhancing the UMass reputation, not encouraging a Zoo Mass one.

Mr. Chambers has the right to do anything he wants at a game as long as it does not interfere with other fans' enjoyment of the game. Actions such as I have described earlier made it almost impossible to view the game by distracting our attention with their obnoxious comments to the bench.

After the game we merely asked members of this group why they found it necessary to be rude and obnoxious to the Rutger's team, coaches and cheerleaders. This is not harassment? As far as his comments about our being ignorant about basketball and fan conduct he doesn't know what he is talking about. The women that spoke to him after the game have been involved with basketball in coaching, playing, and refereeing.

We found his letter sexist and insulting. We hope that he will apologize for his remarks in his letter and his organization's behavior at the game both to us and the Rutger's team. One thing the "40 Minute Gang" should remember is that athletic contests are won or lost on the basis of skill and talent of the players not the mouths of the fans.

The state of Israel is willing to be a moral and righteous nation

To the Editor:

After reading the article by Randolph T. Holhut on the Editorial/Opinion page of the Tuesday February 15 Collegian "Israel Has Lost Its World Respect," I felt that a response was necessary to clarify a few points.

The claim of Mr. Holhut that "Operation Peace for the Galilee" was not a war of self-defense is ludicrous. The stated and many time reaffirmed goal of the P.L.O. in its national covenant is the destruction of the State of Israel. Also, as a result of the operation it has been shown that the P.L.O. was massing a huge cache of Soviet supplied arms. The destruction of such a threat is indeed self defense.

That Israeli soldiers sat idly by while Lebanese Christian Phalangists committed acts of slaughter is an unjustified claim. The few high ranking officials who indeed did know or should have known what was going on were censured by the Kahan commission which did lay indirect responsibility on these officials. The significance of the commission's report is twofold. First is points out that people are just as responsible for what they do not do as well as for what they do.

Secondly it shows the extent to which Israel is willing to go to be a moral and righteous nation. It is hard to say that the same is true of the other Middle Eastern nations. Forgetting for a moment the atrocities which they have committed against their own people, they still insist on focusing blame for the massacre on Israel rather than on the Phalangists who did the killing.

The attack on Ariel Sharon as the cause of Israel's so called loss of world respect was a little bit strong.

Blues should be for everyone

To the Editor:

Recently, UPC sponsored a musical series entitled "Blues In the Blue Wall." Using the Massachusetts Legal Drinking Age as one excuse, the Blue Wall chooses to prohibit all students younger than twenty from attending the above series. The only motivation, in our eyes, for such behavior is the fact that the Blue Wall doesn't wish to entertain clientele which cannot purchase alcohol. We find this behavior objectionable.

The Blue Wall is one of a few establishments in the UMass/Amherst area that is within walking distance for students. Why is it that the Blue Wall maintains a strict "over twenty" policy? The Hanger and Rusty Nail have provided entertainment for "18 and above" adults.

We are not asking for free admission to the Blue Wall. We are not asking to be welcome at the famous Blue Wall Happy Hour. We are asking to be allowed to attend such events as the "Blues In the Blue Wall" series. We suggest that an "18 and over policy" be enacted in the Blue Wall. At the very least, we hope that UPC would schedule such events in a place where all students can attend. It's been done before and can be done again.

A Presidential Search for a Student Attorney General

In yesterday's Collegian, there was a column written by Timmi Rudolf, an SGA Senator. In terms of style, it was fascinating fiction, and I certainly hope that he turns it in as a rhetoric assignment. On the other hand, I hate to see inaccuracy go unanswered. it is to that end that I take pen in hand.

I suppose that the first thing I ought to address is my "failure" to appoint an Attorney General. This explanation is best made by way of a chronology.

Jim Murphy

As most of you know, I was installed as President with barely three Senate meetings left in the year. This made it difficult to fulfill my constitutional requirements; nevertheless, I conducted a search. The result was that only one person applied: Elizabeth Hill, who I appointed as Acting Attorney General until I could start another search in the Fall.

When the Fall Semester rolled around, I initiated the search that yielded Randy Chapman's name. Unfortunately, that search was laden with problems. For example, the search committee compiled an original job application that was restrictive to the point of being unconstitutional (it mandated a cumulative-cutoff, and prohibited involvement in other RSO groups). In addition, it eliminated the choice that is constitutionally mine by giving me only one name, and releasing that information to the Collegian, before I made my decision. The result was that I threw the search out.

As things stand, there are but a few weeks until new Presidents are elected. To that extent, it would be unfair to them, and to whomever I would appoint for me to take action. However, that does not mean that the Attorney General's office has been closed down. Quite the contrary, Elizabeth Hill has kept functioning in that capacity since her Acting appointment last May.

Incidentally, to my knowledge, no Writ of Mandamus has been filed, or, if it has, the University judiciary has yet to notify me. As such, none exists. It is unfortunate that Rudolph chose not to verify his assertions before representing them as facts.

The other accusation proffered was that of missed meetings. This also is a crude distortion. While I have been late to the last few Senate meetings (I commute to Trustee meetings in Boston), I have maintained a near-perfect attendance record during my three years in the Senate. Senate records will bear me out.

Throughout the rest of his letter, Rudolph makes repeated reference to a "long list" of misdeeds; yet gives no such list. I submit that my only "misdeed" is that I am not a Conservative Digest-toting right winger. For that, I make no apologies whatsoever. I never claimed to have been a conservative; morever, I don't think that students would have elected one. "Realistic leadership" does not mean conservatism, and it never will.

Over the past year, the SGA has run the biggest voter registration drive in the history of the Commonwealth; pushed through a policy on sexual harassment; got the students an opportunity to review proposed curriculum changes (more to come); set the foundation for a police policy review board; and is running a significant number of students for Town meeting in an effort to institute rent control. While I won't pretend to take credit for all of that, I think it is fair to say that I have helped, and that my work has always been done in the interests of the student body.

Of course, the final determination rests with that body, and I'll submit to its decision. However, I do ask that my judgement be based upon my actions, and not from a second-hand source.

Jim Murphy is the SGA president

Are town governments over-regulating?

Give me one good reason why the town of Hingham shouldn't have a McDonald's. I'll bet you can't and that's the point of the story. The only obstacle preventing a McDonald's from being built within the boundaries of this South Shore town is the silly banterings of petty local officials.

A town bylaw forbids the distribution of take-out food in Hingham, therefore no McDonald's. Sound ridiculous to you? Me too.

Rich Nangle

The fact is that local government is not the answer to our nation's woes as the Reagan administration would like us to believe. When unemployment is of utmost concern, a potential jobmaker like McDonald's should not be denied entrance because of the whims of a few elitists. Hingham is an affluent town and one would rightly assume that a motivating factor in forbidding takeouts is because the yokels don't want hamburger wrappers on their front lawns.

I'm sorry, but I find it hard to sympathize with the Hinghamites. The issue may come up for recall in the April town meeting and hopefully it will be overturned. Local government extremism has got to go.

The Hingham dispute is one of many examples of abuse of power by local officials in Massachusetts and across the country. And the other examples are equally ludicrous.

Video games, for example, were banned in Marshfield last summer. Town officials expressed fear that their children's minds were being permanently warped by the likes of Pac-Man and Donkey Kong. Many establishments that were able to make some extra money by installing a game or were set back by the ruling. Arcades, of course, went out of business.

There are precious few things for kids to do today outshfield kids now have one less activity to worry about. Video game distributors have filed lawsuits against the town but nothing has happened as of yet. Unfortunately it looks like this example of overregulation will stand up in court.

Another town government ban took on a national pasttime of sorts and banned an activity because of an emotional 'scare,' one which should not have been encouraged.

Fitchburg was one of a handful of towns that banned Halloween last year in the wake of the infamous Tylenol scare. Never mind the fact that the poisonings were occuring in the Chicago area. Here was a chance for local officials to look like the grand saviors of the town's youth by making sure they didn't get a cyanide chocolate bar in their Trick or Treat bags.

It was a chance for selectmen to play hero and keep their town safe for the kiddies when there was no cause for alarm at all. The losers were the kids who of course, had no say in the matter. Think about it, when people give in to a scare tactic like the Tylenol poisonings it only serves to encourage the sick mind of the person who perpetrates the poisonings. There was no more cause for alarm in Fitchburg or anywhere else than there had ever been on any other Halloween. I believe the selectmen acted irresponsibly and immorally, not to mention the fact that they discriminated against young people.

There have been victories however. A recent court ruling said the people of Stoughton did not have the right to oust the adult bookstore which has caused so much controversy there. Protestors chanting slogans of "Save our Stoughton" had hoped to impose their morals on everybody else and throw the book at the bookstore. The question was not one of morality but one of censorship. Freedom prevailed.

On the other hand, local governments have done some positive things although I would contend that the bad certainly outweighs the good in most cases. Amherst has joined a list of towns that have rejected Civil Defense Crisis Relocation plans. It is important for people to stand up to governmental idiocy. It's just too bad they don't do it more often. Why doesn't a town try to overturn Massachusetts' repressive teen-age abortion law for example?

Too many selectmen and other local officials seem to be more concerned with making their town a utopia of sorts by banning one of life's evils from its boundaries. An example is when a town goes 'dry' by banning the sale of liquor in a club or package store.

Let's get rid of these trivial laws and concentrate on the real problems on both national and local levels. God knows we have enough of them.

It's the next best thing to being there

Our family always had a thing for the innovative. We went through the wok and food processor phases, the video ping pong games, and the basketball hoop in the driveway. Eventually, all of these devices migrated to a musty corner of the basement. My father's most recent potential addition to the basement collection was his investment in a telelphone answering machine. Maybe this solves the problem of speaking to the kids when they call during dinner. Maybe he likes to call up from work and leave messages for himself. Most likely, he just wanted to feel that he was keeping up with the state of the art in high technology.

Lise Zeiger

There is something genuinely upsetting about these gadgets. They have become more demeaning than dentist music when we're put on hold, and sadly more common than a busy signal. But before you can put the contraption to work, you have to prepare the machine for usage. Thus, the beginning of the battle.

The preparation of the phone message can be both tedious and degrading. My father spent the better part of one weekend locked in his office stroking his beard and pronouncing his name. After he finally settled on a suitable combination of three syllables, he decided to try the entire message on tape. The device managed to contort his thick Brooklyn accent into a pseudo moose-call with a beep at the end.

He valiantly attempted to stretch his message into a three minute lecture so that there would be a minimal amount of silence before the mandatory beep. I never really knew what to do with that silence anyway. It's like when a conversation shifts into automatic pilot and no one knows what to say. Maybe the machine wants to run a security check on my breathing before I can leave a message. Maybe it makes me paranoid.

There is more to this paranoia than meets the eye. I developed that same sweat on my uppper lip when I tried to make my own tape. It doesn't matter how sexy I try to make my voice, I'll always sound like a rusty baritone on tape. Some women were blessed with deep, sexy voices, others sound light and airy even when they try to sound tough. I will always sound like an antelope going through puberty, and these machines aren't helping matters.

After doing battle with my voice, I had to come up with a suitable message. I'm sure the machine would get enough mileage in the dorm, when the phone manages to ring midafternoon on Tuesday. "Hi mom, I'm sure its you. You are the only person who would have the timing to call at a moment like this. If you were doing what I'm doing now, I'm sure you wouldn't be answering the phone either. I'll get back to you." Curiously, my housemates won't go for it.

I've also noticed that a lot of students attempt to use the same message for all four years of their college career. "Ned, Norman and Gunther aren't in at the moment..." Of course they aren't, the tape is working on year number three. Ned graduated and took a job in Cincinnati. Norman is living with his girlfriend in Townhouse. Gunther still lives there, but he doesn't know how to change the tape, or check the messages. And they wonder why no one calls them anymore.

Some of these machines are a challenge to understand. They have all the static noises and grinding sounds of a bus station's public address system. Other machines are rather demanding. They ask that you record your name, social security number, mothers maiden name and blood-type before you can leave your message in the fifteen seconds allotted. The worst machines are located in long distance area codes. They are expensive to speak with, and never get back to you.

I'm looking forward to dad's next bout with technology. Hopefully it will be impetus enough to send the telephone answering machine into the basement with the wok. For the time being, he doesn't need a secretary, and he won't answer the phone. Why should he, after all he'll get back to you.

Arts

A journey into the high notes of imagination

Philip Glass performs at FAC

PHILIP GLASS ENSEMBLE
Thursday, February 10
Fine Arts Center

By PETER WISSOKER
Collegian Staff

Last Thursday evening, composer Philip Glass brought his performing ensemble to the Fine Arts Center for an evening of electronic chamber music. Glass, one of the few performing modern composers, presented works from his most recent album, Glassworks, as well as selections from Dance (1979), Music in Similar Motion (1969), and his first opera, Einstein on the Beach.

There is something about Glass' music that makes it enjoyable to most everyone who hears it. Most of the pieces he writes are studies in harmony and rhythm based in slowly changing patterns. The music changes gradually enough so that even the most uninformed listener is unlikely to become lost. A lot of the music is also based on counting tricks; progressions repeated in fours, then fours and threes, then fours and threes and twos, etc.

Currently, Glass is working on a third opera to conclude the trilogy "Einstein on the Beach," "Satyagraha," and now "Akhenaton," the egyptian king. Glass made an appearance at a music appreciation class to speak about Satyagraha on Wednesday. The opera, which was shunned by a number of major US opera companies, is an account of seven events in the life of human rights activist, Ghandi. The text of the opera is the Bhagavad-Gita and it is sung in Sanskrit. Glass played a taped segment of the opera, which is still unavailable on record, for the class. The opera sounds more classical in tone than any of Glass' previously recorded works.

Despite the mysterious disappearance of the second saxophonist halfway through the second number, the ensemble was incredibly tight. It is much more difficult to play the same thing over and over than it is to keep changing. Particularly during "Music in Similar Motion" I kept thinking that they were losing their places because of the way Glass was throwing his head around. Glass said that to play a piece right one must play it at least fifty times. "Dance" was a very good example of this. Originally recorded in 1979, the ensemble now plays it faster and with a totally different tonal ambiance.

It was fascinating to see Glass perform live because it added a whole new dimension to the music. The music was much more electric than on the albums and the synthesizer had a tonal quality that was really beautiful. It seemed to capture the high notes in this author's imagination that I thought never could be expressed. The whole thing culminated in the final piece, the finale from Einstein on the Beach called "Spaceship." With the music whirling in larger and larger circles (or was it spirals?), the keyboards and flute interchanging melodies with Dora Ohrenstein, (the vocalist of the ensemble. People sat breathless and in awe.

It never ceases to amaze me that Philip Glass attracts such a large punk/new wave following, but last Thursday's concert was a good insight as to why. Old or young, real man or quiche lover, art seems to transcend over all barriers. No matter where you come from, there is a certain quality in the music that brings out the best in everyone. The music of the Philip Glass Ensemble has this quality.

"A good time was had by all."

The Philip Glass Ensemble performed an evening of electronic chamber music at the Fine Arts Center, last Thursday night.

the uniqueness of the Bible

Over and over again, like a broken record, I hear the phrase, "Oh, you don't read the Bible do you?" Sometimes it is phrased, "Why the Bible is just another book, you ought to read. . .etc." There is the student who is proud because his Bible is on the shelf with his other books, perhaps dusty, not broken in, but it is there with the other "greats."

Then there is the professor who degrades the Bible before his students and snickers at the thought of reading it, let alone of having it in one's library.

The above questions and observations bothered me when I tried, as a non-Christian, to refute the Bible as God's Word to man. I finally came to the conclusion that they were simply trite phrases from either biased, prejudiced or simply unknowledgeable, men and women.

The Bible should be on the top shelf all by itself. The Bible is "unique." That's it! The ideas I grappled with to describe the Bible are summed up with the word "unique."

Webster must have had this "Book of books" in mind when he wrote the definition for "unique": "1. one and only; single; sole. 2. different from all others; having no like or equal."

Professor M. Montiero-Williams (cited by Sidney Collett, All About the Bible, Fleming H. Revell), former Boden professor of Sanskrit, spent 42 years studying Eastern books and said in comparing them with the Bible:

"Pile them, if you will, on the left side of your study table; but place your own Holy Bible on the right side — all by itself, all alone — and with a wide gap between them. For,. . .there is a gulf between it and the so-called sacred books of the East which severs the one from the other utterly, hopelessly, and forever. . .a veritable gulf which cannot be bridged over by any science of religious thought."

A representative of the Great Books of the Western World came to my house recruiting salesmen for their series. He spread out the chart of the Great Books of the Western World series. he spent five minutes talking to us about the Great Books of the Western World series and we spent and hour and a half talking to him about the Greatest Book.

I challenged him to take just 10 of the authors, all from one walk of life, one generation, one place, one time, one mood, one continent, one language and just one controversial subject (the Bible speaks on hundreds with harmony and agreement).

Then I asked him: "Would they (the authors) agree?" He paused and then replied, "No!" "What would you have?" I retorted. Immediately he said, "A conglomeration."

Two days later he committed his life to Christ (the theme of the Bible).

Why all this? Very simple! Any man sincerely seeking truth would consider a book with the above uniqueness from many other books.

Women hoopsters hope to bounce back at home

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team will take to the hardwood tonight in search of win number six as they host the Central Connecticut Blue Devils at 5:00 in the Cage.

The Minutewomen are coming off of a close loss to the University of Maine last Saturday. In that game, Barbara Hebel, ranked ninth in the latest Atlantic 10 scoring statistics, regained the scoring touch that had seemingly abandoned her earlier this year. The freshman hit for 20 points to lead the Minutewomen.

Maria Chomentowski has been playing very well as of late. The first year forward pumped in 15 points against Maine.

Against Central, it will take a total effort on the part of the entire team.

"We are playing well (as of late)," said head coach Mary Ann Ozdarski. "We have to play smart, aggressive basketball."

Rebounding wise, Nadine Jackson, Rebecca Kuchs and Jerrie Bernier have been the leaders as of late. Jackson led UMass with 10 rebounds in the Maine loss.

Wendy Ward, 4th in the league in steals, sparks the UMass defense which will have to contend with Central freshman star Hope Linthium, from Bridgeport, Ct. The freshman is ranked sixth in division II scoring with 21.6 points a game.

UMass will be looking for improvement in their overall game, but Ozdarski has one major improvement that she wants to see.

"I want to see us win," she stated simply. "Nothing else is more important."

Game time tomorrow will be an early 5:00 start. UMass is 5-18 at the moment and have lost two of their last three in close games.

"There is no sense in playing well and losing," said Ozdarski.

Men's hoop snowed under but Hempel hot

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

There was good news and bad news filtering back to the University of Massachusetts following Monday night's make-up game with the University of West Virginia.

The good news: standout freshman forward John Hempel poured in 37 points to lead all scorers and tie the league mark for most points in a single game.

The bad news: another Minuteman loss. This time the final score was 108-90 (a shootout!) and, all of a sudden, the UMass hoopsters are riding a three game losing streak.

More good news: to its own credit, UMass was able to put 90 points on the board against a very tough team, a team that Minuteman coach Tom McLaughlin sees as the best team in the Atlantic Ten at this juncture of the season.

"They (West Virginia) are playing the best ball of any team in the league right now," said McLaughlin as he removed his coat in the basketball office to put the finishing touch on what became an extended road trip south.

And (here we go) still more good news: the simple fact that the Minutemen are back in New England, not stranded in Washington, D.C., where last weekend's heavy snowstorm left them stranded in their hotel rooms for several days.

"The layover definitely hurt us," said McLaughlin. "During that time we had no practice so we weren't prepared when we got to West Virginia. The ball handling and timing was off."

Off, but not too off. When you consider that this same Minuteman team was being written off by a lot of people prior to their Penn State upset two weeks ago, the game they played against West Virginia was pretty respectable.

In fact, according to McLaughlin, but for one five minute span in the first half, UMass played the Mountaineers even throughout the contest.

"From 10 minutes to five minutes in the first half they spurted on us," said McLaughlin. "The score was 23-20 and then four turnovers and a couple of missed free throws put the score at 40-23."

From there on in things were even the rest of the way, so even that each team netted 56 points apiece in the second half. But, playing even after falling behind by a substantial margin will not win ball games. UMass did not win this one.

And so, a long two game road trip that produced two UMass losses has come to an end. The Minutemen are back, but not for long. Tomorrow they travel to Boston to take on the Huskies of Northeastern University.

"We're just exhausted," said McLaughlin, "but, I think after a good night's sleep tonight, everything will look brighter tomorrow."

And brighter still Saturday, when the Minutemen finally return to the Curry Hicks Cage to play Rhode Island. Ah, home sweet home.

Women swimmers triumph

By BOB BROCK
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's swimming team wound up their dual meet season in fine style as they crushed Mt. Holyoke College 92-49, before an enthusiastic crowd last night at the Boyden pool.

The Minutewomen, now 10-2 on the year, never railed during the meet and they also set three new UMass records.

The 200 yard medley relay team of Anne Whitlock, Laurie Keen, Maura Sweeney and Jenn Nicolai set a new pool and varsity record with a time of 1:55.32, which broke the existing record of 1:55.92 set back in 1976. The 200 yard free relay team of Nicolai, Whitlock, Debbie Chisholm and Liz Feinberg won the event and set a new pool record of 1:41.90. It broke the old mark set by Rhode Island of 1:42.64.

UMass was paced to the win by three triple winners. Jenn Nicolai swam on both record-breaking relays and she also took a first in the 100 yard butterfly with a 1:03.29. It was the first time she swam the butterfly in a meet. Maura Sweeney swam on the record-setting medley relay and she won the 100 yard individual medley in 1:04.41. She also took the 500 yard freestyle in 5:26.85. The last triple winner, Maura Sweeney swam a leg on the relay and she also won the 100 yard freestyle (58.83) and the 50 yard butterfly (28.71).

UM's Jean Bushee took the 1-meter diving event scoring 148.65 points and Gina Perrone was close behind tallying 142.15.

UMass coach Val Turtle was happy with the win but is now looking forward to the post-season championships next weekend at Springfield College. Of the 23 members on the UMass squad, 18 qualified to take part.

Women skiers are perfect

By MATT LUCZKOW
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's ski team posted back to back giant-slalom victories at Loon Mountain last weekend to boost their undefeated record to 8-0 in the Women's Intercollegiate Ski Conference.

In Saturday's giant-slalom race, five UMass women finished in the top fifteen, out of a field of 50 racers.

UMass clocked a total team time of 241.09 to give them a ten second margin over second place Boston College (251.21). Plymouth State College (254.64) took third place, while Smith, Amherst, Brown and Trinity College finished 4th, 5th, 6th and 7th place respectively.

Finishing in rare fashion on Saturday, were UMass teammates Theresa Collins and Sue White, who tied for first place with a two-run total time of 79.64 seconds. Laura Hourihan (80.59) and Amy Glackin (81.22) took 3rd and 4th place for Boston College.

Also skiing well for UMass were Leslie Dale, Lisa Luczkow, Diana Swain and Kim Loftus who finished 5th, 8th, 15th, and 19th place respectively.

UMass sophomore White won her seventh race of the season in Sunday's giant-slalom, to lead the powerful Minutewomen to their eighth-straight victory in the WISC league.

UMass teammates Collins and Dale also continued strong performance by taking 3rd and 5th place in the giant-slalom competition.

The women skiers will be back in action this weekend at Berkshire East in Charlemont, Massachusetts for thier last meet of the regular season. The following weekend, the women will travel to Waterville Valley for the league championships. The women look forward to finishing with a perfect season.

Johnnetta B. Cole, associate provost for Undergraduate Education, addressed the Undergraduate Student Senate last night.

Senate approves General Ed. plan

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

Following an emotionally charged speech by Associate Provost for Undergraduate Education Johnnetta Cole, the University of Massachusetts Undergraduate Student Senate last night endorsed the final report on the General Education Curriculum proposal.

Saying the present distribution curriculum does not show students "what it means to live in a complex and diversified world," Cole urged students to stand behind the proposal and show that they "care about the nature of general education."

"This proposal will create an incredibly improved undergraduate experience that you will never have," she said.

Cole said even though the proposed changes will not affect present undergraduates, students have the "responsibility as leaders to prepare a better education to folks you can call your brothers and sisters in the next generation to reach this campus."

Cole attacked the present system by saying it is not "doing a decent job in providing basic skills" to undergraduates.

"If you leave this University and can say you got a decent and coherent education, then good for you because you are an exception," she said.

Cole said the proposal is "not a perfect one, but a framework on which to begin."

Cole said a general education curriculum is needed now more than ever before because "the world is moving at an incredibly rapid pace and the average person will change jobs and careers three to five times in a lifetime and students must be prepared."

Cole said in order for any curriculum to work, there must be an effort by both students and faculty "to engage in self-criticism, in self-examination, in analysis and in reform."

The role of faculty must be geared towards undergraduate teaching, Cole said. Without that emphasis, "the whole nature of education will get lost," she said.

African trip funding condemned

By TAMMI BORTON
and JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate last night unanimously approved a motion demanding the release of documents regarding the funding of botany professsor Robert Wilce's recent trip to South Africa, and denouncing University sponsorship of any academic or professional traveling in that country.

The Senate also passed a motion to underwrite $150,000 of the expenses for Union Program Council 1983 Spring Festival, a concert to be held May 14 in Alumni Stadium.

The first motion, made on behalf of the Third World Caucus and the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA) condemned the funding for Wilce's trip and demanded the formulation of a University policy regarding any future trips to South Africa.

"What we want the University to do is tell us exactly what its policies are in regards to South Africa," said George McKenzie, a member of the Third World Caucus and sponsor of the motion.

Wilce was awarded $600 by the Faculty Research Council last January to attend the Sandy Beach Eco-System Congress in South Africa.

Since the $600 grant for travel is "the maximum amount allowable from the Faculty Research Council," according to student senator Mindy Chateauvert, the students felt they should be able to see a proposal for the trip.

"The University does not allow for any classified research to be carried out with its money, and it is our place to remind them of that," said a member of the Senate in closing.

In other business, the Senate approved a motion to asssume financial obligation for the Spring Festival, with the stipulation that if appropriate talent is not booked by April 7, or if projected ticket sales are not reached by April 15, the motion will be void and the show, cancelled.

"No liquor will be sold in the stadium and no containers will be permitted," Bill Prichett, UPC talent coordinator said.

If the show is cancelled once talent has been booked, the UPC residual fund will cover any cancellation expenses Lisa Potter, senate treasurer said.

Part time students to get full benefits

By EILEEN GALLIGAN
Collegian Staff

A change of policy for part-time degree-seeking students at the University of Massachusetts will allow them the same benefits and services now given only to full-time students, said Dean of Students William Field.

Field is a member of the Committee on Part-Time Students, a special task force set up by UMass Chancellor Joseph B. Duffey, that met for the first time yesterday to begin implementation of proposals. These proposals were originally presented to and approved by the Faculty Senate last December.

The policy proposes that part-time students by given the same rights and privileges as full-time students in such areas as scheduling, financial aid, counciling and other support areas.

The Academic Matters Council, an appointed subcommittee of the Faculty Senate, seeks to accomplish this by changing the classification status of part-time students from the Continuing Education Program to the regular University system, according to their report.

However, Field stressed that the part-time student must be enrolled in a degree program to eligible for the new status.

"We are not trying to compete with the Division of Continuing Ed. They will continue to serve the needs of certain part-time students," he said.

Continuing Ed. would continue to serve non-degree seeking students those degree-seeking students enrolled in the Bachelor of General Studies program, students attending most evening classes and late applicants to the University who enroll in Continuing Ed. before applying to the University.

Kevin Aiken, deputy director and financial aid administrator of the Continuing Ed. Division and a member of the committee, said the policy changes will affect only a small number of Continuing Ed. students since most are not enrolled in degree programs. However, he said, "the implementation of the policy is crucial," especially when it comes to scheduling Continuing Ed. students in regular University classes. "It will give them greater access to courses in their major, since right now they are only eligible on a space available basis," Aiken said

Munchy's refuses Campus Center cans

By MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Staff

Students who buy Pepsi products in Campus Center vending machines will have to take the empty cans to local grocery stores to get the nickel deposit back, because Munchy's stores — the only on-campus vendor redeeming cans — will not accept them.

The Munchy's stores purchase Pepsi products from Soda City in Hadley, while the Campus Center buys its Pepsi products from a company in Brattleboro, Vermont. As a result, Munchy's does not offer Pepsi in cans and is not required to redeem them, according to Ashoke Ganguli, director of Auxilary Services.

Ganguli called the problems associated with redeeming and storing the cans, "a logistical nightmare."

W. L. Cummings, Jr., manager of the University Store, said the Campus Center is only required to label the machines with an explanation of where cans may be redeemed.

"We have no obligation to accept the cans," he said.

Cummings noted that the price of soda has been increased only five cents, although the distributor must be paid seven cents to cover a two-cent handling charge to be paid to redemption centers.

Students may be able to redeem cans in the Campus Center later this semester, however, if plans now being made by the UMass Recycling Project are implemented.

The Recycling Project hopes to open a can redemption center, and could be in operation in two to three weeks, said to Jim Crosby, administrator of the project.

"It's not something that you set up overnight," Crosby said. "One problem was the Bottle Bill went into effect over intersession, so we weren't prepared."

If the proposal being submitted this week is acceptable, students would receive their deposit back from the Recycling Project and the project would receive the five cents plus all or part of the handling charge from the soft drink distributors.

"We're a student-controlled business," Crosby said. "We're not out to make a profit, but if this generates revenue, we might be able to expand our newspaper (recycling) operation."

Crosby said that beer cans and bottles would not be redeemed, since the operation would be started in the Campus Center, but that the program might later be expanded into the dorms.

Speaker tells people to get involved in world hunger fight

By EILEEN GALLIGAN
Collegian Staff

Exhorting a crowd of about 250 people in the Student Union Ballroom last night to abandon dependence on our world leaders, Frances Moore Lappe, a leader in the world hunger movement, urged more individual involvement in solving hunger.

Lappe's address, titled "The Crisis in American Agriculture: What is It," concluded the all-day Professional Agriculture Convention held yesterday in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Lappe, the author of "Diet for a Small Planet," said the crises found in agriculture today stem from a number of problems including a general loss of values among Americans towards farm systems and our economic system.

"We're supposed to believe that hard work and sacrifice should be rewarded, yet the economic dogma of America does not reward the small farmer. Instead it rewards those who have wealth and large farmlands," Lappe said.

Lappe went on to outline the other values which she said she feels are lacking in our society including the desire to pass farmland on to children and the myth farmers have that they are truly feeding the hungry. She said 60 percent of our food exports go to 12 other Western countries, such as Mexico and Nigeria and none goes to where it is needed.

"This is a great tragedy; look at where it's all going," Lappe said. Lappe urged the audience to have a sense of outrage for the plight of the hungry, especially, when according to her figures, one half of all grain produced today is fed to livestock.

Lappe strongly criticized the American ecnomic system saying that the market responds to the demand for money, not the demand from humans. Yet she said Americans believe they must accept the economic powers that threaten the country, because they fear change.

"We cling to what we have, no matter how destructive, because we fear the only other alternative-authoritarian communism," she said.

Reagan announces re-election bid to Congress

LOS ANGELES — President Reagan is clearing his 1984 calendar for a re-election campaign, the Los Angeles Times reported today.

Republican congressional candidates have been advised not to rely on Reagan's help in 1984 because the president will be busy with his own re-election effort, the paper said.

The report, quoting White House Chief of Staff James A. Baker III, came less than a week after Reagan refused to say publicly whether he would run again.

The Times quoted Baker as saying he cleared the president's calendar after conferring with Deputy Chief of Staff Michael K. Deaver and with Reagan, who will be almost 74 when his current term ends.

"I told the president what I was going to do, and he said, 'fine,'," Baker said. This approval is "an objective sign" that Reagan will run for reelection, Baker said.

"I'm more convinced now than I've ever been that he'll run, just by observing him and watching his reaction to things," Baker said.

Last week, Reagan declined to say what his plans would be, noting that if he said he would run, people would find "political" motivations in every decision and if he said he would not run, they would call him a "lame duck."

Baker said he told Sen. Richard G. Lugar of Indiana, the new chairman of the Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee, that the committee should ask for Reagan's campaign help early because the president would only be available this year.

Republicans hold a 54-46 majority in the Senate and 19 of their seats will be on the line in 1984.

Dukakis says more police, prison cells needed

BOSTON — Crime makes many people afraid whenever they leave their homes and more police, tougher sentences for career criminals and more prison cells are needed to combat it, Gov. Michael S. Dukakis said Wednesday.

Dukakis chaired the first meeting of his new Statewide Anti-Crime Council and said afterwards he will ask the Legislature in a week or so to approve an anti-crime package.

"We've got to get more police out in the street and we're going to do that," Dukakis said. "The second thing we're going to do is get tough on career criminals."

Dukakis said he also plans to propose expanding prison space and developing alternative sentences where appropriate.

The fear of crime has become so overwhelming, Dukakis said, that he even worried about his 17-year-old daughter when she put on her coat Tuesday night to go out and mail a letter.

—"We can't have that," he said. "We're not helpless victims. This doesn't have to continue."

Dukakis said the anti-crime council will be effective because it brings together all segments of the criminal justice system.

Harvard to give aid to registration resistors

CAMBRIDGE — A plan is developing for Harvard University to help students who are cut off from federal funds because they refuse military draft registration, says Dean of Faculty Henry Rosovsky.

Rosovsky spoke about the idea in a closed-door meeting Tuesday with the Faculty of Arts and Sciences, according to the Harvard Crimson.

After the meeting he said final approval for any universitywide plan is up to Harvard President Derek C. Bok and the Harvard Corporation.

Rosovsky told the Arts and Sciences meeting that the aid would probably be a combination of work-study jobs and guaranteed market-rate loans.

The U.S. Department of Education recently proposed rules to back up a law passed by Congress last fall requiring all male applicants for federal aid to show that they had registered for the draft.

The Crimson said Bok refused to comment on the idea Tuesday, and said he would wait until the university's nine faculties study it.

Church worker found stabbed in Marshfield

MARSHFIELD — Police found a bloodied car Wednesday that was missing less than a mile from the home where a church worker and her son were found stabbed to death.

"There were blood stains on the car keys," Police Chief Charles Chaplin said after the new, silver Datsun was found in the parking lot of Plett's Pub about 7:30 a.m.

Chaplin said the car belonged to Kevin Rehill, 25, an optometrist whose body was found inside the front door Tuesday afternoon by a neighbor with a key to the house.

The body of his mother, Ruth Rehill, 56, was found in an upstairs bedroom.

"No weapon was found in the vehicle," said Chapline. "But as a result of finding the vehicle, we have developed some information which has sent us in a better direction."

The chief said investigators now believe one person was involved in the fatal stabbings. No arrests were made immediately.

Six Yale students injured in 2 car accident

EAST LONGMEADOW — Six Yale University students were injured, one critically, after the station wagon they were riding in was struck broadside by another car Wednesday in this Springfield suburb, police said.

Police Officer Richard Bates said the students were part of a singing group, the Dukesmen, that had been en route to a performance at Wilbraham-Monson Academy, in nearby Wilbraham.

Bates said the driver of the station wagon, James Yeadon, 20, of Brattleboro, Vt., was cited for running a stop sign. A car, coming down the side street, slammed into the wagon in the intersection and four students in the back seat were ejected when it spun around and bounced off a telephone pole, he said.

The driver of the other car, Robert Kalinko, 22, of Springfield, was treated and released from Bay State Medical Center in Springfield, Bates said.

Amherst voters urged: return census

By NANCY GONTER
Collegian Staff

Amherst residents who have not returned a census form sent out in mid-January may be removed from the list of registered voters, according to the Amherst town clerk.

The Amherst town census, which is conducted in January and February, is a verification of the continuing residency of registered voters, said Town Clerk Estelle Matusko.

A state-mandated warning, printed on the census mailing, told people failure to respond to the census could result in removal from the voter list.

Residency of all on-campus UMass students and all students at the other five colleges is verified through the schools' registrar and these students should not be concerned if no census form is mailed to them, Matusko said.

Off-campus students who are registered to vote in Amherst and who have not returned the census form should contact the town clerk. Matusko said that it is the responsibility of the voters to inform the town that they moved.

It is possible to become reinstated after being removed from the voting list. A resident who has been removed from the list has a right to prove that he or she has moved within the town, and could be reinstated as a voter, Matusko said.

In order to vote in the April 5 town election, Amherst residents must register to vote by March 16. Registration will be held in the town clerk's office until 10 p.m. on that day.

Voter registration is also held during the regular office hours of the town clerk, 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. A special voter registration session will be held March 12, from noon to 8 p.m.

In order to register, one must sign an affidavit stating that he or she is a resident. Any resident may register, even if they are registered in another town. Matusko said it is her responsibility to inform the town where the person was previously registered.

The town clerk's office is located on the first floor of the Amherst town hall.

Toxic wastes: political, social Mass. problem

By RICHARD NANGLE
Collegian Staff

Hazardous waste "is obviously a very political, very social, very technical problem," said a high-ranking executive from Monsanto Corporation of Springfield yesterday at the University of Massachusetts.

Hank Nowak, environmental control specialist at Monsanto discussed the hazardous waste issue to a group of about 30 engineering students and faculty in Marston Hall. The talk was part of a series sponsored by the UMass Department of Civil Engineering.

Currently there are only three hazardous waste treatment facilities which are readily accessable to Massachusetts corporations, Nowak said. The sites are in western New York, Ohio and Alabama, he said.

Dumping contractors have proposed four sites in Massachusetts where treatment facilities could be built, but none of the sites have received final approval by local assessment committees, he said.

SRS Inc. had proposed a site in Haverhill but because of mishaps at a SRS site in Connecticut the project has been delayed, Nowak said.

IT Co. proposed a site in Warren on land owned by the Massachusetts Turnpike Authority but residents fought the idea, he said.

He said proposals have also been made by other corporations in the Fall River-Rhode Island area and Gardner but they never got out of the thought stage.

Nowak said he believes few people are aware of the true definition of hazardous waste and public sentiment is that hazardous waste regulation is not very good.

Hazardous waste is a solid waste which may cause or significantly contribute to mortality or serious illness, he said. Four ways to recognize hazardous waste are to measure a substances ignitibility, corrosivity, reactivity and EP toxicity. EP toxicity simulates how a substance would react in a landfill.

It has been estimated that 290,000 tons of hazardous waste is generated in Massachusetts each year but no estimates are available on how much waste is not reported because it has been illegally dumped, Nowak said.

He said nineteen indictments have been handed down to people who have participated in the illegal dumping of hazardous waste.

Progress in regulation depends largely on the attitude of the Dukakis administration toward the problem, he said. The King administration was sympathetic to the need for treatment facilities, he said.

Students cite link between sexual activity and herpes

By TURA GUDMUNDSSON
Collegian Correspondent

Editor's Note: This is the fourth of a five part series.

While no scientific statistical correlations have been established so far to relate the nationwide increase in herpes cases to college student promiscuity, nine out of 16 students randomly interviewed at the University of Massachusetts agreed that such a correlation is likely.

Although only three students did not know the disease is incurable today, all students showed basic knowledge concerning what herpes is and how it is transmitted.

In addition, 13 students said they were afraid of getting herpes, but only seven of those said they took the necessary precautions not to get it.

Greater sexual freedom on campus, high sexual activity and multiple partners and greater chances of meeting people were some of the reasons given by students who agreed with the suggestion that herpes was more likely to be transmitted in a university environment.

The maturity and educational level of students were some of the reasons given by those who disagreed with the suggestion.

"I could sit here and fall in love four or five times a day," said Jean Paul Fandel, a senior languages and business major. "If you pursue your lustful habits, then there are bound to be a lot of little flings going about."

Jackie Femino, a senior psychology major, said people at universities "are more open about sex and have more partners than other places and often the relationships are not long lasting ones."

Geoffrey Dawson, in the College of Arts and Sciences a sophomore, agreed with the higher likelihood of spreading the disease. He said, "a lot of students are sexually promiscuous, with 20 million cases in the country, with a peak in younger middle-class white people, a university is a good place to find it."

"Not necessarily," said Melissa Hatrak, a Continuing Education student. "It is pretty widespread, even older people sleep around more. College people aren't sleeping around as much as they used to. They are getting more mature about it."

While five people admitted they were not taking any special precautions in preventing themselves from catching herpes, most of those who did said that asking their partner, knowing the persons you slept with and wearing condoms were some preventative measures one could take.

Vicki Hart, a senior majoring in Journalistic Studies/English said, "I heard of people who have it and don't want to say they have it. In a way some people want to pass it on because they are so messed up by it themselves and don't want to be the only one suffering."

Jerry Janofsky, a senior engineering major said, "I would want to know if the person I had sex with had it. You have to know when the herpes sores are on the surface of the skin, but even if there are no sores I would still be afraid if I know the person had it."

Rob Sherman, a sophomore majoring in business suggested "using contraception such as condoms and staying with the same girl."

H.A. Sckwelsh, a senior studying economics, simply suggested "screening out who you associate with."

Of all 16 interviewed, six said they knew no one, or had heard of no one, who had herpes. Seven people said they knew or had heard of between one to three people who had it, and three of the people interviewed said they had heard of or knew of five or more people who had herpes.

undergraduate teaching, of generalized as opposed to specialized teaching, then something is wrong," she said.

Cole said the proposal will get the faculty "out of the little cubby holes called departments and into arenas for teaching."

The increased role of the faculty can only benefit students if the students increase the role they play in education and a general education curriculum, she said.

"We all have the responsibility to engage in universal education, we must meet that demand," she said.

Painter found dead in Berkshire House

A 57-year-old University of Massachusetts employee, who suffered a heart attack while working in a campus office building, was pronounced dead at 6:46 p.m. Tuesday at Cooley-Dickinson Hospital in Northampton.

Myron C. Ball, of 190 E. Leverett Rd., Amherst, a painter for the dormitory maintenance, was staining cabinets alone in an office on the second floor of Berkshire House when his heart stopped beating. He was found unconcious by a Housing Security Guard making rounds, said Robert Campbell, associate director of Housing, whose office is on the first floor of Berkshire.

According to Sgt. Frank Mazzei of the UMass Police, an officer called to the scene at 5:46 p.m. and performed cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR) until an ambulance arrived to take Ball to Cooley-Dickinson.

Ball was born in Sunderland Dec. 10, 1925, the son of Forduce and Bessie (Cleveland) Ball. He served with the Army in World War II and was a UMass employee for 32 years.

He is survived by his wife Marjorie (Demsey) and two daughters, Kathleen and Deborah, all of Amherst; three brothers, Elmer of Amherst, Steven of Leverett and Perry of Hadley; and two sisters, Shirley of Leverett and Marjorie Herbert also of Leverett.

Funeral services will be held Friday at 2 p.m. from the Douglas Funeral Home, Amherst, followed by burial in Wildwood Cemetery, Amherst.

Calling hours are today from 2 to 4 p.m. and 7 to 9 p.m.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Snow: A time to panic or to play?

I have some friends who love snow.

Whenever the skies cloud over, and Amherst gets covered in a blanket of white powder, these friends, who live in a neighboring apartment complex, trudge through snow-covered fields and show up at my door.

They usually don't have that much to say, or even any special reason for coming over. They just love playing in the snow and want me to enjoy it with them.

Scott Hersey

There are times when I join them and times when I don't — when they showed up during the third quarter of the Superbowl was one time when I didn't.

But when I do join them, I'm always treated to a good time.

With just a tray stolen from the Dining Commons, they can have a great time sliding down hills. With one riding, while the other two push, they laugh and smile and seem to forget the everyday cares and pressures of the world.

They have a great time and want everyone to enjoy it with them.

I also have a friend who doesn't like snow.

For him, the first sight of white flakes means instant panic. He refuses to drive, or even walk outside until the skies are blue and the sidewalks are clear. For him, a snowstorm means time inside the house — watching T.V., reading, and talking on the phone.

The only time he will venture outside is when the need for food or drink becomes critical. And even then he will bundle up like he was going on an Arctic trip, run to his car, go to the store and run back.

Other than that, he's perfectly content to wait out the duration of the storm.

Snow affects people in strange ways.

And last weekend was a good example.

There are sun worshipers, those who enjoy a walk in the rain, and even those who like the cold, but no other type of weather inspires such emotions — be it love or hate — as snow.

For some, like my three friends, snow is fun.

For those people a snowstorm means skiing, snowball fights and for a special group of crazy people from Brittany Manor, games of tackle football.

These people wanted to go out and walk around in the blinding blizzard last Friday. You saw them walking in the road at the last possible second before you hit them while attempting to navigate your car through a blizzard.

And they are the people who happily went cross-countryskiing in Saturday's beautiful weather while the rest of us were just digging out.

But there are others, like my other friend, who would just prefer to "wait it out."

And with more snow scheduled in the next few days, I think the snow lovers are going to be a lot happier.

Trident sub makers on campus

To the Editor:

Today, 2/17, Electric Boat-General Dynamics is scheduled to interview people on our campus. James Douglass, a writer and teacher who is presently a member of the Ground Zero Collective (organizers of the campaign to halt construction of the Trident submarine base in Bangor, Washington) was recently arrested for his efforts to stop the first Trident submarine from entering that base. Following, are thoughts of his on what such an interview might mean for some of us.

The following took place at the end of time. (That time is now.) It was carried by no public media, only the consciousness of a person. The interview began and ended in complete silence.

What is Trident?

Trident is the end of the world. What do you mean?

Trident is a nuclear submarine being built now which will be able to destroy 408 cities or areas at one time, each with a blast five times more powerful than the Hiroshima bomb. Trident is 2,040 Hiroshimas. One Trident submarine can destroy any country on earth. A fleet of Trident submarines (EB-GD is contracted to build eleven) can end life on Earth.

I don't understand? A submarine which equals 2,040 Hiroshimas? (How can anyone understand that?)

Begin with a meditation: To understand Trident say the word "Hiroshima." Reflect on its meaning for one second. Say and understand "Hiroshima" again. And again. And again 2,040 times. Assuming your able to understand "Hiroshima" in one second, you'll be able to understand Trident in thirty-four minutes. That's one Trident submarine. To understand the destructive power of the whole Trident fleet, it would take you six and a half hours, devoting one second to each Hiroshima.

Your meditation is impossible. To understand Hiroshima alone would take a lifetime.

You do understand. Hiroshima was the end of our ability to imagine our destructive power, or to measure its consequences. Trident is the end of the world.

How does one live at the end of the world?

By taking a simple step towards change. Stop Trident, stop the world in an end-time, and build a new world.
